PREFACE.

This volume has been prepared in response to the prevailing and popular demand for the preservation of local history and biography. The method of preparation followed is the most successful and the most satisfactory yet devised—the most successful in the enormous number of volumes circulated, and the most satisfactory in the general preservation of personal biography and family record conjointly with local history. The number of volumes now being distributed seems fabulous. Careful estimates place the number circulated in Ohio at 50,000 volumes; Pennsylvania, 60,000; New York, 75,000; Indiana, 40,000; Illinois, 40,000; Iowa, 35,000; Missouri, 25,000; Minnesota, 15,000; Nebraska, 15,000, and all the other States at the same proportionate rate. The southern half of Missouri has as yet scarcely been touched by the historian, but is now being rapidly written.

The design of the present extensive historical and biographical research is more to gather and preserve in attractive form, while fresh with the evidence of truth, the enormous fund of perishing occurrence, than to abstract from insufficient contemporaneous data remote, doubtful or incorrect conclusions. The true perspective of the landscape of life can only be seen from the distance that lends enchantment to the view. It is asserted that no person is competent to write a philosophical history of his own time; that, owing to imperfect and conflicting circumstantial evidence, that yet conceals, instead of reveals, the truth, he cannot take that correct, unprejudiced, logical, luminous and comprehensive view of passing events that will enable him to draw accurate and enduring conclusions. The duty, then, of an historian of his own time is to collect, classify and preserve the material for the final historian, of the future. The present historian deals in fact; the future historian, in conclusion. The work of the former is statistical; of the latter, philosophical.

To him who has not attempted the collection of historical data, the obstacles to be surmounted are unknown. Doubtful traditions, conflicting statements, imperfect records, inaccurate public and private correspondence, the bias or untruthfulness of informers, and the general obscurity which, more or less, envelops all passing events, combine to bewilder and mislead. The publishers of this volume, fully aware of their inability to furnish a perfect history, an accomplishment vouchsafed to the imagination only of the dreamer or the theorist, make no pretension of having prepared a work devoid of blemish. They feel assured that all thoughtful people, at present and in future, will recognize and appreciate the importance of their undertaking, and the great public benefit that has been accomplished.

In the preparation of this volume the publishers have met with nothing but courtesy and assistance from the public. The subscription list was smaller than the publishers hoped and expected to receive; and although the margin of profit was thus cut down to the lowest limit, no curtailment or omission of matter was made from the original extensive design of the work. No subject promised is omitted, and many not promised are given. The number of pages given (1,215) exceeds the number promised (700) by over 500—a volume alone. The extreme difficulty of securing the correct spelling of French and German proper names, must be the excuse of the publishers for the few mistakes of that character to be found in this volume. In all cases the personal sketches have been submitted by mail, and in most cases have been corrected and approved by the subjects themselves. The publishers disclaim responsibility for the substance of the matter contained in the Biographical Appendix, as the material was wholly furnished by the subjects of the sketches. This volume is one of the most important and valuable of many ever issued by the publishers. The history proper possesses unusual literary merit. The student of local history will find therein an account of many important events connected with the early French settlement of Southeast Missouri never before published and not known to exist. This matter has been collated at great labor and expense, and has already attracted the attention of historical societies throughout the United States and Canada. The historians of the publishers have been materially assisted by the leading citizens of every county, scores of whom deserve special mention for interest shown and assistance rendered. Particular acknowledgments are due Louis Houck and Judge Wilson, of Cape Girardeau, Linus Sanford of Jackson, and Gen. Rozier and Mrs. Menard of Ste. Genevieve. With many thanks to our friends for the success of our difficult enterprise, we respectfully tender this fine volume to our patrons.

August, 1888.

HISTORY OF MISSOURI.

INTRODUCTORY.

MISSOURI, the eighth State of the Union in size, the seventh in wealth, and the fifth in population and political power, lies in the very heart of the Mississippi Valley. Extending from the thirty-sixth nearly to the forty-first degree of north latitude, it has considerable diversity both of soil and climate.

Its eastern limit is marked from north to south by the great "Father of Waters," and the Missouri washes its western boundary, from the northwest corner southward about 250 miles to the mouth of the Kansas, and thence flows south of east through the heart of the State, and joins its muddy torrent with the waters of the Mississippi. These two mighty rivers have many tributaries which are, to a greater or less extent, navigable for steamboats, keelboats and barges.

The extreme length of the State is 328 miles; the extreme breadth, in the southern part, is 280 miles; and the average breadth 250 miles. Missouri has an area of 65,350 square miles, or 41,824,000 acres. It has 18,350 more square miles than the State of New York, is nearly nine times the size of Massachusetts, and exceeds in extent all of the New England States combined.

There is no State in the Union which surpasses Missouri in respect to geographical situation and natural resources. Other regions may boast of delightful climate, rich and productive soil, abundant timber, or inexhaustible mineral deposits, but Missouri has all of these. She has more and better iron than England and quite as much coal, while her lead deposits are rivaled by that of no other country of equal area upon the globe.

