NATIONAL HYMN OF THE NETHERLANDS.

(ORIGINAL DUTCH.)

Wien Neerlandsch bloed door d' aadren vloeit
Van vreemde smetten vry,
Wiens hart voor Land en Koning gloeit,
Verhef den zang als wy!
Hy stem met ons vereend van zin,
Met onbeklemde borst,
't God welgevallig feestlied in
Voor Vaderland en Vorst! (Bis.)

De Godheid op haar hemeltroon
Bezongen en vereerd,
Houdt gunstig ook naar onzen toon,
Het heilig oor gekeerd!
Zy geeft het eerst, na 't zalig koor
Dat hooger snaren spant,
Het rond en hartig lied gehoor
Voor Vorst en Vaderland! (Bis.)

Stort uit dan, broedren een van zin,
Dien hoog verhoorden kreet,
Hy telt by God een deugd te min
Die Land en Vorst vergeet!
Hy gloeit voor land en broeder niet
In d'onbewogen borst
Die koel blyft by gebed en lied
Voor Vaderland en Vorst! (Bis.)

Ons klopt het hart, ons zoelt het bloed
By 't hooren van dien toon
Geen ander klinkt ons vol gemoed
Ons kloppend hart zoo schoon!
Hier smelt het eerst het driest belang
Voor allen staat en stand,
Tot één gevoel in d'eigen zang
Voor Vorst en Vaderland! (Bis.)

Bescherm, O God, bewaak den grond
Waarop onze adem gaat,
De plek waar onze wieg op stond,
Waar eens ons graf op staat!
Wy smeeken van Uw vaderhand
Met diepgeroerde borst,
Behoud voor 't dierbaar vaderland,
Voor Vaderland en Vorst! (Bis.)

Bescherm hem, God, bewaar zyn troon,
Op duurzaam recht gebouwd,

NATIONAL HYMN OF THE NETHERLANDS.

(A METRICAL TRANSLATION.)

Let those in whom Dutch blood doth flow
Free from all foreign stain,
Whose hearts for King and Country glow,
Join in the joyful strain!
And unoppressed and free from fear,
With us united sing
The song which God doth love to hear,
For Fatherland and King! (Bis.)

The Deity, enthroned on high,
Whom all mankind revere,
Will listen to our melody
And lend His holy ear.
For He, amid the heavenly throng
—The Angels' saintly band,—
Will surely hear our heartfelt song,
For King and Fatherland! (Bis.)

So then the song which God will hear
With one voice let us sing!
He lacks true worth, who holds not dear
His Country and his King.
Nor King, nor Country, loveth he,
He who can hear us sing
With unmoved heart our melody,
For Country and for King! (Bis.)

Our blood runs warm, our hearts beat high,
When loud our song doth rise;
For us, in this dear melody
A hidden virtue lies.
Those who are great by fortune's whim,
Those poor and suffering,
They are as one before our hymn,
For Fatherland and King! (Bis.)

Protect oh God! this ground that paid The debt of liberty,

THE SEVEN UNITED STATES OF THE NETHERLANDS.

TO HOLLAND AND THE DUTCH NATION.

SALUTATION.

Come, men of Netherlandish blood, Clasp hands, and celebrate with me That race who, first, thrust back the flood, Planted their homes upon the sea, To gardens changed pestif'rous mud, Won Ocean to sodality.

Asylum universal gave
To Persecution's victims wan,
Thinkers profound, inventors brave,
All whom the tyrant frowned upon;
Misfortune, Liberty, the Arts,
They welcomed to their heart of hearts.

The greatest of all exiles, Mind—
Breathed free 'neath their protecting shield—
Whom all earth else conspired to bind,
Till dawn once more its beams revealed,
And moral sentiment, till light
Broke on the long and starless night.

HOLLAND'S GREATNESS.

When Persia's despot's mad ambition
Bridged Hellespont's impetuous stream,
Neptune aroused, and with perdition
Swiftly dissolved his inane dream,
His coursers tossed their crests in sport,
And vanished all the myriads wrought.

Vain fool! the finite madly thought
His earthly fetters to impose
On that dread element which nought
But a supernal Ruler knows—
Its bursting foam long-lived as he
Who dared aspire to chain the Sea.

With mighty glee, war-whooped the Sea, Rolled liquid mountains to the strand, Where now Hollandish industry With teeming harvests clothes the land; Exulting roared the tyrant brine, "I claim the 'Hollow-Land' as mine!"

With hopeful spirit, undismayed,
The Netherlanders' courage rose;
And to the Ocean's Master prayed,
Who humbled had more cruel foes,
Then, cheered with His inspiring aid,
To the great task their shoulder laid.

Little by little, dunes of sand
Dissolved, reformed, fenced in the lea;
Submerged, regained, the hard-won land
Began to flourish 'mid the Sea,
And inch by inch, and foot by foot,
The dykes rose up and firm took root.

Repelled, the Ocean's baffled ire
Summoned the tempest to its side,
And, with his surges all on fire,
Against man's bulwarks rolled its tide
In vain! though breaches crumbled wide,
Triumphant entrance was denied.

What Wisdom planned wrought stalwart hand,
And stronger, higher, rood by rood,
The dykes hedged in th' exulting land—
Defied the waves' most furious mood;
At length, the Ocean's wrath subdued,
A manly race his friendship wooed.

All gallant foes respect the bands

And such respect the Netherlands

Asked from the fierce but gen'rous main.

"No longer foes, sworn allies we,

Henceforth I'll serve thee," quoth the Sea.

While other people ploughed the ground,
Bold Holland's glebe the rolling main,
From pole to pole, the earth around,
Each furrow yielded countless gain;
At home her hive was one vast store,
Gleaned from each clime and every shore.

The dreadful glacial ocean paid
Its tribute to her fearless toil;
Amid the ice the bases laid,
Rose an emporium of oil;
ARCTIC BATAVIA, proudly styled,— Round it Spitzbergen's glaciers piled.

'Neath the equator, that same time,—
When Europe throed, convulsed with war,—
From Java's gorgeous fecund clime
Commerce stupendous trophies bore,
And, in that crowning gem of earth,
To Tropic Amsterdam gave birth.

Coeval with 't—can truth ignore?

First, in the west, the Dutch proclaimed

Free Faith, free Speech—Manhattan's shore

The neighb'ring lands' intol'rance shamed—

Good-will tow'rds men—strange seed—yet thence

Grew th' Empire State's preëminence.

The Indian Archipelagos;
And Araby her gardens were,
Where aromatic odors rose
The pungent fruit matured for her;
Till Asia's riches overflow
Made Holland Europe's entrepôt.

And Scandinavia's giant trees, Cloud-piercing, in her forests grew, To build Dutch merchants' argosies, Which o'er remotest waters flew: And such respect the Netherlands

Asked from the nerce but gen rous main.

Henceforth I'll serve thee," quoth the Sea.

DINNER TENDERED TO MAYOR-ELECT VAN WYCK.

57 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, November 22, 1897.

HON. ROBERT A. VAN WYCK.

Dear Sir:—In the election of yourself as the first Mayor of the Greater City of New York, we, descendants of a Holland ancestry, are proud to feel that recognition has been given to the race of men who founded it and who laid the corner-stone of its present greatness. As fellow members with yourself of the Holland Society, we are gratified that the duty of leading the Greater City in its new adventure has been confided to one whose ancestors were among the first settlers of New Netherland and whose family has remained in honorable distinction from the earliest existence of New Amsterdam.

The members of that Society desire to express their appreciation of your character, and to wish you Godspeed in the difficult task before you, and would be gratified if you would meet them at a dinner to be given at such time as may suit your convenience, when they could personally offer their

To Hon. R. B. Roosevelt, Hon. George M. Van Hoesen, Hon. Warner Van Norden, Dr. D. B. St. John Roosa, Hon. Charles H. Truax, Hon. John W. Vrooman, and Mr. Theodore M. Banta.

My DEAR SIRS:—I am in receipt of your very kind invitation of November 22d, to dine with you, and it goes without saying, that I am deeply grateful for the kindness, as well as for the very warm sentiments which it breathes.

I know that you will believe me when I tell you in all frankness and sincerity, that all my time is absolutely engrossed with matters that require the most serious and earnest attention, and while it would indeed be a great pleasure and satisfaction to meet you all in the manner proposed, yet I am reluctantly constrained to forego that pleasure.

Knowing you all as well as I do, I feel confident that you will accept this letter in the spirit in which it is written, and believe me when I say that this declination is attributable to the pressure of matters that require the most thoughtful and studious attention as to their disposition.

Thanking you once more, believe me to be
Sincerely your friend,

Thirteenth Annual Banquet.

HE Thirteenth Annual Banquet was given in the magnificent Ball-Room of the new Astoria Hotel on the corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street.

Several elegant drawing-rooms were thrown open for the reception of the members and their guests, who assembled in larger numbers than on any previous occasion. Almost five hundred were seated at the eight long tables in the great banqueting room.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT VROOMAN.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

HE Holland Society extends cordial greeting and an old-fashioned Dutch welcome to this distinguished assemblage.

Loyal always to our Country, let us send greeting and good wishes to the President of the United States, and also to the Governor of the Empire State. May we ever join in every good word and in every good effort to uplift official integrity and usefulness, and to upbuild national character and honor.

Loyal always to our City, let us also send greeting and a Godspeed to our valued fellow-member, Robert A. Van Wyck, Mayor of this, the grandest, as it is soon to be the greatest, city of the world. Hollanders of the old time, then gave sturdy and honest men as chief representatives of the new government of New Amsterdam. Hollanders of the new time, now give a sturdy and honest man, an able jurist, an accomplished scholar, an honored citizen as Chief Executive of the new government of New York. ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT VROOMAN.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

IE Holland Society extends cordial greeting and an old-fashioned Dutch welcome to this distinguished assemblage.

Loyal always to our Country, let us send greeting and good wishes to the President of the United States, and also to the Governor of the Empire State. May we ever join in every good word and in every good effort to uplift official integrity and usefulness, and to upbuild national character and honor.

Loyal always to our City, let us also send greeting and a Godspeed to our valued fellow-member. Robert A. Van Wyck, Mayor of this, the grandest as it is soon to be the greatest, city of the world. Hollanders of the old time, then gave sturdy and honest men as chief representatives of the new government of New Amsterdam. Hollanders of the new time, now give a sturdy and honest man, an able jurist, an accomplished scholar, an honored citizen as Chief Executive of the new government of New York. Members of the Holland Society, without regard to political party or preferment, highly esteem Mayor Van Wyck for his interest in, and affection for, this Society, to which, as one of its trustees for five years past, he has rendered unselfish and unceasing service. In this, as in every other undertaking, he has shown that fidelity to duty, sincerity of purpose, and simplicity of manner, characteristic of good Dutch blood.

Loyal always to our friends, we welcome our guests who honor us with their presence this evening. While the Annual Dinner of this society cultivates fraternity and promotes good-fellowship, may we add this night to the fraternity of good-fellowship, the additional bond of friendship.

Loyal always to our homes, although welcomed last, we extend best welcome to the ladies. Remembering with pride and tenderness the home of our ancestors, we have been deeply interested in the life and surroundings of that beautiful and unique character so strongly portrayed in the person of the coming Queen of Holland. As the representative lady of the Kingdom, let us reverently ask Divine Providence to guide her in official station, and to bless her in private life.

According all proper tribute of respect to the Queen of Holland, let us now and always accord equal tribute to the Queen of this Imperial Nation. You ask her name? I answer, every true American woman in this broad land of ours. As the Sovereigns and subjects of the old nations are ever justly jealous of the good name of their Queens, and proud of their achievements, so are we of this new nation, where all are sovereigns, equally jealous of the good name of our Queens. We are proud of their achievements.

May I mention one of our Queens? Although

We are proud of their achievements.

May I mention one of our Queens? Although she lived in humble circumstances, her crown of American womanhood contained a gem richer and more lasting than any ever worn by royalty. Her kind words and loving heart caused a stepson to feel, as he often said in after life, "like a human being." That queenly woman builded a character grander than she knew, and the elevating purpose and ennobling influence of Sally Bush made possible the undying fame and matchless achievements of one of the grandest men God ever gave this world—Abraham Lincoln.

Having assembled with hearty welcome and good cheer to all, we venture the assertion that annual banquets of the Holland Society, as well as of sister societies, are of small purpose indeed, unless we look over and beyond them for a meaning larger and more comprehensive, and an object broader and more useful than can be secured by merely coming together for recreation of the hour. May this Society, mindful of Holland's historic past, made glorious by heroic men, labor, as they labored, to increase that spirit of broadening thought, strengthening character, and elevating ambition, which has ever marked the mighty achievements of all ages!

Catching the enthusiasm and inspiration beginning with such heroic endeavor, continuing with such commendable enterprise coupled with neverending determination, do you wonder that Holland gave a home and a welcome for the oppressed of every clime, and also gave opportunity for broadest freedom to worship God?

But such unceasing labor for humanity and untiring work for God cannot be confined within the limits of any country—they belong to the world.

That queenly woman builded a character grander than she knew, and the elevating purpose and ennobling influence of Sally Bush made possible the undying fame and matchless achievements of one of the grandest men God ever gave this world—Abraham Lincoln.

Having assembled with hearty welcome and good cheer to all, we venture the assertion that annual banquets of the Holland Society, as well as of sister societies, are of small purpose indeed, unless we look over and beyond them for a meaning larger and more comprehensive, and an object broader and more useful than can be secured by merely coming together for recreation of the hour. May this Society, mindful of Holland's historic past, made glorious by heroic men, labor, as they labored, to increase that spirit, of broadening thought, strengthening character, and elevating ambition, which has ever marked the mighty achievements

Catching the enthusiasm and inspiration beginning with such heroic endeavor, continuing with such commendable enterprise coupled with neverending determination, do you wonder that Holland gave a home and a welcome for the oppressed of every clime, and also gave opportunity for broadest freedom to worship God?

But such unceasing labor for humanity and untiring work for God cannot be confined within the limits of any country—they belong to the world. And so it was that a mere handful of brave men leaving Holland, landing on Plymouth Rock, with those other pioneers settling New Netherland, laid the foundation of our civil and religious liberty. The corner-stone was placed by the patriots of the American Revolution. The building was completed by the labors of loyalty, and dedicated to the service of God and a free people. It stands to-day the most superb model of civil and religious architecture the world has ever seen.

The record of the past, therefore, proves that although Holland is small in territory and in population, yet, measured by manhood, no race ever developed grander characters; measured by bravery, no nation ever produced more courageous protectors; measured by discovery, no land ever gave birth to men more progressive or more desirous of civilizing every habitable part of the earth; measured by success in commerce and finance, no business centre of the globe ever achieved better reputation or accomplished better results; measured by love of country and love to God, no people, since the days of Holy Writ, have ever been better, broader, truer, nobler.