NOTE.—In the compilation of the State History the authors consulted, among others, the following authorities: "State Geological Reports;" "Charlevoix's Journal of a Voyage to North America in 1721;" Stoddard's "Historical Sketches of Louisiana;" Schoolcraft's "Narrative Journal;" H. M. Brackenridge's "Views of Louisiana;" Pike's "Expedition;" Switzler's "History of Missouri;" Bradbury's "Travels;" Silliman's Journal;" "American Cyclopaedia;" Beck's "Gazetteer of Indiana and Missouri," 1823; Wetmore's "Gazetteer of Missouri," 1837; Shebard's "Early History of St. Louis and Missouri;" Parker's "Missouri As It Is in 1867;" Davis & Durrile's "History of Missouri," 1876.

The population of the State, according to the census of 1880, was 2,168,380, showing an increase of 25.9 per cent within the preceding decade.

GEOLOGY, PHYSICAL FEATURES, ETC.

The stratified rocks of Missouri may be classified as follows, enumerating them from the surface downward:

I. Quaternary or Post Tertiary.—Alluvium, 30 feet thick. Soils—Pebbles and sand, clays, vegetable mold or humus, bog iron ore, calcareous tufa, stalactites and stalagmites, marls; bottom prairie, 35 feet thick; bluff, 200 feet thick; drift, 155 feet thick.

II. Tertiary.—Clays, shales, iron ores, sandstone, fine and coarse sands.

III. Cretaceous.—No. 1, 13 feet, argillaceous variegated sandstone; No. 2, 20 feet, soft bluish brown sandy slate, containing quantities of iron pyrites; No. 3, 25 feet, whitish brown impure sandstone, banded with purple and pink; No. 4, 45 feet, slate, like No. 2; No. 5, 45 feet, fine white siliceous clay, interstratified with white flint, more or less spotted and banded with pink and purple; No. 6, 10 feet, purple, red and blue clays. Entire thickness, 158 feet.

IV. Carboniferous.—Upper carboniferous or coal measures, sandstone, limestone, shales, clays, marls, spathic iron ores, coals. VII. Azoic Rocks.

The Quaternary rocks, the most recent of all the formations, contain the entire geological record of all the cycles from the end of the Tertiary period to the present time; and their economical value is also greater than that of all the other formations combined. This system comprises the drift and all the deposits above it. There are, within the system, four distinct and strongly defined formations in the State, namely: Alluvium, bottom prairie, bluff and drift.

Soils.—Soils are a compound of pulverized and decomposed mineral substances, mingled with decayed vegetable and animal remains, and containing all the ingredients necessary to the sustenance of the vegetable kingdom. The soils of Missouri have been produced by the mixing of organic matter with the pulverized marls, clays and sands of the Quaternary deposits which are found in great abundance in nearly all parts of the State, and are of material best designed for their rapid formation. For this cause the soils of the State are marvelously deep and productive, except in a few localities where the materials of the Quaternary strata are very coarse, or entirely wanting.

Clays.—Clays are dark, bluish-gray strata, more or less mixed with particles of flint, limestone and decomposed organic matter. When the floods of the Mississippi and the Missouri subside, lagoons, sloughs and lakes are left full of turbid water. The coarser substances soon subside into a stratum of sand, but the finer particles settle more slowly and form the silico-calcareous clays of the alluvial bottom. Thus, after each flood, strata of sand and clay are deposited, until the lakes and lagoons are filled up.

Then a stratum of humus, or decayed vegetable matter, is formed by the decomposition of the annual growth and of the foreign matter which falls into the water, and every succeeding crop of vegetation adds another such stratum. Thus are rapidly formed thick beds of vegetable mold, yielding support to the magnificent forest trees which grow upon the sites of those ancient lakes and morasses. In this manner have been formed the vast, alluvial plains bordering upon the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, which comprise about 4,000,000 acres of land, based upon these strata of sand, clays, marls and humus. The soil formed upon these alluvial beds is deep, rich and light almost beyond comparison, and is constantly increasing by the filling up of lake and sloughs as above described.

The Bluff or Loess occurs in the Missouri bluffs forming a belt several miles wide, extending from the mouth of the Missouri to the northwest corner of the State, where it is found beneath the soil, and also in the bluffs of the Mississippi from Dubuque to the mouth of the Ohio. Thus while the bottom prairie occupies a higher geological horizon, the bluff is usually several hundred feet above it topographically. The latter is generally a finely comminuted, siliceous marl, of a light brown color, and often weathers into perpendicular escarpments. Concretions of limestone are often found, and to the marly character of these clays may be ascribed the richness of the overlying soil. It is to this formation that the Central Mississippi and Southern Missouri valleys owe their superiority in agriculture. Where it is best developed in Western Missouri the soil is equal to any in the country.

Drift formation exists throughout Northern Missouri. The upper members consist of stiff, tenaceous, brown, drab and blue clays, often mottled and sometimes containing rounded pebbles, chiefly of granite rocks. The lower division includes beds of dark blue clay, often hardening on exposure, frequently overlaid and sometimes interstratified with beds and pockets of sand, sometimes inclosing leaves and remains of trees. Good springs originate in these sand beds, and when they are ferruginous the springs are chalybeate.

Tertiary System.—A formation made up of clays, shales, iron ores, sandstone, and a variety of fine and coarse sand, extends along the bluffs, skirting the bottoms, from Commerce, in Scott County, westward to Stoddard, and thence south to the Chalk Bluffs in Arkansas.

The iron ore of these beds is very abundant and exceedingly valuable. The spathic ore has been found in no other locality in Southeastern Missouri, so that the large quantity and excellent quality of these beds will render them very valuable for the various purposes to which this ore is peculiarly adapted.

The white sand of these beds is available for glass making, and for the composition of mortars and cements. The clays are well adapted to the manufacture of pottery and stoneware.

Cretaceous Rocks.—These strata are very much disturbed, fractured, upheaved and tilted, so as to form various faults and axes, anticlinal and synclinal; while the strata, above described as tertiary, are in their natural position, and rest nonconformably upon these beds. In these so-called cretaceous rocks no fossils have been observed.

Carboniferous Rocks.—This system presents two important divisions: The upper carboniferous, or coal measures; and the lower carboniferous, or mountain limestone.

The coal measures, as seen by the table, are composed of numerous strata of sandstone, limestone, shales, clays, marls, spathic iron ores and coals. About 2,000 feet of these coal measures have been found to contain numerous beds of iron ore, and at least eight or ten beds of good, workable coal. Investigation shows a greater downward thickness of the coal formation in Southwest Missouri, including beds whose position is probably below those of the northern part of the State. These rocks, with the accompanying beds of coal and iron, cover an area of more than 27,000 square miles in Missouri alone.

The geological map of the State shows that if a line were roughly drawn from Clark County on the northeast to Jasper County in the southwest, most of the counties northwest of this line, together with Audrain, Howard and Boone, would be included in the coal measure. There are also extensive coal beds in Cole, Moniteau, St. Charles, St. Louis and Callaway Counties.

The Missouri coal basin is one of the largest in the world, including besides the 27,000 square miles in Missouri, 10,000 in Nebraska; 12,000 in Kansas; 20,000 in Iowa, and 30,000 in Illinois; making a total of about 100,000 square miles.

The fossils of the coal measure are numerous, and distinct from those of any other formation. This latter fact has led to the discovery of the existence of coal measures and the coal beds contained in them, over an area of many thousand miles, where it had been supposed that no coal measures and no coal existed.

Of the lower carboniferous rocks, the upper Archimedes limestone is developed in Ste. Genevieve County.

The ferruginous sandstone is generally found along the eastern and southern limit of the coal fields, passing beneath the coal formation on the west. It varies from a few feet to 100 feet in thickness. In Callaway it occurs both as a pure white sandstone, a ferruginous sandstone, and a conglomerate. In Pettis and Howard Counties it is found a coarse, whitish sandstone; in Cedar, Dade and Lawrence, a very ferruginous sandstone, often containing valuable deposits of iron ore. In Newton County it occurs in useful flaglike layers.

The St. Louis limestone, next in descending order, forms the entire group of limestone at St. Louis, where it is well marked and of greater thickness than seen elsewhere in this State. It is more often fine grained, compact or sub-crystalline, sometimes inclosing numerous chert concretions, and the beds are often separated by thin, green shale beds.

Its stratigraphical position is between the ferruginous sandstone and the Archimedes limestone, as seen near the Des Moines, and near the first tunnel on the Pacific Railroad. It is found in Clark and Lewis Counties, but, as has been said, attains its greatest development at St. Louis—hence its name.

The most characteristic fossils yet described are Palæochinus multipora, Lithostrocion canadense, Echinoerinus nereis, Poteriocrinus longidactylus and Atrypa lingulata.

The lower Archimedes limestone includes the "arenaceous bed," the "Warsaw, or second Archimedes limestone," the magnesian limestone, the "Geode bed," the "Keokuk, or lower Archimedes limestone" of Prof. Hall's section, and the lead-bearing rocks of Southwestern Missouri; which last, though different from any of the above beds, are more nearly allied to them than to the encrinital limestone below. All of the above beds are easily recognized in Missouri, except, perhaps, the Warsaw limestone, which is but imperfectly represented in our northeastern counties, where the "Keokuk limestone," the "Geode beds," and the magnesian limestone are well developed.

This formation extends from the northeastern part of the State to the southwest, in an irregular belt, skirting the eastern border of the ferruginous sandstone. The extensive and rich lead deposits of Southwestern Missouri are partly in this formation, these mines occupying an area of more than 100 square miles, in Jasper, Newton, and the adjoining counties.