My fellow-members and friends, in this electric age we hear much about the new times, new methods, the new countries. We hear little about the old times, old methods, the old countries. These are well nigh forgotten. But thank God, this Society, and kindred societies, still keep sacred, and will forever keep sacred, the old times, out of which were born the new. Even an electric age will honor any society living to perpetuate the memory that lingers around the old countries, whose liberty-loving sons obtained for us this new and glorious heritage; around the old home, the old father and the old mother, whose prayers have ever given inspiration to new manhood and new devotion to duty. Appreciating that duty and our responsibility, born of love of country and home, of loyalty to ancestor and society, let us here and now pledge to both the old and the new, never forgetting the one in the favoring of the other. May we forever unite them in fraternity between the aristocracy of blood and the aristocracy of merit; in fellowship, where we may meet as equals, but always with the equality that elevates; and in friendship, binding heart to heart with love to God and love to man!

Thus united, in the bonds of one great Society, strengthened by the bonds of universal brother-hood, and educated in the school of limitless opportunity, may we, fearless and faithful, fight the battle of life until it is ended, the good-night spoken; and then, God grant we may all awaken to bid each other good-morning in that better country where a passport of lineage is never demanded!

The President called upon Dr. Roosa, Chairman of the Dinner Committee, to read a letter received from Mayor Van Wyck, a member and trustee of the Society, who thereupon read the following:

ADDRESS OF HON. ROBERT B. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. President:

ENTLEMEN, and, I am glad to add, ladies, (when I look around this hall and see what a magnificent show we have of the handsomer and better portion of creation) I have been requested to do and say something not on the regular programme of the exercises of the evening, and to preface my remarks with references to certain events in the history of the city which are of the most striking importance. The earlier of these are involved in a little obscurity and uncertainty, not, however, quite so much as would seem to be the case if we judge by a statement lately imputed by the press to a prominent member of this Society, who is accused of saying that the first Mayor of New Amsterdam was Peter Stuyvesant!

The first and most important of these historic events are naturally the discovery and settlement of the country and city. It has generally been accepted as fact that Hendrick Hudson sailed into the Hudson River on September 2, 1609, in the Dutch vessel the Half Moon, and that he was in the employ of the Dutch West India Company.

ADDRESS OF HON. ROBERT B. ROOSEVELT.

The first and most important of these historic events are naturally the discovery and settlement of the country and city. It has generally been accepted as fact that Hendrick Hudson sailed into the Hudson River on September 2, 1609, in the Dutch vessel the Half Moon, and that he was in the employ of the Dutch West India Company.

So far so good, but now comes one of those people who are always finding flaws in accepted history and general belief, and asserts that the Dutch West India Company was not chartered till June 3, 1621. So that here we strike the first rock, so to speak, and when it is explained that he may have been in the employ of the United Netherlands Trading Company, doubt is thrown upon the whole story by the further statement that the Indians who visited his ship brought him presents of tobacco. Now as Dutchmen have been in the habit of smoking tobacco since "a time beyond which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," and the Indians of begging it, there is a reversal of the eternal fitness of things which befogs the entire story as in a cloud of smoke. And then steps in the iconoclast once more, and boldly asserts not only that the whole country had been discovered four hundred years previously, but that Hendrick Hudson had at the very time of his voyage, in his capacious breeches pockets, a detailed map of the harbor, the islands, the river, and all its affluents!

So, again, as to the time and manner of settlement, our ancestors seem to have been entirely satisfied with the striking and unanswerable fact that they got here somehow, but when and how and under what circumstances are likely never to be revealed. It is undeniable that Captain Block was driven ashore by the burning of his ship in 1613; that he then proceeded to build a yacht which he called the Onrust, or Restless, and to cruise around Long Island; and as most people don't live ashore and build yachts till they have a sort of habitation, that might be taken as the date of first settlement, and as Christiaensen also came over in the Fortune about the same time, and erected buildings of some kind, the argument in favor of this period is strengthened. But the later authorities claim that no permanent settlement was made-and much probably depends on the exact interpretation of that word settlement—until Cornelis Jacobsen May arrived with the ship New Netherland. However, the descendants of the adventurers who came over with any of these explorers may fairly consider themselves as the "first families" of New Netherland. It is surprising how much confusion can be got up about so simple a matter as the discovery of a new continent. Indeed, if any "doubting Thomas" insists upon taking the extreme position that the country was never discovered at all, and demanding absolute proof to the contrary, I am afraid we shall have to let the country go. We placid Hollanders are so ready to accept conditions without worrying about theories.

There is almost equal difficulty as to the original name once given to the entire island, and which we are about to perpetuate in the "Borough of Manhattan." We were brought up to think that this was originally the name of the tribe of Indians which lived here, but it is now alleged that there was no such tribe, the inhabitants going by the far more impressive, if less euphonious, title of Reckgawawancs. So that we ought hereafter to live, not in the Borough of Manhattan, but in that of the Reckgawawancs, while the word Manhattan only signifies great, sweet, nice—terms however so admirably descriptive of our city as we have always known it, especially under former street sweeping commissioners, that it applies itself spontaneously to our metropolis.

The next most important event in its history is its erection into a municipality, and here it must be further admitted that this grand old Dutch city was hardly to be called a Dutch city at all. had a mayor; Dutch cities in those days did not luxuriate in mayors, but they all had "Schouts." When Governor Stuyvesant, on Feb. 2, 1653, created it a municipality he deprived it of this primal right and refused to allow it to elect its own Schout. It is true he loaned it his own Schout, for a Schout seems to have been a good thing to have in a family, but how could a Dutch city respect itself or assert its individuality, unless it elected its own Schout. This it even tried to do in the year 1654, but as its choice happened to fall upon a gentleman who had already been scalped by the Indians, it seemed to get discouraged and gave up the attempt.

Our Dutch ancestors were a very peaceable and long-suffering race. They did not ask what they were here for, nor how they got here, but were contented to know that they were here, and to make the best of it. As a city they made honest effort to get control of their own affairs and to behave as a Dutch city ought to behave, but when they could not, they went along as best they were able.

But leaving all this ancient history more or less in the dark, we soon get at the substantial and equally unpleasant fact that the entire island was captured Sept. 7, 1664, by the English, who selected a time of profound peace as the most propitious for the attack, with that intelligence and ingenuousness which has invariably characterized the conduct of Great Britain in acquiring the landed property of other nations. Following that conquest came the appointment of Richard Nicolls as governor under the Duke of York, by a king who had no right except that of might, which, however, has always gone a long way in public affairs; the creation of a city by the proclamation of Governor Nicolls on June 12, 1665; the christening of the new city as New York in memory of the usurping possessor, and the appointment by the Governor of an out and out Yankee from Plymouth, Massachusetts, one Thomas Willet, as mayor—one of those inflictions coming from the Governor that have been followed by so many more from his successors at Albany. The city did not remain very long in the hands of the British, only about nine years, and it must be admitted that it gained much in dignity, wealth, and importance during this period. It was recaptured by the Dutch on July 30, 1673, when it was rechristened from both New Amsterdam and New York into New Orange in honor of the Prince of Orange, who was then the head of the States Gen-The prefix New clung to it through all its vicissitudes, so that while it could hardly be designated as "always ancient," it was "ever New." It only remained under the pretty and pleasant designation of Orange for about a year, as the whole of New Netherland had been ceded to England by the Dutch under the treaty of Westminster. Governor Colve, the last of the Dutch governors surrendered the country and the city, on Feb. 8, 1674, to the English, and thereafter the Hollander and the Holland customs, usages, and language gradually disappeared from this continent, except so far as they modified and improved inferior methods of thought, laws, and customs. New York was restored to our city, the charter was renewed, and the first native-born mayor, a good Dutchman, Stephanus Van Cortlandt, was elected in 1677, just two hundred and twenty years previous to our last election, when something of the same kind happened.

And now, on the first day of January, 1898, we have the last of the great changes in our municipal history, the expansion of the city into the Greater New York by the inclusion of surrounding territory which has long been part of it in a business sense; the restoration of the old name to the city proper of the "great, sweet, nice" Borough of Manhattan and the election of another native-born Dutchman as mayor.

With these preliminary remarks, I come to the main purpose of my address. I arise to propose the health of the first Dutch mayor of the second greatest city of the world, and to ask you all to join me in wishing him success in the difficult task he has before him, and to pledge him our hearty support in all efforts to give his fellow-citizens the best government they have ever known. Here is to the health and happiness of our honored fellow-member, Mayor Robert A. Van Wyck.

This invitation was heartily accepted by the entire company, who rose as one man, and waving glasses and handkerchiefs, drank his health with three rousing cheers amid the greatest possible enthusiasm.

to sneak home, and his wife said to him: "John W., you are very late." John W. said: "No; it is only one o'clock." She said: "I know better; it is later than that." John W. said: "I know better, because I heard it strike 'one' three times!" So we are willing to wait until the clock strikes "one" three times, in order to listen to the speeches and have a royal good time here to-night.

The first toast—" Holland, Home of our Fathers: the Land in which Free Institutions, as Modern Nations Enjoy Them, First Saw the Light; We Salute Her with Filial Reverence"—will be responded to by a gentleman who needs no introduction to the Holland Society and its friends. Judging by the smiles of some of the young men present, and their glances toward the boxes, there must be individuals here not sisters—how runs that line? "There's another not a sister," etc. While we have present to-night many good sisters, we have also with us a good brother. Some may wish to see the sister, others may wish to see the brother. The brother in question is a mighty good fellow to see and know about this time, and I have the pleasure of presenting the real live brother of the real live Mayor-Justice Augustus Van Wyck.

They tend to develop the sentiment of patriotism and to encourage the study of the history of our fathers' fatherland,—an important adjunct in the education of the citizen in the duty that he owes to government and to society.

Some days after the capture of Ticonderoga by the Americans, a pastor of a Boston church, with some apparent knowledge of military affairs, was engaged at length and in minute detail in thanking the Maker for his perfect scheme and execution of the plan of that engagement. There sat a stranger in that congregation—the commander at that capture. Unable longer to stand the nervous strain, he rose and said: "Mr. Parson, would you have any objection to mentioning that Ethan Allen was present at that engagement?" When I listen (as I do frequently) to the speeches of the rostrum orators of this great city, and read the books of the local historians of the present time, I am tempted at times to ask them why in the call of the roll of the sisterhood of nations Holland is so often omitted. Solomon is recognized by all as a wise and broadminded man—somewhat of a sport, quite as much of a gallant; but it is recorded in his great song that he cried in agony, "Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love." The sentiment of that verse marks a well-defined contrast between the civilization of that day and of this-of polygamy and monogamy. How different will be the cry of the wise man in this audience when he returns to his devoted wife to-night! It will be, "Stay me with love, comfort me with words of forgiveness, for I am sick of the flagon and the pomegranate."

When my distinguished and intimate friend, Dr. Roosa of this Society, invited me to speak here tonight I told him that it would not do, that I had talked so much to you, gentlemen, that you were fatigued with my voice as well as my ideas, and I only consented when he frankly told me that those whom he expected to respond to this toast had disappointed him, and then in his sympathy he said: "Van Wyck, make it red hot, and give the boys some good advice." This occasion, graced by the presence of ladies, makes us conservative in speech, and is no place for that hot criticism that involves the spirit of malice to all, and good-will to noneand then I defy any man on the face of the earth to raise the temperature of a Dutch feast. Why, my friends, the native Floridian would be appalled if he were here to-night. Why, my friends, the native Floridian would be appalled if he were here to-night. You remember that they say down there that after the chilling effect of the Northern visitors passes away it becomes so hot that they are compelled to feed the hens upon cracked ice to prevent them from laying hard-boiled eggs! What chance would the hen from the land of flowers have here to-night? And then, Dr. Roosa, I cannot undertake to advise the boys, for many reasons. In the first place, if the Georgia measurement of manhood is to be adopted, the youngest here is old enough to be a great-grandfather. I remember a few months ago reading in the newspapers that the fourteen-year-old son of the governor of that State had run away with the thirteen-year-old daughter of one of the neighbors. The governor corralled the young couple in Chattanooga and proceeded there with his other son, a gentleman of eleven years, to witness the marriage ceremony. And the mother in saying good-bye to this younger son, said: "My dear young man, promise your mother that you will not get married on this trip." On the other hand, if the measurement of manhood that prevails in New Hampshire is to be adopted, truly you are all boys according to that standard. A minister told me that in riding along one of the country roads of that State he saw a person seventy-one years old crying for dear life. The minister said to him, "My friend, what is your sorrow?" The man said in response, "My father licked me." "Where is your father?" he was asked. "Over there, ploughing the rocks of the Granite State." The minister repaired to the father and said: "Sir, what right have you to lick a man of seventy-one, even though he be your child?" "Why, sir, none of that foolishness with me," the farmer said; "Mr. Minister, I will lick youngest here is old enough to be a great-grandto that standard. A minister told me that in riding any boy that strikes his grandfather." So according to that measurement you are all boys, and if you be boys, I have no advice of a fresh character to give you here to-night, for I have exhausted that article in my talks to you heretofore, and even the memory of what I told you has been displaced by the flagon and the pomegranate here to-night. Then, even if you are boys and I had good advice to give you-you need none. You recollect the Sunday-school scholar who was asked by his teacher. "Have you been baptized?" He said, "I am not certain, but I am certain I have been vaccinated." I know not whether you have been baptized in the waters of wisdom, but I know that you have been inoculated thoroughly with the noble traditions of your fatherland and her great work and influence in the development of the world. So if you be boys and I had advice to give you and you needed it, yet I would hesitate in this presence to undertake that, for fear that I might be rebuked, as a poetphilosopher was who had been musing for a long time over the advantages and disadvantages of living, and finally concluding the latter were in the majority wrote a sonnet entitled "Why do I Live?" and mailed it to one of the magazines of this city and signed it "John W." It did not appear in the columns of the magazine, and the Dutch editor of that journal returned it with this note: "John W.-Within is enclosed your sonnet entitled 'Why do I Live?' with answer: Because you mailed it and did not deliver it in person."

These reunions, at which time, in blocks of five decades or half-centuries, is shied in the air, remind us that we are growing older each day and some nights, and suggest the golden wedding, for a retrospect of Dutch traditions, the refrain of auld lang syne, is as golden as the fleece which Jason brought back to Greece, twenty centuries before a protective tariff was ever laid upon wool.