The upper beds of encrinital limestone are gray and cherty. The top beds in St. Charles County include seventeen feet of thin chert beds with alternate layers of red clay. The middle beds are generally gray and coarse, the lower ones gray and brown, with some buff beds.

Crinoid stems are common in nearly all the beds, hence it has been appropriately termed encrinital limestone.

The lower beds often abound in well preserved crinoidea. This rock occurs at Burlington, Iowa, Quincy, Ill., Hannibal and Louisiana, Mo., and is well exposed in most of the counties on the Mississippi River, north of St. Louis, and from the western part of St. Charles to Howard County. South of the Missouri River and along its southwest outcrop it is not generally well developed.

In Greene County it is quite cavernous. It has not been recognized east of Illinois, and is not separated from other carboniferous stones of Tennessee.

The Devonian Rocks occupy a small area in Marion, Ralls, Pike, Callaway, Saline and Ste. Genevieve Counties; also narrow belts along the carboniferous strata to the south and west.

In the Chemung group, the Chouteau limestone, when fully developed, is in two divisions.

Immediately under the encrinital limestone, at the top of the formation, there are forty or fifty feet of brownish gray, earthy, silico-magnesian limestone in thick beds, which contain scattered masses of white or transparent calcareous spar.

The upper division of the Chouteau limestone passes down into a fine, compact, blue or drab, thin-bedded limestone, whose strata are considerably irregular and broken. In the northeastern part of the State the Chouteau limestone is represented only by a few feet of coarse, earthy, crystalline, calcareous rock, like the lower division of the encrinital limestone.

Vermicular Sandstone and Shales.—The sandstones of this division are generally soft and calcareous. They are easily recognized, being ramified by irregular windings throughout, resembling the borings of worms. This formation attains a thickness of seventy-five feet near Louisiana, in Pike County. It is seen in Ralls, Pike, Lincoln, Cedar and Greene.

The lithographic limestone is a fine grained, compact limestone, breaking with a free conchoidal fracture into sharp, angular fragments. Its color varies from a light drab to the lighter shades of buff and blue. It gives out, when struck with the hammer, a sharp, ringing sound, and is therefore called "pot metal" in some parts of the State. It is regularly stratified in beds varying from two to sixteen inches in thickness, and often presents, as in the mural bluffs at Louisiana, on the Mississippi, all the regularity of masonry.

Where elsewhere seen, it somewhat resembles the upper beds of the group. At Taborville, St. Clair County, it is of a salmon drab color, occurring in thick beds having an open texture, and contains a characteristic fossil—Pentremites Rœmeri. This limestone is found in Pike, Ralls, St. Clair, Cedar and Greene Counties.

The Hamilton Group.—This is made up of some forty feet of blue shales, and 107 feet of semi-crystalline limestone, containing Dalmania, Calliteles, Phacops bufo, Spirifer mucronatus, S. Sculptilis, S. Congesta, Chonetes carinata and Favosites basaltica. The Hamilton group is found in Ralls, Pike, Lincoln, Warren, Montgomery, Callaway, Boone, Cole and probably Moniteau; also in Perry and Ste. Genevieve.

Onondaga Limestone is usually a coarse gray or buff, crystalline, thick bedded and cherty limestone, abounding in Terebratula, Reticularis, Orthis resupinata, Chonetes nana, Productus subaculeatus, Spirifer eurysteus, Phacops bufo, Cyathophyllum rugosum, Emmonsia hemispherica, and a Pentamerus like galeatus. Generally it is coarse, gray and crystalline; often somewhat compact, bluish and concretionary, having cavities filled with green matter or calspar; occasionally it is a white saccharoidal sandstone; in a few localities a soft, brown sandstone, and at Louisiana a pure white oölite.

Oriskany Sandstone.—In spite of its name, this is a light gray limestone, containing the Spirifer arenosa, Leptoma depressa, and several new species of Spirifer, Chonetes Illcenus and Lichas.

Silurian Rocks are divided into upper and lower silurian. Of the former are the following: The lower Helderberg group, which is made up of buff, gray, and reddish cherty, and argillaceous limestones, blue shales, and dark graptolite slates. The Cape Girardeau limestone, found on the Mississippi River, about a mile above Cape Girardeau, is a compact, bluish gray, frangible limestone, with a smooth fracture, in layers from two to six inches in thickness, with thin argillaceous partings.

There are at least ten formations belonging to the lower silurian series. There are three distinct formations of the Hudson River group, as follows: First—Immediately below the oölite of the Onondaga limestone, in the bluffs both above and below St. Louis, there are forty feet of blue, gray and brown argillaceous, magnesian limestone. Above, these shales are in thick beds, showing a dull, conchoidal fracture. Below, the division becomes more argillaceous, and has thin beds of bluish gray crystalline limestone. Second—Three and one half miles northwest of Louisiana, on the Grassy River, some sixty feet of blue and purple shales are exposed below the beds above described. Third—Under the last named division are, perhaps, twenty feet of argillo-magnesian limestone resembling that in the first division, and interstratified with blue shales. These rocks crop out in Ralls, Pike, Cape Girardeau and Ste. Genevieve Counties. On the Grassy, a thickness of 120 feet is exposed, and they extend to an unknown depth.

Trenton Limestone.—The upper portion of this formation comprises thick beds of compact, bluish gray and drab limestone, abounding in irregular cavities, filled with a greenish substance. The lower beds abound in irregular cylindrical pieces, which quickly decompose upon exposure to the air, and leave the rocks perforated with irregular holes, resembling those made in timber by the Toredo navalis. These beds are exposed between Hannibal and New London, north of Salt River, and near Glencoe, St. Louis County. They are about seventy-five feet thick. Below them are thick strata of impure, coarse, gray and buff crystalline magnesian limestone, containing brown, earthy portions, which quickly crumble on exposure to the elements. The bluffs on Salt River are an example of these strata. The lowest part of the Trenton limestone is composed of hard, blue and bluish-gray, semi-compact, silico-magnesian limestone, interstratified with soft, earthy, magnesian beds of a light buff and drab color. Fifty feet of these strata crop out at the quarries south of the plank road bridge over Salt River, and on Spencer's Creek in Ralls County. The middle beds sometimes develop a beautiful white crystalline marble, as at Cape Girardeau and near Glencoe.

The Black River and Birdseye limestones are often in even layers; the lower beds have sometimes mottled drab and reddish shades, often affording a pretty marble. Near the base this rock is often traversed by vermicular cavities and cells. These may be seen from Cape Girardeau to Lincoln, and in St. Charles, Warren and Montgomery Counties, thinning out in the latter.

The First Magnesian Limestone is generally a buff, open-textured, thick and even-bedded limestone, breaking readily under the hammer, and affording a useful building rock. Shumard estimated its thickness in Ste. Genevieve County to be about 150 feet. In Warren County, in North Missouri, it is seventy feet thick. It is found in Ralls, Pike, Lincoln, St. Charles, Warren, Callaway and Boone. Southwesterly, it is not well marked—indeed it seems to be absent in some counties where, in regular sequence, it should be found. It occurs in Franklin, St. Louis, and southwardly to Cape Girardeau County.

Saccharoidal Sandstone is usually a bed of white friable sandstone, sometimes slightly tinged with red and brown, which is made up of globular concretions and angular fragments of limpid quartz. The formation is well developed in Lincoln, St. Charles, Warren, Montgomery, Gasconade, Franklin, St. Louis, Jefferson, Ste. Genevieve, Perry and Cape Girardeau Counties. Besides the above, it is also developed in a more attenuated form in Callaway, Osage, Cole, Moniteau and Boone. This sandstone is probably destined to be one of the most useful rocks found in Missouri. It is generally of a very white color, and the purest sandstone found in the State, and is suitable for making the finest glassware. Its great thickness makes it inexhaustible. In St. Charles and Warren Counties it is 133 feet thick, and in Southeast Missouri over 100 feet thick.

The Second Magnesian Limestone occurs in all the river counties south of Pike as far as the swamps of Southeast Missouri, and is more often the surface rock in all the counties south of the Missouri and Osage Rivers, to within fifty miles of the western line of the State. It is generally composed of beds of earthy magnesian limestone, interstratified with shale beds and layers of white chert, with occasionally thin strata of white sandstone, and, near the lower part, thick cellular silico-magnesian limestone beds. The layers are more often of irregular thickness, and not very useful for building purposes. It is often a lead-bearing rock, and most of the lead of Cole County occurs in it. It is from 175 to 200 feet thick.

The second sandstone is usually a brown or yellowish-brown, fine-grained sandstone, distinctly stratified in regular beds, varying from two to eighteen inches in thickness. The surfaces are often ripple-marked and micaceous. It is sometimes quite friable, though generally sufficiently indurated for building purposes. The upper part is often composed of thin strata of light, soft and porous, semi-pulverulent, sandy chert or hornstone, whose cavities are usually lined with limpid crystals of quartz.

The Third Magnesian Limestone.—This also is an important member, occurring in nearly all the counties of Southern Missouri. It is generally a thick-bedded, coarsely crystalline bluish gray, or flesh-colored magnesian limestone, with occasional thick chert beds. It is the chief lead-bearing rock of Southeast and Southern Missouri. In some counties it is as much as 300 feet thick.

The third sandstone is a white, saccharoidal sandstone, made up of slightly-cohering, transparent, globular and angular particles of siliceous matter. It shows but little appearance of stratification.

The Fourth Magnesian Limestone.—This formation presents more permanent and uniform lithological characters than any other of the magnesian limestones. It is ordinarily a coarse-grained, crystalline, magnesian limestone, grayish-buff in color, containing a few crevices filled with less indurated, siliceous matter. Its thick, uniform beds contain but little chert. The best exposures of this formation are on the Niangua and Osage Rivers.