The ocean spirit of patriotism in which all are debauching to-night, the inflaming enthusiasm evoked by the sweet memories of one's country's heroic age, and the sentiment of pride and boastfulness in the toast assigned, so at war with the race it refers to, will, I fear, carry me beyond the limits of that modesty and self-restraint which have ever been so becoming to that race (Hollanders) from whose loins we have sprung, a race which preferred that a Yankee Motley, and a Scotch New Yorker, Douglas Campbell, should justify their faith in the high reputation of their sires-renown won in wars waged for liberty of thought, belief, and action; a race that preferred that such impartial witnesses should testify and satisfy unbiassed mankind by a fair preponderance of evidence that Washington, the matchless, was America's William the Silent, Patrick Henry her Brederode, Paul Jones her Tromp, Jefferson her Maurice, and Hamilton her Barneveldt; that Holland waged no wars for conquest, but for eighty years waged war for religious and civil liberty; that she built no walls except against the angry sea; that the Dutch latchstring always hung on the outside to the exile and stranger from all lands, for in her towns all languages were spoken and exiles found from France, Germany, and England; that the crude Scrooby farmers lived there and enjoyed her institutions for twelve years and were prepared for their future enterprise before starting on their pilgrimage in the Mayflower to Plymouth Rock; that William Penn, spect of Dutch traditions, the refrain of auld lang syne, is as golden as the fleece which Jason brought back to Greece, twenty centuries before a protective tariff was ever laid upon wool.

Some two and a half centuries ago, I learn I was scattered in fragments throughout Europe, in Holland, France, Germany, England, Ireland, Scotland, about which time the segments of my circle commenced their voyages to America. How they ever became unified, must be left to the mysterious chemistry of man-making which followed the primary experiment of the creation of Adam. Such unravelling of man's lineage in all ages and countries reveals that man, like all languages, is a "composite" and this thought reminds us that the American race is a composite of all European races in which the excellencies of all are commingled in sweet harmony. This new race with the Dutch impress, sumptuously feasting for two and a half centuries upon the luscious fruit of the tree of toleration as no people ever before did, has cultivated the sentiment of manly affection, incident to the brotherhood of man, the natural and logical sequence of the fatherhood of God, to such an intense degree that we have an indissoluble union of indestructible States, in which reigns supreme the spirit of fraternity, a people so noble that they can and do count the gallantry of North and South as joint assets in the estate of their common fame.

At the treaty of Dancing Rabbit between the United States and Choctaw Indians, the government commissioners, distinguished men, gave a banquet pending negotiations, at which there was after-dinner speaking. The leading commissioner spoke eloquently of the greatness and goodness of his government and truthfully traced his own lineage to one of the trusted companions of William the Conqueror on his invasion of England.

At last the Chief of the Choctaws was induced to speak. He rose six feet six inches in height, with that dignity of mien so common to that savage race; he related his love for and the wrongs and bravery of his people, and the merits of his people in war and in peace. When he came to his lineage, he proclaimed with the apparent authority and eloquence of Deity: "Push Mattahaw, Chief of the Chocktaws, was never dandled upon the knee of woman; a great storm arose and the lightning tore asunder a great, tall pine and out stepped Push Mattahaw, a full-grown soldier with rifle upon his shoulder."

When the Creator issued his grand fiat (Genesis, Chap. i, v. 9), "Let the dry land appear," Holland was the last portion to respond to the mandate, and not then till the Dutchman's helping hand was lent to his God. The heart of man was never more deeply touched than mine was this evening when your distinguished chairman and that noble old Roman, Robert B. Roosevelt, expressed the esteem, the congratulation, the confidence of the Knickerbockers, kindred in blood, and of their promise of help and support to the Mayor of this the grandest municipality on the face of the globe; one for whom I entertain as warm affection as was ever felt by brother for brother; and if the departed could only communicate with you here to-day, the spirit of his grand old Dutch father, and the spirit of his warm, noblehearted Southern mother, would send their thanks to you, one and all, and be willing messengers of the blessings of Him on high upon his head and your heads.

ADDRESS OF MR. GORDON.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Holland Society, Ladies and Gentlemen:

T is no mere sense of ordinary gratitude that prompts me to say that in full measure I appreciate the compliment conveyed in the invitation to be one of the speakers at the annual banquet of this Society. These eminent and eloquent men who sit around me, this brilliant and beautiful scene, these boxes filled with loveliness and virtue and beauty, the golden standard of wit and eloquence that has been established for occasions such as this,—all these environments combine to press upon me a sense of my own unworthiness for the distinguished honor that you have paid me, and a feeling of apprehension as I approach the task which your too generous kindness has committed to my charge.

Let me at the outset, Mr. Chairman, make grateful acknowledgment of the fact, that outside of the circle of descendants of the people who founded this historic city, the only names that I see upon your printed list of speakers are sons of the old commonwealth from which I come. These eminent and eloquent men who sit around me, this brilliant and beautiful scene, these boxes filled with loveliness and virtue and beauty the golden standard of wit and eloquence that has been established for occasions such as this,—all these environments combine to press upon me a sense of my own unworthiness for the distinguished honor that you have paid me, and a feeling of apprehension as I approach the task which your too generous kindness has committed to my charge.

Let me at the outset, Mr. Chairman, make grateful acknowledgment of the fact, that outside of the circle of descendants of the people who founded this historic city, the only names that I see upon your printed list of speakers are sons of the old commonwealth from which I come. Now, Mr. Wise and myself have some right to be present here to-night, irrespective of the courteous invitation to which directly we owe our presence; because it is stated in Professor John Fiske's recent book, Old Virginia and her Neighbors, that in the early days of America, that colony having established the first successful colony in the New World, felt that it had a claim upon all the middle zone; and we may still read in books of that period of "The Town of New Amsterdam on the Island of Manhattan in Virginia." On the other ties of memory and patriotic affection that bind this Society to that State, it is not necessary for me to You know Virginia, and what it was, and what it is. It has been described as "a commonwealth older than the union of the States. It was the first abode of English freedom in the western world. It was the scene of the earliest organized legislative resistance to the encroachments of the mother country. It was the birthplace of the immortal leader of our revolutionary armies and of many of the architects of the Federal Constitution. It was the central seat of that doctrine of State sovereignty sanctioned by the great names of Jefferson and Madison. It was a land rich in every gift of the earth and sky; richer still in its race of men, wise, brave, frugal, pious, loving honor but fearing And let me say to-night, gentlemen, it is the home to-day of a race who revere the Constitution which their fathers did so much to fashion and defend, and who, loving and loyal to the theory which upholds the independence and the rights of the American citizen before the law, and the independence and the sovereignty of American commonwealths under the Constitution, believe with you that that theory kept inviolate, the wit or wisdom of man never has, and never will, fashion or devise a government freer, broader, or more catholic than this our fathers made.

And so, Mr. Chairman, it is not altogether inappropriate that one sprung from the strain of blood that settled Jamestown should stand amid those sprung from the strain that settled New Amsterdam, and give thanks that, from the combined efforts of our common sires, from the seed of freedom sown upon this virgin and untrammelled soil by their immortal hands has sprung the freest and the mightiest empire of this earth, beside whose sea-gates stands the second city of all the world. It is of that city,—it is of your home and of mine,—that I am called to speak to-night. Long ago, Mr. Burke, in his great work on the French Revolution, enunciated this pregnant truth. He said: "To be attached to the subdivision, to love the little platoon we belong to in society, is the first principle (the germ, as it were) of public affection. It is the first step in the series by which we proceed towards a love for our country and for mankind." It is with that theory firmly fixed in my heart, for this city, that I shall respond to the toast of the "Greater New York,"-pride in her past, love for her present, and hope for her future. And in that spirit, then, let me speak to you, not of her palaces of granite and of marble, not of her business edifices towering to the sky, not of her thronging streets and avenues, not of her multitudinous churches pointing heavenward, not of her marts of commerce and of trade, not of her mighty rivers sweeping to the sea, not of her magnificent and matchless harbor, crowded with the greyhounds of commerce, bringing home from a hundred seas the that settled Jamestown should stand amid those efforts of our common sires, from the seed of heart, for this city, that I shall respond to the toast sweeping to the sea, not of her magnificent and spoils of a hundred climes—but rather let me speak a few words of what seems to me some duties and responsibilities which rest upon us as citizens of the first and foremost city of our Republic, inheritors of its splendor, and participators in its glory. We are entering, my friends, upon a new experiment in municipal government upon American soil, closing the nineteenth century with that experiment. The right administration of the affairs of more than three million people compacted in a small area under one government; the right solution of a thousand complex problems affecting their health, their happiness, and their interests; the assimilation of all this vast and cosmopolitan population; the launching of this great, consolidated city upon a career in which all the rights of all its citizens and all its sections shall be equally protected,—these, my friends, are tasks than which few more difficult have ever been committed to human hands. How, and in what spirit, shall we go to meet these besetting problems? It is the firm conviction of my heart that as much upon the individual attitude of the private citizen as upon those charged with the administration of public affairs will depend the right solution of all these great problems that are before us, and to me it seems that the first answer to that question is that we should approach them in a spirit of encouragement and support to the men to whose charge our municipal government is committed. I do not mean in any mere party or partisan sense, but in a spirit of toleration, and kindly toleration, for honest mistakes, and in a spirit of broad and outspoken approval of honest efforts. There will be mistakes. Never, in this fortunate country, or elsewhere, save in the land of The right administration of the affairs of more than happiness, and their interests; the assimilation of administration of public affairs will depend the miracle and romance, never, on any trodden path of human endeavor, has perfection been reached in human government; but so long as it is apparent that there is an honest effort to administer the affairs of Greater New York for the public good, so long as there is an apparent and earnest endeavor upon the part of our officials to solve these great questions of finance, of taxation, of municipal improvement, and of police regulation, not for the benefit of any political party, but for all the people, so long does every broad-minded and patriotic man in this metropolis owe moral support to the men charged with the administration of the municipal government.

I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who believe 'that party government, whether municipal, State, or national, is one of the concomitants of our free institutions, and the surest means by which honest, responsible government can be attained. my life I have despised that spirit of narrow, carping, and intolerant criticism which refuses to see either individual integrity or public virtue in those who hold opposing political principles to my own. It is against this spirit of narrow political bigotry; it is against this idea that all men who owe their position not to your party stand ready to filch from the public treasury and to prostitute the public service; it is against that spirit, my friends, that every patriotic and thoughtful and sincere man in this great city should protest with all his soul. Well to be Democrats, well to be Republicans, but better still to be Americans. Better still to believe that our public officers, whether agreeing with us in political faith or not, are battling with us for the protection of our Republic and the happiness of our homes, and that in

I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who believe that party government, whether municipal, Stare, or national, is one of the concomitants of our free institutions, and the surest means by which honest, responsible government can be attained. But all my life I have despised that spirit of narrow, carping, and intolerant criticism which refuses to see either individual integrity or public virtue in those who hold opposing political principles to my own. It is against this spirit of narrow political bigotry; it is against this idea that all men who owe their position not to your party stand ready to filch from the public treasury and to prostitute the public service; it is against that spirit, my friends, that every patriotic and thoughtful and sincere man in this great city should protest with all his soul. whatever light God gives men to see their political duty, so long as the fight may be for the honor of this union and the prosperity of this city, they fight with the sword of righteousness, and the banner over them is truth.

Now, Mr. President, another thing that it seems to me is incumbent upon the citizens of Greater New York is greater and broader tolerance for the opinions, and kindlier and closer friendship for the men, our fellow-citizens, who are not inhabitants of this great city. The farmer toiling amid the golden wheat-fields of Kansas and Nebraska, or under the burning suns in the rice-plantations of Carolina; the miner who is wresting from the womb of earth the iron of Pennsylvania and the coal of West Virginia and the gold of California; the brakeman and the engineer who guide those tremendous vehicles by which, in this wondrous age of ours, the intellect of man annihilates space and time and pours into the warehouses and counting-rooms of this metropolis the treasures,—we should remember, my friends, always, in a spirit of kindly and American brotherhood, what these men and their fathers have done, what these men and their sons and their son's sons will do toward the upbuilding of this imperial city in which we live. Whatever their prejudices, whatever their passions, they look toward New York and they are proud of New York as the metropolis of their country; and as they are proud of her, let her be proud of them. Let her open her gates towards them and go forth and meet them in honest and sincere welcome, seeing in their patient eyes, not the enmity of sectionalism and of passion, but the faith and the friendship of our common destiny, and feeling in their labor-hardened hands the throb whatever light God gives men to see their political duty, so long as the fight may be for the honor of this union and the prosperity of this city, they fight with the sword of righteousness, and the banner over them is truth.

Now, Mr. President, another thing that it seems great city. The farmer tolling amid the golden fathers have done, what these men and their sons and faith and the friendship of our common destiny, of that Americanism which has helped to make this city one of the modern wonders of the world.

One more thought, Mr. President and gentlemen, and I am done. It seems to me that Greater New York needs to remember that, amid all her prosperity and all her splendor, here in this favored and fortunate land, where war comes seldom and all the natural advantages of earth are found, that even here, almost in touch of these golden wines and in sound of this mellow music, there are dark places where the sunlight never enters and where hope never comes; where day follows day in never-changing toil, and where life leads only to the prison, or the almshouse, or the grave. Now, my friends, not for one moment do I under-estimate the splendid prodigality of the charity of this city, nor the self-abnegation of thousands of her citizens, who are spending their lives to bridge over the gulf between capital and labor, to uplift the suffering and the weak, to carry sunlight and work and happiness into hunger-smitten homes; but I simply refer to the subject to remind you citizens of this great city that, with all her splendor and with all her charity, if New York is to work out her true destiny, there is, in this regard, still better and braver and nobler work to do. And so, Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that it seems to me I have touched upon three of the great civic duties which especially appeal to the thoughtful and the patriotic citizens of this metropolis: Tolerant support of our officials, closer sympathy with our fellow-Americans, and broader charity for our suffering poor. I believe if we shall stand to this duty in steadfastness and faith, that language never yet has been framed which shall describe the heights of splendor and happiness and glory to almost in touch of these golden wines and in sound of where day follows day in never-changing toil, and which this miraculous city shall yet attain; that there are men around this board to-night who shall live long enough to see her not the second, but the first and foremost city, the metropolis of all this world, and that those who stand nearest to the portals of the grave may even now with confidence salute her in the poet's inspired strain:

Mr. President:

ADIES—to whom now, as always, I look up for inspiration—and gentlemen of the Holland Society, when one has been rocked in a Dutch cradle, and baptized with a Dutch name and caressed with a Dutch slipper, and nursed on Dutch history, and fed on Dutch theology, he is more than dopen to accept an invitation from the Holland Society. It is now four years since I had the pleaure of speaking my mind freely about the Dutch, and in the meantime so much mind-or is it only speech—has accumulated that the present opportunity comes very much like a merciful interan enemy as position of Providence on my behalf. During these years my residence has been changed, for whereas I used to live in Albany now I live in Schenectady, which is like moving from The Hague to Leyden, or in other words, going a little farther into the heart of Dutchdom, for nowhere else is Dutch spelled with a larger D than in the city of my residence to-day, with Lisha's Kill on one side, and Rotterdam on another, and Amsterdam on the third, and a real dyke on the fourth, to say nothing of the canal.

SPEECH OF PRESIDENT RAYMOND.

Mr. President.