This magnesian limestone series is very interesting, both from a scientific and an economical standpoint. It covers a large part of Southern and Southeastern Missouri, is remarkable for its numerous and important caves and springs, and comprises nearly all the vast deposits of lead, zinc, copper, cobalt, the limonite ores of iron, and nearly all the marble beds of the State. The lower part of the first magnesian limestone, the saccharoidal sandstone, the second magnesian limestone, the second sandstone, and the upper part of the third magnesian limestone belong, without doubt, to the age of the calciferous sand rock; but the remainder of the series to the Potsdam sandstone.

Azoic Rocks.—Below the rocks of the silurian system is a series of siliceous and other slates, which present no remains of organic life; we therefore refer them to the Azoic age of the geologist. They contain some of the beds of specular iron. In Pilot Knob appears a good exposition of these Azoic strata. The lower fossiliferous rocks rest non-conformably on these strata.

Igneous and Metamorphic Rocks.—Aside from the stratified rocks of Missouri, there is a series of rounded knobs and hills in St. Francois, Iron, Dent and the neighboring counties, which are composed of granite, porphyry, diorite and greenstone. These igneous and metamorphic rocks contain some of those remarkable beds of specular iron of which Iron and Shepherd Mountains are samples. This iron ore often occurs in regular veins in the porphyry.

Historical Geology.—When North America began to emerge from the primeval ocean, Pilot Knob, Shepherd Mountain and the neighboring heights were among the first bodies of land that reared themselves above the surrounding waters. When Pilot Knob thus grew into an island, it stood alone in the ocean waste, except that to the northwest the Black Hills, to the northeast a part of the Alleghany system, and to the southwest a small cluster of rocks lifted their heads out of the flood. These islands were formed in the Azoic seas by mighty internal convulsions that forced up the porphyry and granite, the slates and iron beds of the great ore mountains of Missouri.

Coal.—Missouri's coal fields underlie an area of nearly 25,000 square miles, including about 160 square miles in St. Louis County, eight square miles in St. Charles, and some important outliers and pockets, which are mainly cannel coal, in Lincoln, Warren and Callaway Counties. This area includes some 8,400 square miles of upper coal measures, 2,000 square miles of exposed middle, and about 14,600 square miles of exposed lower measures.

The upper coal measures contain about four feet of coal, including two seams of one foot each in thickness, the others being thin seams or streaks.

The middle coal measures contain about seven feet of coal, including two workable seams of twenty-one and twenty-four inches, one other of one foot, that is worked under favorable circumstances, and six thin seams.

The lower measures contain about five workable seams of coal, varying in thickness from eighteen inches to four and one-half feet, thin seams varying from six to eleven inches, and several minor seams and streaks, in all, thirteen feet six inches of coal. We therefore have in Missouri a total aggregate of twenty-four feet six inches of coal. The thinner seams are not often mined, except in localities distant from railroad transportation.

All beds over eighteen inches thick are workable coals. The area where such may be reached within 200 feet from the surface is about 7,000 square miles. Most of the State underlain by the coal measure is rich farming land. That underlain by the upper measure includes the richest, which is equal to any upon the globe. The southeastern boundary of the coal measure has been traced from the mouth of the Des Moines through Clark, Louis, Scotland, Adair, Macon, Shelby, Monroe, Audrain, Callaway, Boone, Cooper, Pettis, Benton, Henry, St. Clair, Bates, Vernon, Cedar, Dade, Barton, and Jasper Counties into the Indian Territory, and every county on the northwest of this line is known to contain more or less coal. Great quantities exist in Johnson, Pettis, Lafayette, Cass, Chariton, Howard, Putnam and Audrain. Outside the coal fields, as given above, the regular coal rocks also exist in Ralls, Montgomery, Warren, St. Charles, Callaway and St. Louis, and local deposits of cannel and bituminous coal in Moniteau, Cole, Morgan, Crawford, Lincoln and Callaway. In 1865 Prof. Swallow estimated the amount of good available coal in the State at 134,000,000,000 tons. Since then numerous other developments have been made, and that estimate is found to be far too small.

Lead.—This mineral occurs in lodes, veins and disseminations, which are, as yet, only partially determined. Enough, however, is known of the number, extent, dip and thickness of these deposits to show that their range and richness exceed those of any other lead-bearing region in the world.

Galena occurs in this State in ferruginous clay, that becomes jointed, or separates into distinct masses, quite regular in form when taken out and partially dried; also in regular cubes, in gravel beds, or with cherty masses in the clays associated with the same. These cubes in some localities show the action of attrition, while in others they are entirely unworn. Lead is found in the carboniferous rocks, but perhaps the greater portion is obtained from the magnesian rocks of the lower silurian, and in one or two localities galena has been discovered in the rocks of the Azoic period. At Dugals, Reynolds County, lead is found in a disseminated condition in the porphyry.

The Southeast Lead District.—The Mine La Motte region was discovered about 1720 by La Motte and Renault. Not until this territory was ceded to Spain was considerable mining for lead done in this part of Missouri. Moses Austin, of Virginia, secured from the Spanish Government a large grant of land near Potosi, and sunk the first regular shaft, and, after taking out large quantities of lead, erected, in 1879, the first reverberatory furnace for the reduction of lead ever built in America.

In all this region are found crystallized cubes of galena in the tallow clay, occurring as float. In Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Counties galena is found in ferruginous clay and coarse gravel, often associated with small masses of brown hematite iron and the sulphuret of iron, sometimes lying in small cavities or pockets.

The Virginia mine in Franklin County has produced by far the greater portion of lead from this section.

At the Webster mines the silicate and carbonate of zinc are found always accompanying the lead. At the Valle mines silicate of zinc and baryta occur, as well as hematite iron ore. The Mammoth mine was a succession of caves, in which millions of pounds of lead were found adhering to the sides and roof, and on the bottom was mixed with clay and baryta.

The Frumet or Einstein mines are the most productive ever opened in Jefferson County, and yield also large quantities of zinc ore. There are other valuable mines, in some of which silver has been found.

In Washington County lead mining has been carried on, uninterruptedly, for a greater length of time, and more acres of land have been dug over that have produced lead than in any other county in the State.

In St. Francois County lead deposits are found in the ferruginous clay and gravel. These mines formerly produced many millions of pounds, but have not been extensively worked for many years.

Over portions of Madison County considerable lead is found in the clay. There is lead in several locations in Iron County. In Wayne, Carter, Reynolds and Crawford Counties lead has been found.

Ste. Genevieve has a deposit of lead known as the Avon mines on Mineral Fork, where mining and smelting have been prosecuted for many years. In this vicinity lead has also been found as "float" in several places.

Lead exists in the small streams in several places in the western part of Cape Girardeau County.

In the region above described at least 2,000 square miles are underlaid with lead, upon which territory galena can be found almost anywhere, either in the clay, gravel openings, or in a disseminated condition.

The Central Lead District comprises the counties of Cole, Cooper, Moniteau, Morgan, Miller, Benton, Maries, Camden and Osage. During later years the lead development of Cole County has been more to the northwestern corner, passing into Moniteau and Cooper Counties. In the former several valuable mines have been opened.

The West diggings have been extensively developed and proved rich. The mineral is found in connected cubes in limestone rock, and lies in lodes and pockets. Lead has been found in several places in Cooper and Osage Counties. The later discoveries in that vicinity, although not yet fully developed, give promise of great richness.

Camden County possesses considerable deposits of lead; a number of mines having been successfully worked, and, as the entire northern portion of the county is underlaid with the magnesian limestone formation, it may be discovered in many places where its existence has never been suspected. Miller County is particularly rich in galeniferous ore.

Paying lead has been found north of the Osage River, on the Gravois, Big Saline, Little Saline and Bush Creeks; and the Fox, Walker, Mount Pleasant and Saline diggings have yielded millions of pounds of lead.

Benton County contains a number of lead deposits, the most important being the Cole Cany mines. Lead has been found as a "float" in many localities.

Morgan County, like Washington, can boast of having lead in every township, either as clay, mineral, "float," or in veins, lodes, pockets and caves. The magnesian limestone series of Morgan, in which the lead ores now are, or have all existed, are the most complete and well defined of any in Missouri.

The most extensive deposits of lead in Morgan County have been found south of the center of the county, yet in the north-western part are several well-known lodes. We can not even name the hundreds of places in the county where lead is found in paying quantities. There seems to be a region, covering 200 square miles, entirely underlaid by lead. These wonderful deposits are as yet but partially worked.

The Southern Lead Region of the State comprises the counties of Pulaski, Laclede, Texas, Wright, Webster, Douglas, Ozark and Christian. The mineral deposits of this region are only partially developed. In Pulaski County lead has been discovered in several localities. Laclede County has a number of lead deposits; one about eleven miles from Lebanon, where the ore is found in a disseminated condition in the soft magnesian limestone. In the southwestern part of Texas County, along the headwaters of the Gasconade River, there are considerable deposits of lead ore. Wright County has a number of lead mines almost unworked, which are situated in the southeastern part of the county, and are a continuation of the deposits in Texas County. In Douglas County, near the eastern line, and near Swan Creek, are considerable deposits of galena. Ozark and Christian Counties have a number of lead deposits, zinc being invariably found in connection.

The Western Lead District comprises Hickory, Dallas, Polk, St. Clair, Cedar and Dade Counties. In Hickory County quite extensive mining has been carried on, the larger deposits having been found near Hermitage. In the northern part of the county and along the Pomme de Terre River, lead occurs as "float," and in the rock formation. The more prominent lodes are found in the second magnesian limestone, with a deposit occurring in the third. The lead deposits of Hickory County are richer and more fully developed than any other in this district. Dallas County has a few deposits of lead, and float lead has been found in various localities in Polk. In St. Clair County the galeniferous deposits are in the second sandstone, and in the ferruginous clay, with chert, conglomerate and gravel. Cedar County presents a deposit of lead, copper and antimony. Galena is found in the clay and gravel. In Dade County a considerable quantity of galena has been found in the southeastern corner of the county.