DIES—to whom now, as always, I look up for inspiration—and gentlemen of the Holland Society, when one has been rocked in a Dutch craand caressed with a Dutch slipper, and nursed on Dutch history, and fed on Dutch theology, he is open to accept an invitation from the Holland Society. It is now four years since I had the pleaure of speaking my mind freely about the Dutch, and in the meantime so much mind—or is it only speech—has accumulated that the present opportunity comes very much like a merciful interposition of Providence on my behalf. During these years my residence has been changed, for whereas I used to live in Albany now I live in Schenectady, which is like moving from The Hague to Leyden, or in other words, going a little farther into the heart of Dutchdom, for nowhere else is my residence to-day, with Lisha's Kill on one side, and Rotterdam on another, and Amsterdam on the third, and a real dyke on the fourth, to say nothing of the canal.

You do not remember that speech of mine four years ago for you did not hear it. That was not my fault, however, but your misfortune of course. You did not hear it because you were not here. You were asleep in your own beds, of course, where Dutchmen always go when they are sleepy, which is perhaps the principal reason why they are not caught napping in business hours. Unfortunately, however, that speech was printed in full, or I might repeat it now. One learns from such little experiences what not to do the next time. But if you do not remember the speech, I do-at least the subject—which was "The Dutch as Neighbors," and it has seemed wise to get as far as possible from that subject to-night lest I might be tempted to plagiarize, and so I propose to talk for a moment only about "The Dutch as Enemies." Now, I do not like the first suggestion of this subject any more than do you. For to think of a man as an enemy is to think ill of him, and to intimate that the Dutchman was not and is not perfect is to intimate something which no one here will believe, and which no one certainly came to hear. But as a matter of fact, gentlemen, no one can be perfect without being an enemy any more than he can be perfect without being a friend. The two things are complementary; the one is the reverse side of the other. Now everything in this universe, except a shadow, has two sides—unless, perhaps, it may be a political machine whose one-sidedness is so proverbial as to suggest that it also is a thing wholly of darkness caused by someone standing in the way of the light. The Dutchman, however, is not a shadow of anything or of anybody. You can walk around him, and when you do that you find that he has You were asleep in your own beds, of course, I might repeat it now. One learns from such little fact, gentlemen, no one can be perfect without being of anything or of anybody. You can walk around not only a kindly face and a warm hand, but something called backbone, and it is that of which I am to speak to-night, for it suggests about all that I mean by the Dutchman as an enemy.

Some people are enemies, or become enemies, because of their spleen; others because of their total depravity; and others still because they persist in standing upright when someone wants them to lie down and be stepped on. Now, that is the meaning of backbone, in this world of human strife. and if, from time to time, it has made an enemy of the peace-loving Dutchman, it has been the kind of enmity that has gathered to itself not a little gratitude, for after all it is the kind of enmity that has made this world more tolerable as a place of temporary abode. If no one opposes tyrants and thieves and heretics and franchise grabbers, city lots fall rapidly in price. It is the Dutchman who keeps up the real-estate market. Now, when I have suggested that it is because of his opposition that he is regarded as an enemy, I have come to the heart of all that I propose to say to-night. a matter of fact, the Dutchman has never been very aggressive. He may not be enterprising, but his powers of resistance are superb, and as this world wags it is often better to hold fast than it is to be fast. Now, if the Dutchman has not been aggressive, he has certainly been steadfast. He has never become an enemy willingly, but always under compulsion; willing to let other people alone if they will let him alone, and if they will not do that, then he makes them do it. Why, those dykes tell the whole story. The Dutchmen did not want the sea, -only the earth. But when the sea wanted him he took up arms against it. It was so with those Roman lenot only a kindly face and a warm hand, but something called backbone, and it is that of which I am to speak to-night, for it suggests about all that I mean by the Dutchman as an enemy.

the peace-loving Dutchman, it has been the kind of a matter of fact, the Dutchman has never been very aggressive. He may not be enterprising, but his gions. The Dutchman had no quarrel with Rome until Rome wanted to extend its empire that way, and to acquire him and grow fat from his tribute money. But the Dutchman had no need of an empire up his way, and so kept his tribute money, and sent the eagles home hungry. If Spain had not wanted to whip the Dutchman, the Dutchman would not have whipped Spain. If England had not wanted a brush with the Dutch, that broom would never have been nailed to Tromp's masthead. If Jameson had not tried to raid the Dutchman, the Dutchman would not have corralled Jameson. From first to last his battles have been on the defensive. He has always been ambitious to be a good friend with the latch-string always on the outside, and has only become an enemy when somebody has tried to get into his house through the window. That kind of enmity hurts no one who does not deserve to be hurt. As this world goes, it is a great thing to say of a man that he never gets down his gun until he sees another gun pointed his way, but it is a greater thing to say that when he does see that other gun he does not get under the bed, and that is what can be said of the Dutchman more than of any other man in the world. He will not run into a fight; he will not run away from a fight-in fact he has no reputation whatever as a runner in any direction. But he can take a stand, and when the smoke has cleared away there he is, still standing. He will not vote himself an enemy, but if against his will he is voted an enemy, he accepts the election, and discharges the duties of his office with painstaking vigilance and care. Now, no one does that, and ever gets re-elected, no matter what the office. Such is the world. And so the had not wanted a brush with the Dutch, that on the defensive. He has always been ambitious to bed, and that is what can be said of the Dutchman Dutchman has never been voted an enemy twice by the same people. One term of his vigorous administration of hostile forces is quite enough, and inasmuch as he does not care for the office personally, and takes it only from a sense of duty, he never seeks a re-election. He is always ready to step down and out, and resume his old occupation of being a good neighbor and a peace-loving citizen. That is perhaps his greatest virtue, and it all grows out of the fact that his spirit of antagonism is located in his backbone, leaving his heart free. He does not love strife and he does not hate the man with whom he fights, and so, in all his battles, he has never been vindictive, cruel, merciless. When he has had to fight he has fought like a man and a Christian, for righteousness' sake, and not like a demon to humiliate and to annihilate his foes. That makes the Dutchman a rare kind of enemy, and that, more than anything else, I think, has distinguished his enmity through all the years of his history. He has gone far toward obeying the precept, "Love your enemies, and bless them that the back curse you." If he has not been able to keep men from hating him, and cursing him, and persecuting him, he has been able to keep himself from hating and cursing and persecuting in return; and so, while he is one of the greatest of military heroes in history, he is also one of the greatest of moral heroes, and that is a greater honor, inasmuch as "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

Now I do not claim all glory for the Dutch. It is not given to any one nation to monopolize virtue.

I only assert that the Dutchman's virtue is of a peculiarly exalted type. The Englishman's virtue

Now I do not claim all glory for the Dutch. It is not given to any one nation to monopolize virtue. I only assert that the Dutchman's virtue is of a peculiarly exalted type. The Englishman's virtue is just as real, only another kind of virtue. If the Dutchman's spirit of hostility or of antagonism resides in his backbone, the Englishman's spirit of hostility or antagonism resides in his breastbone. That makes all the difference between them. The Englishman fights, but he fights aggressively. And as the heart lies back of the breastbone it never gets into his fighting. He neither loves his enemies nor hates them. He simply loves England. If it has been the mission of the Dutch to keep, it has been the mission of the English to get, and in the getting he has had to do a world of fighting. It comes with ill grace from us, however, to condemn the Englishman when to-day Uncle Sam is standing on the Pacific Slope expanding his chest toward Hawaii. But if we cannot condemn with good grace, there is no need to praise English aggressiveness and acquisitiveness overmuch; what we do need to praise and cultivate is the Dutch virtue of holding fast our own. We have institutions and principles, rights and privileges, in this country which are constantly attacked, and the need of America is that the backbone which the Dutch have given to this country should assert itself. Hospitality loses its virtue when it means the destruction of the Lares and Penates of our own firesides. When a guest insists on sitting at the head of the table, then it is time for the host to become "hostis," What America needs in this new year of grace is not less hospitality toward friends but more hostility toward intruders. The spirit of this age is iconoclastic. It seeks to destroy sacred memorials, hallowed associations, holy shrines, everything that tells of the faith and the worship of a God-fearing past. The spirit of the age is irreverent, destructive, faithless. Against

The divineness of human rights, the claims of men superior to the claims of property; popular government -not an oligarchy, popular government-not a dictatorship; the sacredness of the home, the holiness of the sanctuary, faith in humanity, faith in God. These have made America, and without these there can be no America. OU will pardon me, Mr. President, and brethren of the Holland Society, if I confess that for the last half-hour I have not seen one of you; I have been unable to take my eyes from the re-

One loves to observe a fitness in things. There is manifest fitness in a Dutchman coming from Harlem to address his fellow-Dutchmen of New Amsterdam and adjacent Netherland settlements. Coming to the banquet of our Holland Society is a veritable coming home. We go elsewhere to be entertained and amused, but here we gather around the old fireside and native hearth to revive memories that flow freely when we look to the rock whence we were hewn, or at the hole of the pit whence we were dug. One loves to observe a fitness in things. There is manifest timess in a Dutchman coming from Harlem to address his fellow-Dutchmen of New Amsterdam and adjacent Netherland settlements. Coming to the banquet of our Holland Society is a veritable coming home. We go elsewhere to be entertained and amused, but here we gather around the old fireside and native hearth to revive memories that flow freely when we look to the rock whence we were hewn, or at the hole of the pit whence we were dug. It will do us no harm, nor need our felicitations make us else than humble to-night, if we rehearse a few historic facts, and boast a bit of that Dutch lineage and ancestry and boast a bit of that Dutch lineage and ancestry for which we are thankful and justly proud.

It is my pleasure and privilege to-night to indicate in what manner the Dutch have contributed to the New Englander's greatness, and by so doing have made this country of ours not a new England, as many erroneously suppose, but a new Europe, as facts abundantly show. The study of every New England settlement in this country reveals plainly the considerable connection and the immense influence of the Dutch character and civilization.

The strata of English and Dutch formations mark the conglomerate structure of populations in all of our Middle States. The city of New York formerly New Amsterdam, tells the story of Dutch settlement and subsequent English occupation. The mother of William Penn was a Dutch woman. and the most liberal constitution of all the original colonies was that of Pennsylvania. So thickly settled are parts of the great Keystone State with the direct descendants of Hollanders that "Pennsylvania Dutch" has become a commonplace term to describe large and most thrifty portions of its populations. Dutch names and settlements abound in New York, New Jersey, and Delaware, and as far west as Michigan there are communities, where still the native tongue of the Netherlanders is in current use. Wherever you find a New England settlement, there you find all that is noble and free, liberal and enlightened, cultured and civilized, and as often as you trace these blessed and blissful consequences to their source, you find the mainsprings of such blessedness and bliss in that little, but lovely, that lowly, yet lofty, country which man wrested from the sea, and God has since smiled

With characteristic Holland hospitality and fairness, we want all of our brethren of other names and fames to join us at our festal board, and partake of our happiness. The Dutch are good fighters, but they know how to forgive and forget. The Dutch wish well to others, and are ready to acknowledge others' worth, but are justly jealous of any historic fame that is solely their own.

But not from old England did they ever learn their lessons of freedom. They never came here to found a nation, but to establish upon a foreign soil a new and better England. Lashed with whips and flayed with scorpions they fled from England, and went to the only country in all Europe where they could live peaceably, work assiduously, and worship after the dictates of their conscience wholly undisturbed.

against tyranny and oppression.

In England men learned to want freedom. In Holland they learned what it was and how to get it. Had the amiable, cultured Christian wife, mother, and queen, who now occupies the throne of Great Britain, and who in her person illustrates the title which she adorns, "her most gracious majesty," been upon the throne, and had the enlightened democrats, who now occupy posts of responsibility and honor in that limited monarchy, been then in power, dutiful children would not have been driven from home, and compelled to seek in foreign lands what they had a right to claim upon their native soil. Sad as it is to tell the truth, the truth must be told. The injustice of England's State Church compelled the New Englanders to leave their country and their home. How they did love it, their history has since shown. They called this part of the country they settled New England, they named their towns, many of them, after the towns of old England, and in their devotion to the dear old land, which those of us who have been much there can readily comprehend, they have almost forgotten a most important detail of their history, namely, that before the Pilgrim fathers left England for this land, they went as refugees to Holland, and lived there, all of them, twelve years, and some of them longer, and learned how to secure the liberty they so longed to have. Every one of the institutions, social, civil, educational, and religious, which we naturally and gracefully associate with the New Englanders, was established, in full operation and flourishing, in Holland before the Pilgrim fathers landed here.

What I maintain is this, and it is well, in view of the fatal facility on the part of some to ignore it, occasionally to emphasize it, that the inspiration of our chartered liberties comes from the Dutch. The spirit of Magna Charta made Englishmen want liberty. The genius of Holland taught them how to secure liberty. Liberty and freedom, personal liberty and religious freedom, not the desire for them, but the possession of them, is the Dutchman's contribution to the New Englander's greatness. So put the Dutchman his shoulder to the Yankee wheel.

And now, as proofs for this sentiment, I would respectfully call your attention to the brief statements of two eminent men, both judiciously fair, and both very well acquainted with the early elements of our national life. They are Benjamin Franklin, loved by all Americans, and the Marquis de Lafayette, the eminent friend of George Washington, and the helper of this country in time of its direst need.

Our claim is that the superior qualities of a New Englander, qualities we all so admire, are due to the large infusion into them of the virtues of the Dutch; and, based upon this claim, is our unqualified assertion that this country is not a reproduction of England, but a reproduction of Holland, and along with it a marked improvement upon all Europe. Freedom and bravery, opposition to the wrong, and leniency to the vanquished, personal and religious liberty, these were all wrested out of the hands of devils by the Dutchmen who had wrested their country from the clutches of the sea.

The people of that brave little Holland, God bless her, gained these inestimable benefits chiefly by the dismal and trying defence against the fierce and fanatical Philip II. of Spain, and his sister Margaret of Parma, with her awful Council of Blood, and her cruel generals, Alva, Requesens, and Don Juan. To this little country the Pilgrim fathers went, stayed for a time, freely worshipped, favorably plied their avocations, and learned the law of liberty, which is, that in the service of Almighty God is man's perfect freedom. For sixty years, between 1580 and 1640, fully twelve thousand refugees thus settled in Holland. William Brewster, under Elizabeth, led the company into Holland, and Rev. John Robinson led the New England settlers out of Holland. The cradle of New England history first rocked in the Netherlands. Unable to agree with the Dutch in their idea of union of Church and State, desiring a larger freedom than even Holland could then offer them, with some fear of another war with Spain, these pilgrims left the country, first worshipping in the old church at Delfshaven and commending their project to God, stopped briefly at Southampton, and then sailed for the new world on the 16th of September, 1620. After a stormy, but not, at the time, a very slow passage, on the 21st day of December they sighted Plymouth Rock, and the 22d they landed, and then began a history which is to the story of the grandest civilization in the greatest country of the world its diadem and crown.

My good friends, I have tried briefly to tell you to-night what is the Dutchman's contribution to the New Englander's greatness, or how the Dutchman put his shoulder to the Yankee wheel. ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. Chairman and Gentleman :-

O strain of humanity is stamped with the mark of stronger individuality than the Dutch. None has proved a happier cross upon which to build up our composite American civilization.

nations of the Continent were those of freebooters and rovers of the sea, the Dutchman remained a model of domestic attachment and virtues. Possessed of every instinct of commerce, he aspired to no pre-eminence as a warrior until his home was attacked. When that occurred he became the greatest soldier and sailor of his time, and his battle-fields in defence of his fireside were the schools for the valor and prowess of the most martial aspirants of Great Britain and the Continent. Knowing our worthy expresident so well, knowing that in the suggestions he has made to us in our medical profession he is usually right, knowing that it is due to him that we have now on the statute books of the State of New York the very best medical laws that any State in the Union can boast, I responded in the affirmative, but as I looked his letter through a little carefully I noted that he said "speeches will be limited to fifteen minutes, twelve minutes better." Well, while I had accepted, at the same time I felt very much like the man in Colorado who had had a sentence passed upon him by a vigilance committee, and the verdict was that he was to be given a mule and ten minutes to get out of the town. Gentlemen, if my mental mule does not balk I will make the same reply that he did—that if his mule did not balk it would not take him ten minutes to get out of the town.

Referring to my toast, or, as I think I am correct in saying, referring to my text, I judge that my reputation in New York must be very good. On a previous occasion I was introduced, and on this occasion I am placed among the speakers, as the Rev. Dr. Vander Veer, so that what I have to say will be in the line of truthfulness, the reverend gentlemen who have already spoken to-night to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now at this place called Beverwyck we have a large surrounding country, a sort of suburbs of Beverwyck, and in one of those beautifully situated villages we have the record of a family. The generations are numerous. We have watched their career with considerable interest. We have had of that particular family one who, residing in that pure city of Beverwyck, connected with politics for a period of twenty years, yet with no stain upon the dome of his reputation, with no mahogany veneering, with nothing but the pure material itself, and who afterwards, entrusted with great business interests, has yet the respect of the entire people of this country, and whom you have with you to-night, yet one whom we parted with reluctantly—our chief chieftain, President John W. Vrooman. Now at this place called deverweek we have a large surrounding country, a sort of suburbs of Beverwyck, and in one of those beautifully situated villages we have the record of a family. The generations are numerous. We have watched their career with considerable interest. Vrooman. He comes from a family much like the Mohawk Dutchman. One of the stories told to-night almost spoiled this story I had in reserve. Some time ago I was visited by a man somewhat over fifty years of age and requested to go up in the Mohawk Valley to see his father who was seventy-five years old, and while I was examining the old gentleman at the bedside, desiring to know something of his family history, I said, "What did your father die of?" He said, "Oh, doctor, my father is living, a hale and hearty man." Such is your prospect, gentlemen, in regard to President Vrooman. To-night, while looking to my right and left and remembering I was to speak, I had in mind a story. Once upon a time there was brought to the hospital, a fine, splendid young Irishman, a conductor from one of our freight trains. He had met with a serious accident. His left leg was nearly gone, his right one fractured in several places, and he had sustained other serious injuries. His left arm was in a serious condition but we finally succeeded in saving that member and his right leg. He made many complaints and said one morning, "What is the use of living with a stiff arm and only one leg, and with one ear and part of my nose gone?" when his good old Irish mother, having listened to his complaints said, "Jimmie, it's time enough to say good-morning to the devil when you meet him." I have been in that frame of mind here for a little while, but when I have looked about the boxes and beheld these angelic creatures I have felt there was something above—something to think about D of, and as I remember my early feelings, before I knew in my anatomical studies much about the branches of the sympathetic nervous system distributed to the heart, as I remember the good and grand work done by our noble women in the late history, I said, "What did your father die of?" He hearty man." Such is your prospect, gentlemen, arm and only one leg, and with one car and part war, and as I remember the beautiful scenes that I have witnessed in the care of our young during their time of motherhood, I feel as though this particular story of being in the presence of his Imperial Highness is not appropriate, and I feel glad to know that we have with us to-night the fair sex, our good wives, our good sisters, and rejoice with all of you in their presence.

Our ex-minister to the Netherlands came near spoiling part of my remarks in reference to the early Dutchmen. Now it is a fact that when the Dutchmen concluded to colonize this part of the United States they simply placed a few soldiers upon Castle Island; they then went up the Hudson, located at Beverwyck and entered that beautiful and rich section of the country, the Mohawk Valley, and with the Indians formed a treaty that they continued to observe, and were always at peace with the Indians. We remain so. But we found during last fall that some of our Indian tribes were becoming very much disturbed and when we compared notes with New Amsterdam there was the same condition here. We had always been at peace with the Indians, but believing that we would still control them in the same manner, we have done that which you have done in this great city, we have elected a Van to take charge of them for the present.

I am expected to say something about Beverwyck and its people. We have heard quite a good deal about Dutch ancestry, Dutch perseverance, and I want to say to you as a result of Dutch perseverance, of energy and skill, we have in Beverwyck now that magnificent building nearly completed, called the new Capitol. Burdened as you are with a great pedigree, I fear that if you go on descending, it will be impossible for the pedigree to keep track of your descent. another reason why I hesitate to respond to this toast at this hour in the morning. As I read the constitution of this Society, you are descended only in the male line. Still it must be confessed that if it had not been for the mothers of New Netherland you would have had no pedigree worth mentioning. Now, in responding to this toast at this hour in the morning, I shall not go back to the old Dutch garden, commonly called Eden, because you might be like the little girl who said, when her mother proposed to read to her the story of Eden, "I am so tired of hearing about those Adamses!"

Just think for a moment, if you can keep awake, of the intelligence and dignity, as well as the self-sacrifice, loyalty and devotion, beauty and refinement of the mothers of New Netherland.

Intelligence they had, far above their sisters of other lands. It was one of the peculiar glories of the Netherlands that public schools were founded there centuries ago, but it was another of their peculiar glories that the girls went to school with the boys, and when the first Dutch school-master landed on Manhattan, as I read early New Netherland history, Sarah Rapelyea, the first white girl born in the colony, was not more than five years old. the Dutch school-master was ahead of time! And yet they say up in Boston, that the Dutch were slow. While the Dutch school-masters had been going to work, at home, for about eight generations, and ever since they landed here on Manhattan, those people of Boston point to an old statute, which they say was the first statute about public schools in America, the statute of 1634. And then that rooster among our States, Massachusetts, which has done more crowing than all the other States put together, pointed to the old statute, and said: "See what we have done—founded public education!" And yet, shades of the Pilgrim fathers and mothers !- no girl was allowed to go to a public school in Massachusetts until long after the Revolution. When in 1798, oblivious of what the Dutch common schools had been doing, a girl was admitted to the public schools of that commonwealth, that same old rooster got up again, flapped his wings, and crowed, and said: "See what we have discovered—that women can be educated!"

Think for a moment, if you are not asleep, of the neatness and refinement of those mothers who first kept the homes of Christendom, which had domestic comforts in them, and remember how the world used to laugh at the neatness of the Dutch!

Think for a moment, if you are not asleep, of the neatness and refinement of those mothers who first kept the homes of Christendom, which had domestic comforts in them, and remember how the world used to laugh at the neatness of the Dutch!

Why, the mothers of the Netherlands were the first women to wear the clean, linen collars of civiliza-The queens of England wore the Dutch linen collars with the great high ruffs, and the stiffer the collar, and the higher the ruff, the more queens they! They wore not only the Holland linens, but even the starch in them came out of the Netherlands. Of course, after Tromp had swept the English Channel, there was no starch left in the English, and that broom at the mast-head so sickened the English with the word broom, which is a sturdy Dutch word, that, of course, they could not use a broom for a long time afterwards. And how they laughed at the neatness of the Dutch! Why, they said: "Look at their houses. They not only sweep out the rooms every day, but they clean the very brooms they have swept with. only clean the door-mats, but they wash the sidewalks and they scrub the paving-stones!" the whole outside dirty world joined in the laugh. It was not so long ago that we thought it was rather absurd, I believe, to clean our streets in New York every day. But in the future we shall expect that the Italians and the other members of Tammany will scrub every paving-stone from the woods of the Bronx to the shores of Coney Island, or the Mayor will violate the principles of the constitution of this Society.

Now, what shall I say at one o'clock in the morning of some of the other virtues of the mothers of New Netherland, of their self-sacrifice, of their devotion, of their loyalty, of their truth? The pictures of Rembrandt of the mothers of the period reveal to us still to-day (and the light of reality is shining out of those portraits) those benignant faces, those clear eyes that look you straight in the face, those shapely heads which marked the mothers of the Republic. Look at Julia of Orange, mother of that house which we delight to honor, as that face looks out of the portraits of Rembrandt, in her age, in her widowhood, alone, bereft of her four sons, every one of whom filled a hero's grave in defence of his country and fell with the beggar's penny about his neck; that house which for four generations never produced a son who was not a hero or a daughter who was not loyal and true. Shall I mention Leyden and that awful siege? You remember the last days of the famine, when starving mothers with starving children clinging to them said to the starving men, "Fight on; better death than surrender to the tyrant! If you are too weak to hold the pikes, we will help you." And when the next charge of the Spanish soldiery was made against those long rows of pikes on the walls of Leyden, the shock of that onset was felt on the bosom of woman. Match that for heroism and resistance to oppression in the world's history! Those were the women who came to New Netherland, to these wild shores, these savage forests, to rule and reign on the throne of the Dutchman's home, in those long-roofed houses, with the lowbeamed rooms, where our fathers lived and died.

The winter sun has set over the hills of Hudson's River; the last light has faded from the snowbanks by the front stoop. Within there sits the mother, a few gray hairs about her temples, a big Dutch Bible upon her lap, reading by the light of tallow dip and bright wood fire. The outer door is flung open and in rush the father and the boys, fresh and rosy, from the chase. The lids of the book are closed and the autocrat of the Dutchman's home gently says, "Order, children!" and the fur caps and coats are put away and the guns are hung on the nails above the mantelpiece. It is Christmas eve. The children are in bed with injunctions to sleep, that Santa Claus may come; towards the chimney steps the mother, with a wistful smile, perhaps thinking of those better homes by the dykes in the lowlands across the seaapproaches the stockings hanging by the fireplace. So they are moving in every Dutchman's home in New Netherland-those angels of the Dutchman's home, an army of love, laden with gifts, moving toward the stockings hanging by the fire. Are such women forgotten? No. They may sleep in their quiet, grassy graves; but on the memory of every one of them rests the light of the God of purity, and on every one of their names, whether on fly-leaf of old Dutch Bible, in tattered letters, yellow with age, in musty church records, there falls the halo of the Christ they worshipped. Men of the Holland Society, we have praised the deeds of our fathers, but it would bring the blush of shame to your cheeks, you men born of women, if you did not thank God for the mothers of New Netherland.

THE PRESIDENT: Good-night! God bless you!

MIJN (ONS) VADERLAND.

By Genl. J. Watts de Peyster.

Our Fatherland! What words love-fraught are these—Spell to unlock our warmest sympathies—With pride, respect, and fond affection, we Recall thy past, future serene foresee; For never can the future prove untrue To that great past which to such stature grew. And long as from the Dutchman's dyke-girt shore, Hollandish speech responds to ocean's roar, Shall Holland's standard float o'er every sea, And Holland's soil exult in liberty.

Flag of the triad stripe! what mem'ries rise, And, at thy summons, pass before our eyes! The Spaniards' floating castles burnt or ta'en; Braganza's towers spoil'd upon the main; Humbled and driven to port the Fleur-de-Lys; The British Lion chas'd the "narrow seas," With English blood the Thames encrimson'd runs, Proud London quakes while roar DE RUYTER'S guns, Her burning ships the darkling flood illume, O'er which in triumph Tromp display'd his broom; In their own waters, see the Danish foes, Conquer'd and spoil'd, their Dannebrog depose; And Sweden's shores, behold their strongest fleet, And greatest sea chief, fly in rout complete. Tri-color'd Flag! no greater triumphs shine In naval annals than are surely thine!

Our Fatherland! What words love-fraught are theseSpell to unlock our warmest sympathies—
With pride, respect, and foud affection, we Recall thy past, future scene foresee;
For never can the future prove unitue
To that great past which to such statute grew.
And long as from the Dutchman's dyke-girt shore,
Hollandish speech responds to occan's roar,
Shall Holland's standard float o'er every sea,
And Holland's soil exult in liberty.

Flag of the triad stripe! what mem'ries rise, And, at thy summons, pass before our eyes! The Spanards' floating eastles burnt or ra'en; Braganza's towere spoil'd upon the main; Humbled and driven to port the Fleur-de-Lys; The British Lion chas'd the "narrow seas," With English blood the Thames encrimend truns, Proud London quakes while roar us Kur'ren's guns, Her burning ships the darkling flood illume, O'er which in triumph Trome display'd his broom; In their own waters, see the Danish toes, Conquer'd and spoil'd, their Danish toes, And Sweden a shores, behold their strongest fleet, And greatest sea chief, fly in rout complete.

And greatest sea chief, fly in rout complete.

Tri-color'd Fing! no greater triumphs shine!

Thy Blue recalls the ocean, on whose waves Thy people cast their lot ere bow as slaves, And, putting faith in God, compell'd the brine To guard their rights, and from its orient shrine Pour strength and riches o'er propitious seas, Borne from remotest climes in argosies. Thy White, emblem of Dutch integrity-Proverbial faith from doubt and stigma free-Shining 'twixt red and blue like mountain snow, 'Tween azure sky and ruddy earth below. Thy Red, thy children's blood, who, free to breathe, "Despised the shame," and wore the martyr's wreath, And, trusting in the God of Battles, won The desp'rate game their gallant sires begun; Playing their parts so well that Holland's glory Will shine resplendent through remotest story, And her ensanguin'd records' radiance blaze To light advent'rous youth in honor's ways. Affliction's furnace made thy people steel, Which fifty years of battle serv'd to neal, And, stubborn for the right, a nation rose As great as glorious, purified by woes. ORANGE! thy Red's first tint, a hero line Erst dignifi'd themselves, then made it thine, And, with their swords, as if in molten gold Inwrought their virtues on each silken fold, Until, so often battle's crimson tide Had bath'd the flag, Red was its Orange dy'd.

Dear Fatherland! our hearts, responsive, still Beat, when, with thee, affairs go well or ill;
And, though three centuries since, our fathers came
To give to this New World thine honor'd name,
Oft, o'er the heaving sea, in spirit roving
Home to their hearths, we breathe "Oranje Boven!"
God save our fathers' Fatherland! God guard that glorious throne.

Which ev'ry child of Holland blood must honor as his own.

Following is a partial list of General de Peyster's

FLATBUSH DUTCH CHURCH RECORDS.

The original records of the Dutch Church of Flatbush are lost. The late Henry Onderdonk made a copy of the marriage and baptismal registers, which, with other manuscript, after his death was deposited in the Long Island Historical Society. This copy of Mr. Onderdonk is not a literal transcript of the original, as in many cases he added what he believed to be the family names subsequently assumed, and he also abbreviated some names. The chirography is somewhat difficult to decipher and errors may appear in this transcript, which, however, has been prepared with as much care as possible, though it is to be regretted it cannot be vouched for as a perfect copy of the original church records.

SOUTH AFRIKANDER AND ENGLISH-MAN.

By D. VERSTEEG.

HEN, in August, 1597, the first Dutch ships arrived at Amsterdam laden with rich treasure, direct from the East Indies, the elated Dutchmen little dreamed that this joyful occurrence would, three centuries later, be the indirect cause of one of the most perfidious assaults, recorded in history, against the independence of a sovereign nation.

This first successful venture was followed up by many others; and when, in 1602, the Dutch East India Company was incorporated, the foundation of the Dutch Empire of the Indian Archipelago was laid. Hundreds of vessels now annually sailed from the Dutch ports to Batavia and other harbors of Insulinde for the precious products of the newly acquired possessions. revictualled, and found it in the southern extremity of South Africa, about two thirds of the distance between Holland and the East Indies. For nearly fifty years no systematic plan was adopted, and though many vessels, Dutch as well as English, occasionally called at some accessible spot on the Southern Cape peninsula, and bartered for provisions with the natives, no attempt at settlement was made. As early as 1619, however, the English proposed to the Dutch to jointly maintain a supply station there, which proposition the Dutch declined with thanks. The English soon afterwards made St. Helena the stopping-place for their Indian fleets, and thus lost all direct interest in the South African peninsula, only to revert to it after the Dutch had planted a prosperous colony there.

When, in 1648, the ship Haarlem foundered in Tafel Baai, the crew safely reached the shore, and after a stay of six months were taken to Holland by a homeward-bound fleet. The experience of the shipwrecked crew had been so favorable that upon their arrival in the fatherland two of the ship's officers directed a memorial to the Company, setting forth the advantages of a supply station in Table Valley. The Chamber of Amsterdam with the concurrence of the other Chambers favorably considered the matter, and in 1650 Jan Van Riebeek, a ship's surgeon, a man eminently fitted for the difficult task, was appointed commander of the intended station. Late in the fall of 1651 the expedition set out, and in April, 1652, arrived at their destination and took formal possession of a strip of country which was then barely able to support a population of sixty wretched Hottentots. the experiences and subsequent history of the infant settlement, which, however, is quite as interesting as the history of New Netherland. Suffice it to say that the government of the East India Company, though far from being ideal, was in every respect superior to that of the English governors, sent to rule New Netherland a few years later, and whose many abuses powerfully contributed to the revolution of 1776.

At the beginning of the present century the white population of the Cape peninsula amounted to no more than thirty thousand people scattered over an area of about one hundred and twenty thousand square miles. Only a few thousands of these had settled at or near Kaapstad (now Cape Town), while the great majority had gone into the raising of cattle and sheep. These cattlemen, happy in their isolation from the rest of the world, were an eminently self-reliant, generous, and gallant race of men, and though as ignorant of the niceties of civilized life, and possibly as superstitious, as the English farmer of to-day, still possessed a pride of race and descent as intense perhaps as that of the oldest noble family of England. As long as they were not interfered with by the English, the distant cattle-breeders, though not partial to English domination, did not bother much about the change of government, though their countrymen in and around Cape Town had, in 1795 and 1806, courageously assisted the troops of the East India Company and of the Batavian Republic against the great odds of the English invaders. But when the English began to send out tax-collectors and government officials, it became different. The Boers could not understand what right those alien intruders had in demanding taxes and obedience from them; they had never been so unreasonable as to send any of their people to England to make similar demands there! This, coupled with the insolent arrogance of the English, the exorbitantly high salaries paid to the representatives of the alien usurpers, who, by their every act, showed the greatest contempt for the Boers, as well as by several deeds of petty tyranny, so exasperated the Boers that they conceived a burning hatred against the English. Even if the English had not done anything to provoke the Dutch-speaking Afrikanders and had fulfilled all their promises, the very fact of an alien flag waving over Cape Castle was enough to excite a race hatred, which has been only intensified by deeds of arrogance and tyranny on the part of the English, hardly surpassed by Spain in Cuba.

The limited scope of this sketch does not allow of specific narration. But just as the Irish soldier, serving in the English army, is punished for wearing a bit of green on St. Patrick's Day, so the Afrikander Boer was in every manner annoyed and molested if he dared to show but a slight national preference. Furthermore the notorious Philip and his clique at Cape Town sent the most outrageously slanderous reports to London, which were religiously believed and eagerly copied in the English papers; English travellers, who had been treated by the English-hating Boers with scant courtesy, also swelled the grand chorus of lies. It is thus that the whole English-speaking world has come to consider the Afrikander Boer as a being little better than a lazy savage, while in fact he is one of the most intelligent, courageous, hospitable, energetic, civil, and humane beings to be met with anyhigh salaries paid to the representatives of the alien molested if he dared to show but a slight national where. If the Afrikander had meekly submitted to the yoke nothing would ever have been said about him, and though the Englishman would have quietly despised, he would never have hated and slandered him.

In 1815 an event took place about which every Dutch Afrikander dislikes to speak because he considers the part some of his countrymen took in it as so disgraceful that he almost regards it as a slur upon his nationality. Lord Charles Somerset, one of the most wasteful and overbearing English officials Cape Colony has been cursed with, was governor. A Dutchman, Frederick Bezuidenhout, living in a valley whose name had been Anglicized to Glen Lynden, had been summoned to appear before the court, but did not come. A company of Pandours (Hottentot soldiers) was despatched to arrest him. So great was the pride of a Dutchman that he preferred death to surrender to Hot-Bezuidenhout resisted, took shelter in a tentots. cavern, and was killed by the Pandours. At the funeral, which took place the following day, Jan Bezuidenhout, a brother of the victim of English disregard for Dutch feeling, and others present, took a vow that they would never rest until the Pandours were sent away. About fifty men, all told, joined in the project. But English troops, assisted by a number of Afrikander burghers, soon suppressed the rather harmless insurrection. the participants were captured except Jan Bezuidenhout, who, assisted by his wife and young son, resisted capture and fell riddled with bullets. It is not inopportune here to state that the women of South Africa have ever been first and foremost in resisting their alien oppressors, and more than once where. If the Afrikander had meekly submitted to the yoke nothing would ever have been said about him, and though the Englishman would have quietly despised, he would never have hated and slandered him.

In 1815 an event took place about which every Bezuidenhout, a brother of the victim of English assisted by a number of Afrikander burghers, soon when the men wavered or were irresolute fired them on to deeds of bravery.

Five of the men who had taken part in the insurrection were condemned to die the ignominious death of hanging, and suffered the penalty on Slachtersnek, March 9, 1816. The others escaped with their lives, but were more or less severely punished in other ways. Quite different from President Kruger's magnanimous treatment of Jameson and his fellow criminals! But then, President Kruger is only an ignorant Boer! Apropos of this there is a story in N. Hofmeyr's remarkable book, De Afrikaner Boer en de Jameson inval, of a conversation between President Kruger and a countryman of his, which conversation is also characteristic as giving a clue to the secret of Kruger's hold upon his people. The conversation took place on the President's stoop after he had pardoned the four conspirators in the raid who had been condemned to death by Chief-Justice Gregorowski:

"Burgher. 'But, President, why did n't you have those four strung up?'

President. 'What do you think of Slachtersnek?'

Burgher. 'Slachtersnek? That's a mean, unjust act.'

President. 'Now then, and do you want me to erect a second Slachtersnek, one for those English?'

Burgher. (Calming down, and thinking a little while.) 'You are right, President.'"

Various other injudicious acts upon the part of the English oppressors not only added oil to the flames of race hatred, but caused several wars with the Blacks in which the Boers were the principal sufferers. And during those and later wars, it ocwhen the men wavered or were irresolute fired them on to deeds of bravery.

Various other injudicious acts upon the part of the English oppressors not only added oil to the flames of race hatred, but caused several wars with the Blacks in which the Boers were the principal sufferers. And during those and later wars, it occurred more than once that the arrogant stupidity of the English officers leading the expeditions caused ignominious defeat, and sometimes the Boer "commandos" were the only saviors of the gallant red-coats. Americans will understand the situation when reference is made to Braddock's defeat in the French and Indian War of 1755, where only Washington's skill and the cool-headedness of the despised provincials saved the English from the consequences of their commander's stupidity. It was, moreover, customary with the English, down to 1881, to add to their long list of slanders against the Boers that of cowardice, notwithstanding the fact that even prior to Majuba Hill those same cowardly Boers had once routed the English, and had, in open battle, nearly always defeated their tribal opponents, sometimes fighting against odds of ninety to one. The English invincibles, on the other hand, had suffered as many reverses as they had had successes in their encounters with the aborigines. In fact, those very reverses induced the Anglican civilizers of South Africa to acknowledge the independence of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, and it was only after the Boers had cleared the way for them that the gallant Englishmen returned to claim the fruits of the pioneer labors and the almost indescribable sufferings of the slandered Boers. Is it, then, surprising that the Boer hates the English?

of the English prisons. The ship Neptune with a cargo of those English civilizers was, notwithstanding the most strenuous protests, despatched to South Africa, but when she arrived at Simons Bay the people had entered into an agreement not to permit the landing of any of them, and even to refuse them supplies. During the five months that the ship lay in the bay neither the crew nor the convicts received provisions, and if it had not been for the English men-of-war provisioning them, all on board would have starved. Throughout the colony the people were boiling over with excitement, and it was fortunate for England, but a unfortunate for South Africa, that the popular and prudent Sir Harry Smith was governor at the time. Fortunately for England again, the government saw its egregious blunder before it was too late, and the ship was ordered to dump its precious cargo in the wilds of Tasmania.

A few years before this occurrence, however, a series of events had taken place which not only considerably changed the map of South Africa. but also caused so much pain and sorrow to that benevolent individual, John Bull, that even now his tears are not yet dried up. Up to 1836 the shown opposition to English domination had been mostly passive. The Boers felt that, alone and unaided, they could not cope against a power which, though not nearly as tremendous as the English and the Anglomaniacs want the world to believe it is, yet is effective enough to cow small nations and poorly equipped savages into submission. them, not more at first than a hundred strong, resolved to leave the English dominions, or what they thought to be the English dominions, and to migrate (trekken) north of the Orange River to the lands which had been depopulated by the recent inter-tribal wars. It is impossible to follow up all or any of the "trekking" parties, but suffice it to say that a part of the first was absolutely annihilated by the Blacks, while another part, of which only one man and a few women, after untold sufferings, survived, reached Delagoa Bay, where the Portuguese officials treated them with the utmost kindness. From here they afterward joined later arrivals in Natal, who, upon hearing of their plight, had sent a vessel for them. The other Boers in Cape Colony were not at all daunted by the sad fate of scores of their kinsmen. Many among them would rather perish in the wilderness than remain longer under the galling voke of the English. Those truthful historians, their English panegyrists, have endeavored to make the world believe that the Boers were only dissatisfied because those humane and philanthropic English would not permit them to maltreat and enslave the blacks. But impartial history has shown these, even as other English slanders, to be but the fabrications of dishonest minds. Every fair-minded person, having studied the history of South Africa, has come to the conclusion that the Boer treatment of the blacks was on the whole humane and politic, a fact which some English writers have, nolens volens, been obliged by force of circumstances to admit. "The Boers are wiser than we are" is an admission which no Englishman likes to make, yet some have been either fairthey thought to be the English dominions, and to the lands which had been depopulated by the recent inter-tribal wars. The Boer treatment of the native races has always been very much better than that accorded them in Cape Colony, in the new settlement of Rhodesia, in Australia, and especially in Zanzibar, not to speak of other British possessions.

Several other parties, in the course of a few years, followed the ill-fated first attempt, and with these "treks" began what may be appropriately called the heroic age of the Dutch-speaking portion of South Africa's population. Retief, Uys, Potgieter, and Maritz resolved to go to Natal and settle there. This country was not only the paradise of South Africa, but, better still, the English government had more than once declined to annex it, and thus the Boers thought that at last they would be free from the alien yoke, the foreign oppressor. At the very outset the able and influential Retief was treacherously murdered, with his party, by the Zulus, and it was only owing to the fortunate escape of a young man, who just had time to warn them, that the others did not meet with a similar fate. The Boers now possessed a port, they might grow too formidable, and, besides, the English merchants complained that the port of Natal would hurt their trade with the interior. This time there was none of the usual "unctuous hypocrisy" to cloak the cupidity which decreed that Natal should become an English possession. troops under Capt, Thomas Smith entered the country, and near Durban there was a conflict between Smith and Pretorius in which the English were forced to retreat with the loss of sixteen killed, and of two field-pieces. This was the first of the series of Boer victories which were to show the world that the Boers were not cowards, and that the English were not invincible. But the defeated English had an intrenched camp near an inlet of the sea, accessible to large ships, to which Smith retreated, and when the Cape government learned of the plight of their conquering heroes, they immediately sent to their aid two ships with troops. The small force of Boers, who could not prevent the landing of the troops, and who, moreover, clearly saw that it would be impossible without heavy artillery, and with their small population, to defend a country thus exposed to attacks from the sea, reluctantly gave up the attempt; and in June, 1842, the Republic of Natal came to an end, while the country itself was in 1846 annexed to England,-a tribute to English valor, a monument to English justice! A minority of the Boers, tired of the hardships of the "trek," remained in Natal, though they did not become Anglicized, but the majority moved deeper inland and built a village, which they named Ohrigstad out of respect for an Amsterdam merchant who had rendered them signal service. Here, however, they were driven away by malignant fevers, and now founded the villages of Lydenburg and Zoutpansberg. It is impossible to trace in detail the further movements of the emigrants, their dissensions, their sufferings, their terrible wars with treacherous and relentless foes. Suffice it to state that by the Sand River convention on January 17, 1852, the South African Republic (Transvaal) was recognized by the English, and the Orange Free State on February 23, 1854, by a convention at Bloemfontein. Now it would be imagined that the Dutch-speaking Afrikanders were forever free from English attempts, and at liberty to work out their own destiny. But again the Boers were mistaken. The English simply considered that the Boers held the country in trust for them, until a part or the whole should become valuable enough to make a grab for it. And that opportunity came sooner than had been expected. In 1867 diamonds began to be found in South Africa, but the richest deposits were on Orange Free State territory. In 1871 that portion comprising the famous Kimberley district was declared British property. The people of the Free State protested. President Brand even went to England on account of it. But in vain. England as the paramount power in South Africa wanted the mines, and was ready to pay £90,000 for them. Suppose the United States as the para-ships of the "trek," remained in Natal, though they deeper inland and built a village, which they named taken. The English simply considered that the mount power in America should, on that account, claim the English possessions here; suppose that Russia as the paramount power in Asia should claim the English possessions there, and that same Russia, as the paramount power in Europe, should want England itself; could then the English, in the face of their own unjust treatment of weaker nations, claim the sympathy or the moral or armed support of others? In the face of the above protests and of what will be told later on regarding President Burgers the following lies in the Quarterly Review for January, 1898, are eloquent:

"In 1875 President Burgers of the Transvaal had agreed that the republic should come under the crown. A year later, President Brand, of the Orange Free State, signed a convention, surrendering Griqua Land West (the diamond fields) to Great Britain for the sum of $\pm 90,000$; thus recognizing the inability of the Dutch Republic to control a large mining population."

After this the Orange Free State was, comparatively speaking, left alone, and English attention directed towards the affairs of her northern sister, the Transvaal.

After many vicissitudes the Transvaal burghers decided that they wanted a more learned man as the head of the government, and Thomas Francois Burgers, a most able but most impractical man, was elected president. After a few years he lost the confidence of his people, and in the dissensions which followed the English thought they ought not to let so favorable an opportunity slip by to steal the country. On April 12, 1877, Sir Theophile Shepstone, who had been in Transvaal for some time, thought the long-sought-for opportunity had come, and simply annexed the republic to the Queen's dominions. Messrs. S. J. P. Kruger (now president) and Dr. Jorissen (now judge) were sent to England to protest. But here insult was only added to injury. A second deputation consisting of Messrs. Kruger and P. J. Joubert (now commandantgeneral), with Mr. Edward Bok as secretary, carrying with them thousands of signed protests, was next sent out. This deputation met with no better treatment than the first. Gladstone became premier, but he, no more than Beaconsfield, was inclined to release so grand a prize. And yet, the English do not understand how it is possible for a Boer to detest them! After the robber flag of England had floated over the government buildings at Pretoria for nearly three years and a half, Heidelberg was declared the capital until Pretoria should have been retaken, and on December 16, 1880, the banner of the Transvaal Republic was again unfurled to the breezes. That noble Afrikander triumvirate, Messrs S. J. P. Kruger, M. W. Pretorius, and P. J. Joubert, took the lead of affairs, and the unequal struggle for independence commenced. Wherever the Boers met the English, the latter were scattered like clouds before a storm. Majuba,* at Ingogo, at Langenek, at Bronkhorstspruit, wherever Boer encountered Briton, English invincibility, like English justice, proved to be a myth. And neither did the Boers of Transvaal have to fight unaided. Their ranks were strengthened by arrivals from Natal, Orange Free State, and Cape Colony. The whole Dutch-speaking population of South Africa was a unit in giving moral support to their Transvaal brethren. England was given distinctly to understand that it could no longer with impunity trample upon the most sacred of human rights. Even sailors from Dutch war-ships deserted their vessels in those days, saying to their shipmates, "Do you think that we can remain here doing nothing, while the English butchers are slaughtering our kinsmen in Transvaal?" Besides the triumvirate, the names of such splendid leaders as Stephanus Roos, Joachim Ferreira, David and Frans Joubert, D. J. R. Malan, Stephanus Trichard, Nicolaas and Jacobus Smit, Commander Cronje, and a host of others will always be gratefully remembered not only by the victorious Transvalers, but by every Dutch-speaking Afrikander as well. If the discipline and organization of the Boers were only as perfect as their courage and generalship are splendid, it would not be long before the South African Republic would be a fact where now it is but a dream; and under the able guidance of such far-seeing leaders as Paul Kruger, J. H. Hofmeyr, M. T. Steyn, Pieter Joubert, and others, it would soon take an honored place among the world's great nations.

It was not magnanimity, as has been asserted, which after so many and signal defeats induced Gladstone to give up Transvaal. That great Boerhater and slanderer of the Republicans of South Africa, R. S. Churchill, in his Men, Mines, and Animals in South Africa, distinctly states that Gladstone, having to choose between the loss of Transvaal alone, and the possible loss of the whole

It was not magnanimity, as has been asserted, which after so many and signal defeats induced Gladstone to give up Transvaal. That great Boerhater and slanderer of the Republicans of South Africa, R. S. Churchill, in his Men. Mines, and Animals in South Africa, distinctly states that Gladstone, having to choose between the loss of Transvaal alone, and the possible loss of the whole of South Africa, chose the former. At the conclusion of peace, which took place in 1881, the English cut off from the territory of the republic as much as they could safely take without a renewal of hostilities. The Boers were left practically unmolested until 1896, when, owing to the gold diggings at Johannesburg, there were so many English in Transvaal that now they thought they could accomplish from within what fifteen years before they could not do from without. Everything was prepared long beforehand. That "unctuous hypocrisy," which requires a fig leaf to cover every base English act, was not slow in finding the most outrageous excuses, even intimating that the wives and children of the outlanders at Johannesburg might fall victims to Boer cruelty. Jameson's abortive raid, which came to such an ignominious end at Krugersdorp and Doornkop, was probably conceived as early as June, 1894, by Lord Loch, during whose second visit to Pretoria, in 1896, the English living there dragged the Transvaal flag from the president's carriage and substituted that of England for it. No wonder that President Kruger has need of a body-guard! This Jameson raid, which covered with guilt Joseph Chamberlain, Cecil Rhodes, the London Times, and many other English notables, once more showed that, however much divided the Afrikanders may be in time of peace, their sentiment of solidarity is so intense that an injury done to one is considered an injury to all.

If England will only leave Transvaal alone in the future, and permit it to recover from the blows it has so treacherously dealt the republic, the wise statesmanship of President Kruger and his able advisers will soon guide the ship of state in the right

The economic progress which can neither be brought about by so-called progressive parties nor by hysterical, quasi-progressive legislation, but must be the result of natural evolutionary forces, will surely come with the increase of an energetic, loyal, law-abiding population. Yet from what an English contributor wrote in Harper's Weekly for October 23, 1897, it would seem that English rapacity will not be satisfied until South Africa shall have been turned into one great battle-field-solely for the glorification of "God's English." From what that noble expounder of England's mission in South Africa writes it would seem that, as soon as the Boers shall have cast aside their own language for the tongue of the English, even the South African desert will bloom like a Garden of Eden. And if the Boers will not-well, let them be exterminated. This prophet writes as follows:

"The gold-reefs will not be worked out for another hundred years, and long before then the only language spoken in Transvaal will be English. Ten years from now, perhaps five years, the revolution will be accomplished, the franchise will be granted, and the weeding out of a brave but perverse and unintelligent people will have begun. May the process be peaceable and gradual; for if it comes to war it will be bloody and prolonged—a war not of conquest but of extermination."

Happily this individual is only an irresponsible representative of his race. But his writing, and many more bloodthirsty utterances by others, show which way the wind blows. A responsible government may be more prudent. But if it should come to the worst, President Kruger's famous "Let them come!" yet holds good, his trusty rifle and fleet charger are still at his disposal just as during the Jameson raid, when the aged warrior statesman kept them at hand all night for use in case of emergency. This time at least 50,000 men would be needed to fight a united South Africa. Would the English have any better success than at Majuba? The Afrikanders doubt it. The desperate courage of a thoroughly aroused people would strew the whole long line of march with the dead of England's soldiery. And when, later on, some English traveller should visit the then liberated country, and chance upon the distant battle-fields, those whitening skeletons would appear to him like so many monuments to the baffled hatred of his countrymen, conveying to his mind's eye this sad message:

"Englishman, return to your island, and tell your marauding countrymen that our bones, bleaching on these sunburnt plains, are so many silent reproaches against the dastardly attempt to exterminate a brave, liberty-loving nation."

DELFSHAVEN AND RECORDS OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

HROUGH the courtesy of the Secretary of State, at Washington, President Vrooman received an advance sheet of a consular report which will be of interest to our members, and is therefore herewith published.

Consul Listoe sends from Rotterdam, under date of February 12, 1898, a description of the town whence the Pilgrim Fathers sailed from Holland to America. Consular reports, it should be noted, are usually limited to commercial and industrial subjects; but, in view of the general interest of this subject (the consul says he has received several requests from America for copies of the church records herein given), an exception is made in this case. The report is as follows:

One of the points within this consular district possessing most interest for citizens of the United States is undoubtedly the ancient town of Delfshaven, situated on the river Maas (Meuse), a couple of miles below Rotterdam, and, in fact, now a part of this city. The town derives its name (Haven: harbor) from the fact that it formerly

The town derives its name (Haven: harbor) from the fact that it formerly was the seaport for the city of Delft, once an important city, where William the Silent—the liberator of the Netherlands—and most of his descendants lie buried, and in later years famous for its manufacture of the decorated porcelain known as delftware. Delft is located eight miles inland from its "haven," on the river Schie, which empties into the Maas.

Delfshaven is the place whence the Pilgrim Fathers originally started for America, and here stands yet the old "Hervormde Kerk" (Reformed Church) in which they worshipped and in which the last sermon was preached to them prior to their departure for the New World. The old pier where they embarked is also still in existence.

In the records of the old church is found an interesting description of the departure of the Pilgrims, of which I am able, through the courtesy of the church authorities here, to present a copy translated into English:

THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

On the 22d of July, of the year 1620, the pier of Delfshaven was crowded with people. A vessel was riding at anchor—the Speedwell—waiting for a large number of passengers. A severe act of Parliament, which had been passed in 1592 in England, caused a cruel persecution of the so-called Puritans. Many of them fled to the hospitable Netherlands, and, having settled at Leyden, they chose for their minister the Rev. Robinson, belonging to their own church and residing in this country since 1607. They gloried in bearing the name of "Pilgrims." Their stay at Leyden lasted twelve years. As for religious freedom and toleration, they rejoiced in favorable circumstances, the municipal government having not the slightest reason to complain of their conduct; but they had hard work in providing for their subsistence.

THE PILORIM FATHERS.

On the 22th of July, of the year 1020, the pier of Delfshaven was crawded, with people. A vessel was riding at anchor—the Specdwell—waiting for a large number of passengers. A severe act of Parliament, which had been passed in 1592 in England, caused a cruel persecution of the so-called Puritans. Many of them fled to the hospitable Netherlands, and, having settled at Leyden, they chose for their minister the Rev. Robinson, belonging to their own church and residing in this country since 1007. They gloried in bearing the name of "Bilgrims." Their stay at Leyden lasted twelve years. As for religious freedom and toleration, they rejoiced in favorable circumstances, the municipal government having not the slightest reason to complain of their conduct; but they had hard work in providing for their subsistence.

The fear of being pressed into the military service on account of the war with Spain and the painful feeling of exile made them resolve to found a colony in America. A vessel was bought and lay ready to sail on the abovementioned date. The whole congregation, those who were to leave for America and the rest, who were to stay behind waiting for a subsequent opportunity, was assembled on the quay.

The inhabitants of Delfshaven beheld a scene which should never be forgotten. This scene of parting was touching; but first, the Rev. Robinson, kneeling down, sent up a fervent prayer, intrusting to the Lord and His grace all the members of his church, as well those now departing as those who hoped to follow their brethren before long.

Once more embracing each other, they bade farewell—for many of them the last farewell on earth—and the Speedwell weighed anchor, steering to Southampton, where another ship, the Mayflower, was waiting to take them to America. They arrived there safe and sound and founded New Plymouth.

It is only of late years that the attention of the American travelling public has been directed to these interesting mementos of the Pilgrim Fathers, but now Delfshaven and the old church are annually visited by many tourists. The church is well worth a visit. It is a very plain building, but the interior has undergone few changes since 1621, and the pulpit, the altar, even some of the Bibles in the pews, are the same as were in use in those days. In the so-called "Konsistorie Kamer" (consistory chamber) are to be seen portraits of many of the leading Pilgrims.

Last summer a wealthy and influential gentleman from Philadelphia, Mr. L. C. Vanuxem, visited Delfshaven and secured from the church authorities two old gravestones and an old contributionA vessel was bought and lay ready to sail on the abovewere to leave for America and the rest, who were to stay or alms-box for the New England Society of Pennsylvania; and he has since interested himself in getting support in the United States for the old "Hervormde Kerk." The church is poor, as but few wealthy people now reside at Delfshaven, they having gradually changed their residence to Rotterdam; and fears have been entertained that the present congregation might not be able to retain possession of the old church and that it might be sold and torn down.

At the annual meeting of the New England Society held in Philadelphia on December 22d last, the above-mentioned alms-box was presented to the society by Mr. Vanuxem. The society voted to donate $250 to the old Reformed Church of Delfshaven, and at the subsequent banquet the almsbox was passed around, and the sum of $75 was further collected for the church.

It would be desirable if other patriotic people in the United States would follow this example. The people in the Netherlands have, of course, not the interest in and veneration for the Pilgrim Fathers that we have, and could hardly be expected to make any great effort requiring a pecuniary outlay to preserve this old church for future generations; and it would indeed be a pity if this interesting edifice should be destroyed for want of a little timely support.

In conclusion, I would call attention to the fact that Delfshaven is easy of access for European travellers. The great majority of tourists come to the Continent via England, and there is a nightly steamer from Harwich, England, to Rotterdam. Passengers leaving Liverpool Street Station in London at eight o'clock in the evening arrive at

The meeting was called to order at about half past eight o'clock, by the President, Mr. John W. Vrooman, who spoke as follows:

"The Holland Society has added another year to its history. Assembled to-night with good cheer and fraternal greeting, we are gladdened with increased membership, favored with continued harmony, and strengthened with added devotion to the principles upon which our society is founded. While we rejoice in the good-fellowship of this gathering, let us not be forgetful that in this hour of supreme crisis every true American is thoughtful and prayerful for the present, hopeful and confident for the future. It may be well at this trying moment to remember that our ancestors of the Dutch Republic bequeathed us a legacy so large in deeds of loyalty, love of liberty, and hatred of oppression that its benefits have enriched and broadened not only ourselves, but the entire civilized world. That legacy however, was not obtained for us by free gift, but brave Holland earned it by eighty years of heroic warfare on land and sea against proud Spain.

"Without making comparison, offering suggestion, or attempting criticism, may we not here and now hope and pray that the near future will also enrich an island of the sea with a legacy of freedom that shall give to the nations of the earth a sister republic?

Mr. David Van Nostrand, one of the original members of the Society and one of its first trustees, died in 1886. His widow thereafter manifested her interest in the Society by an annual donation to our treasury. She has recently died, and we have received notice from her executors that her will makes a bequest to the Society of one thousand dollars.

With the exception of the churches at Gallatin, New Hurley, and Germantown, N. Y., we have now made copies of all the existing records of the Dutch churches antedating this century. We shall give in the current Year Book a list of all these churches with a schedule of the records transcribed. The manuscript volumes containing these records are in daily request in our Library, Room 801, New York Life Building, 348 Broadway.

Our Thirteenth Annual Banquet, given at the Waldorf-Astoria in January, was the most brilliant and most largely attended of any we have had. Four hundred and twenty-three tickets were sold.

The Rosette or Button authorized at the last Annual Meeting has been designed and manufactured by the Bailey, Banks & Biddle Co., of Philadelphia. It consists of the arms of Holland at the period of our forefathers' emigration—a red lion rampant on an orange field. It is made in two styles,—14-karat gold at $2.75, and in silver gilt at $1, and many members have already ordered it of the Bailey, Banks & Biddle Co., Chestnut and 12th Streets, Philadelphia.

His widow thereafter manifested her interest in the Society by an annual donation to our treasury. She has recently died, and we have received notice from her executors that her will makes a bequest to the Society of one thousand dollars.

With the exception of the churches at Gallatin, New Hurley, and Germantown, N. Y., we have now made copies of all the existing records of the Dutch churches antedating this century. We shall give in the cutrent Year Book a list of all these churches with a schedule of the records transcribed. The manuscript volumes containing these records are in daily request in our Library, Room 801, New York Life Building, 348 Broadway.

Our Thirteenth Annual Banquet, given at the Waldorf-Astoria in January, was the most brilliant and most largely attended of any we have had. Four hundred and twenty-three tickets were sold.

The Rosette or Button authorized at the last Annual Meeting has been designed and manufactured by the Bailey, Banks & Biddle Co., of Philadelphia. It consists of the arms of Holland at the period of our forefathers' emigration—a red lion rampant on an orange field. It is made in two styles,—14-karat gold at $2.75, and in silver gilt at $1, and many members have already ordered it of the Bailey, Banks & Biddle Co., Chestnut and 12th Streets, Philadelphia.

"Mayor Van Wyck, the members of this Society have heretofore extended to you congratulations and greetings as a judge of one of our important courts, later as Mayor of this imperial city, and now, best of all, we congratulate and greet you as President of the Holland Society of New York.

"It only remains for me, as my last and very pleasant official act, to invest you with this badge of office. I thank God that we do not confer regal titles in this land of liberty, nor do we place a crown of royalty upon the brow of any loyal citizen of this Republic. Here all are sovereigns. Merit is our aristocracy, pluck is our primogeniture, equality is our coat of arms. The members of this Society, confident that you possess these qualities, have honored you by a unanimous vote with the royal privilege of wearing this badge, which you will surely do with honor to yourself and your fellow-members.

"Profoundly grateful to the Holland Society for its warm-hearted partiality, I now conclude my official service with a God-bless to our members, a God-speed to our President."

The retiring President then took from around his own neck the orange ribbon with the large golden insignia of office and placed it upon the President-elect. In adjusting it the ribbon became twisted, and Mayor Van Wyck remarked, "Put it on straight! We don't want anything crooked about this administration!"

President Van Wyck then said:

"Fellow members of the Holland Society: I esteem it one of the highest honors and the greatest distinction to be elected President of the Holland Society, an organized body of gentlemen, the descendants of Holland Dutchmen who came here two and a half centuries ago, and representing the successful element in the business and social life in the great city of New York.

Mr. Louis B. Van Gaasbeek offered the following resolutions, which were duly seconded:

Resolved, That the Holland Society of the city of New York, all the members of which are descendants in the direct male line of Dutchmen who were natives or residents of New York or of the American colonies prior to the year sixteen hundred and seventy-five, extend their most hearty and sincere congratulations to Her Majesty, Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands, upon her attaining to her majority on August 31, 1898, and her coronation as Queen at Amsterdam on September 6, 1898.

Resolved, That as the daughter of His Majesty, William III and his Consort, Queen Emma, Princess of Waldeck-Pyrmont, she will worthily rule over the Netherlands, receiving the just applause of all the dwellers within her realm, and adding, during her reign, to the intellectual as well as to the material welfare of the Dutch nation.

Resolved, That a suitably engrossed copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Holland, duly attested by the signatures of the President and Secretary of this Society, and that the same be also spread in full upon the minutes of the Holland Society.

Rev. Dr. J. Howard Suydam, of Rhinebeck, N. Y., speaking upon these resolutions, said that it had appeared to him that it would be a graceful and appropriate act for the Holland Society to take notice of the coronation of the Queen of the Netherlands by sending some gem to her upon that occasion, but the Consul-General of that government in New York, Mr. Planten, informed him that the Queen would decline all presents, and would not receive any delegates from foreign countries, as she considered the coronation as the making of a solemn covenant between herself and her own people. It was stated, however, that a suitable address from the Society might be acceptable. He therefore moved as an amendment the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Rev. Henry Van Dyke, D.D., be requested to prepare an address expressing the congratulations of the Holland Society of New York to Queen Wilhelmina, upon the occasion of her public coronation.

Resolved, that the address be engrossed, sealed, and signed by the officers of the Society and transmitted in due form.

On motion, both of these resolutions were referred to a committee appointed by the Trustees at their last meeting to consider this subject, consisting of Messrs. Robert B. Roosevelt, Tunis G. Bergen, and D. B. St. John Roosa.

The Secretary called attention to the fact that the insignia of the Society bore upon its face the portrait of Philip II, of Spain, with the words (translated) "faithful in all things to the king." He referred to the anomaly of our undertaking to erect a monument to William the Silent while we honored, by wearing his effigy upon our breasts, the memory of the infamous king who had procured by bribery the assassination of the immortal hero. It would be as appropriate, and even more so, for the Sons of the Revolution to place George III on their society's badge, with a pledge of loyalty to him, as for Sons of Hollanders to honor the most fanatical tyrant of the centuries, who, by his infamous instruments, the Duke of Alva and others, tortured to the death tens of thousands of our ancestors. He therefore offered a resolution that a committee of three be appointed to suggest at our next annual meeting a change in the badge of the Society.

Ex-Mayor Elsworth, of Poughkeepsie, opposed the resolution on the ground that our badge was historically correct, being a copy of the badge which was adopted by the early patriots of Holland in their struggle against Spain.

On motion of Mr. William M. Hoes the resolution was laid upon the table.

Judge Van Hoesen on behalf of the Committee on Statue reported that the design hitherto presented by Mr. French, while most excellent, was so costly ($60,000) that it would prevent our attempt to secure the funds for its erection. stated that designs for an equestrian statue had been prepared by another sculptor of this city, Mr. Charles H. Niehaus, models of which were on exhibition in the meeting room, which could be furnished for $30,000 and which he thought would be favorably received. He considered the most desirable site for the statue to be on Riverside Drive at the foot of West 83d Street, and upon his suggestion it was voted that the Committee make application to the municipal authorities to have that plot set aside for the proposed statue.

Rev. Dr. Suydam offered the following resolution which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the present work of the Rev. Dr. E. T. Corwin in Holland in searching out, assorting, transcribing, and translating with the view of publishing what is known as the "Amsterdam Correspondence," being letters which passed between the early Dutch churches of this country and the Synod at Amsterdam, is heartily endorsed by the Holland Society, and we cordially recommend it to the liberality of our members in order that it may secure sufficient additional support to bring it to a successful completion.

On motion of Mr. Warner Van Norden the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Society are due our retiring president, Mr. John W. Vrooman, for his unswerving fidelity to its interests. He has presided with dignity, courtesy, and impartiality, and throughout his administration has worked earnestly and efficiently for the Society's welfare.

JOHN HOLMES VAN BRUNT, of Bay Ridge, died suddenly at Mineola, Long Island, September 26, 1896. While waiting for a Long Island train he was suddenly taken ill and carried to a sofa in the hotel parlor, where he died a few minutes later.

Mr. Van Brunt was born in the old Van Brunt homestead, now the site of the Crescent A. C. Club-house on Shore Road. He was a descendant of one of the earliest and most prominent settlers on Long Island, and was a brother of Chief Justice Charles H. Van Brunt, of the Supreme Court. His father was the late Albert N. Van Brunt.

Mr. Van Brunt was well known in horse circles. He was a regular attendant of the Mineola Fair, and always had five or six good trotters. He was of a robust physique, and had hardly known a day's sickness during his life. He was one of the organizers of the Fort Hamilton Reformed Chapel forty years ago. This chapel formed the nucleus of the Bay Ridge Reformed Church organized last May, and Mr. Van Brunt was one of the large contributors to the new edifice. The deceased was married twice. WILLIAM JAMES VAN ARSDALE was born in Sullivan County, N. Y., October 28, 1834. He became a member of the Society April 6, 1886, and died April 30, 1897. He came to New York City in early boyhood, and was graduated from one of our public schools. He always took deep interest in the public schools of the city, and for many years was a trustee of the schools in the ninth ward, where he was known as the teachers' helper and the children's friend.

For more than forty years he was connected with the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, in later times in a confidential capacity in direct touch with the president of the corporation.

At his funeral services his pastor said: "In all his long business record there is not a stain—his hands are clean. His name and history will bear the keenest search-light investigation; whether it be concerning the councils of his employers, or financial trusts committed to his care, it is the same,—his faithfulness to duty and fidelity to the trust reposed in him were manifest to all who knew him, and most conspicuous to those who knew him best."

ALBERT HOYSRADT, who joined the Society October 27, 1887, died at Hudson, Columbia County, N. Y., December 8, 1897, in the forty-third year of his age. He was born at Hudson, February 19, 1855, the eldest son of Jacob W. Hoysradt, also a late member of the Society, and a very prominent citizen of his city, county, and State, whose obituary notice may be found in the Year Book for 1891.

Albert Hoysradt was prepared for college in the High School of his native city, and at Williston Seminary, East Hampton, Mass., and entered the Freshman class at Yale University in 1873. A severe attack of typhoid fever during his first year at college, necessitating his return home for six months, prevented him from attaining the highest honors at Commencement. He was very popular with his class, as shown by his election to the Skull and Bones Society.

He graduated June 28, 1877, and on July 10th following, married Miss Alice Gifford, of an old Nantucket and Hudson family, niece of the late Sanford R. Gifford, the famous landscape painter. He then commenced the study of law at Hudson, was clerk of the Surrogate's Court, and on September 5, 1879, was admitted to the Bar; he then went into partnership with his preceptor, Hon. John Cadman, ex-County Judge. In 1879, at the age of twenty four, he was elected Recorder of the city, the presiding officer and the legal adviser of the common council; in 1881 he was re-elected without opposition, serving four years, and being the youngest man elected to the office in the city's history. Soon after he was offered the nomination for mayor of the city, but declined. In the fall of 1883 he was the Republican candidate for County Judge, but was defeated. In the same year he was appointed by Brigadier-General Robert Shaw Oliver, Judge-Advocate in the Fifth Brigade, National Guard, State of New York, with the rank of major, which position he held until 1890.

But this young life, so full of promise, was now shadowed by a cloud, which slowly, but surely darkened until the end.

By the death of his father, November 15, 1890, the management of a large estate, of an extensive and intricate business, and of numerous and delicate trusts devolved upon him. These labors, added to his arduous work in his profession, overtaxed his powers, and the first symptoms of brain trouble manifested themselves. Very gradually paresis became evident, and he was obliged to give up his profession. For more than a year he was confined to his house, and most of that time to his bed. At length death brought relief to his sufferings. His widow and four children, three daughters and a son, survive him.

Beside his connection with the Holland Society, Mr. Hoysradt was a member of the University, Union League, and Lawyers' Clubs and of the Yale Alumni Association, all of New York City.

JEREMIAH JOHNSON, Jr., died February 14, 1898, in Thomasville, Ga., of apoplexy. He had been South for three weeks for his health, which had been poor ever since last September, when he gave up active business.

He was born in 1827 in the old Johnson homestead, in what is now the nineteenth ward of Brooklyn, and near where the Naval Hospital now stands. His great-grandfather served in the Revolutionary War as an officer in the Kings County militia, and his grandfather, Major-Gen. Jeremiah Johnson, was a statesman, soldier, scholar, and churchman, who was three times Mayor of Brooklyn, and was elected four times to the State Legislature, and during the latter part of the war of 1812 he commanded the troops stationed at Fort Greene, Brooklyn.

Upon attaining his majority, Jeremiah Johnson, Jr., engaged in the lumber business, which he left in 1866 to become a real-estate broker and auctioneer. In the selling of home-sites on the outskirts

Since that time Mr. Johnson had been a well-known operator in the real-estate business, having disposed by auction of more than two hundred thousand suburban lots, representing many millions of dollars, as well as much city real estate. About thirty-five years ago he was superintendent of the Lee Avenue Congregational Sunday school, which at that time was one of the largest and most noted in the country, attracting visitors from everywhere.

MAJOR JACOB H. TEN EYCK died suddenly at his home on State Street, Albany, March 24, 1898, shortly after returning from the Fort Orange Club, where he spent the early evening. Major Ten Eyck was a descendant of Coenraedt Ten Eyck, who came from Amsterdam, Holland, to New York City about 1650, and was a tanner. The words "Ten Eyck" mean "from the oak," the oak being the family coat of arms. Herman Ten Eyck, of Albany (where the family settled about 1690), was born there in 1793, and died May 17, 1861, about ten years after he retired from the dry-goods business, in which he was long engaged with an elder brother under the firm name of Jacob H. Ten Eyck & Co. Herman Ten Eyck married, in 1821, Eliza Bogart, of Geneva, N. Y., who died in 1853, leaving two daughters and an only son. Jacob H. Ten Eyck, the deceased, the son, who was the last living male representative of this branch of the family, was born in Albany August 17, 1833, attended the Albany Academy and for a few years was a clerk in a bank. In 1856 he went to Cuba, and spent three years in railroading. Returning to Albany, he raised, in 1861, Co. THE QUEEN OF HOLLAND.

"Paris is in love with the Queen of the Netherlands; and no wonder. She personifies life's delightful morn as it never was before upon a throne. Wilhelmina seems rich in that joy of life which constantly eluded her two brothers. She promises to carry her sceptre as she might bear a rose. Her carriage is singularly free, and gives the imrepssion of growth still going on. She is very well formed, has well-shaped features, a complexion that would beautify any face, fine blue eyes, and golden hair that forms a nimbus round her head. One can see that she is sensitive and impressionable. But the placid conditions of life in the Netherlands have not weighed on her. Great care was taken to develop bodily strength. She skates as only a Dutch girl can, is an accomplished equestrian, plays lawn-tennis, and is up to all the athletic accomplishments of a girl of the period, save cycling. The line was drawn at the bike, which was thought undignified and dangerous. One can hardly suppose she would take it up after her swearing-in as sovereign. This ceremony will come off in September, and the most worthy Regent will step from before the young Queen to her side.