The Southwest Lead District of Missouri comprises the counties of Jasper, Newton, Lawrence, Stone, Barry, and McDonald. The two counties first named produce more than one-half of the pig lead of Missouri, and may well boast their immense deposits of galeniferous wealth. The lead mining resources of Jasper and Newton Counties are simply inexhaustible, and new and rich deposits are continually being found. Lead ore seems to have been obtained here from the earliest recollection, and furnished supplies to the Indians during their occupation. Formerly smelted lead, merchandise and liquor were the principal return to the miner for his labor; as the distance from market and the general condition of the county precluded enlarged capital and enterprise. Since the war capital has developed the hidden wealth, and systematized labor, and rendered it remunerative. This, with the additional railroad facilities, has brought the county prominently and rapidly before the public as one of the most wonderful mining districts of the world. The total production of lead in Jasper County for the centennial year was, according to the estimates of the best authorities, over half the entire lead production of the State, and more than the entire lead production of any other State in the Union. Later statistics show a steady and rapid increase in the yield of these mines.

One fact, worthy of notice, is, that Jasper County, the greatest lead producing county of the greatest lead producing State, raises every year, upon her farms, products of more value than the lead dug in one year from her mines.

Iron.—In the mining, shipping, smelting and manufacturing of the ores of iron, there is, perhaps, more capital invested and more labor employed than in all the other metal industries of the State combined.

There are three principal and important iron regions in Missouri: The Eastern Region, composed of the southeastern limonite district, and the Iron Mountain specular ore district, the Central Region, containing principally specular ores, and the Western or Osage Region, with its limonites and red hematites.

These three principal regions combined form a broad ore belt running across the State from the Mississippi to the Osage, in a direction about parallel to the course of the Mississippi River from southeast to northwest, between the thirtieth and fortieth township lines. The specular ores occupy the middle portion of this belt, the limonites both ends of it. The latter are, besides, spread over the whole southern half of the State, while these sub-carboniferous hematites occur only along the southern border of the North Missouri coal field, having thus an independent distribution, and being principally represented in Callaway, St. Clair and Henry Counties.

Iron Mountain is the greatest exposure of specular iron yet discovered. It is the result of igneous action, and is the purest mass or body of ore known. The work of years has only just uncovered the massive columns of specular ore that seems to pass down through the porphyry and granite to the source of their existence. The region about is covered with the ore debris. The broken masses have the same general color and quality as the vein ore of Iron Mountain. The fresh fracture presents a light gray, tinged distinctly with blue. The crystallization is often coarse, presenting an irregular fracture. All the ore is more or less magnetic. The streak is a bright cherry red, and possesses considerable hardness. Analysis shows it to contain from 65 to 69 per cent of metallic iron.

The ore of Shepherd Mountain is called a magnetite. In some portions of the veins it shows itself to be granular, brown in color, and to have a clear black streak. Other portions present all the qualities of a specular ore. In portions of the specular, as well as magnetite, beautiful crystals of micaceous ore are found. The streak of this specular and micaceous is a dark red; upon analysis it is found to contain from 64 to 67 per cent of metallic iron. The magnetic qualities of this ore are quite variable, usually the strongest at or near the surface, but this is not the case in all the veins. The ore of Shepherd Mountain is superior to any yet developed in Missouri, not quite as rich as that of Iron Mountain, but so uniform in character, and devoid of sulphur and phosphoric acid, that it may be classed as superior to that, or any other ore in the State.

The ore of Pilot Knob is fine grained, very light bluish gray in color, in hardness not unlike that in Iron Mountain, with a luster sub-metallic. There is a most undoubted stratification to the deposition, occurring as before indicated. The ore of Pilot Knob gives from 53 to 60 per cent metallic iron, and is almost free from deleterious substances. The ore below the slate seam is much the best, containing only about from 5 to 12 per cent of silica, while the poorer ores show sometimes as high as 40 per cent. There have been more than 200,000 surface feet of ore determined to exist here.

The Scotia Iron Banks, located on the Meramec River, in Crawford County, are most remarkable formations. Here the specular ore is a deep, steel-gray color, with a metallic luster.

The crystals are fine, and quite regular in uniformity. This ore is found in the shape of boulders, sometimes small and sometimes of immense size, resting in soft red hematites, that have been produced by the disintegration of the specular ores. These boulders contain a great number of small cavities in which the ore has assumed botryoidal forms; and upon these, peroxide iron crystallizations are so formed that a most gorgeous show of prismatic colors is presented.

In these banks there are some carbonates and ochraceous ores, but not in any quantity to deteriorate or materially change the character of the other ores. Many of the boulders present a soft red mass with a blue specular kernel in the center. This ore is found to be slightly magnetic, and gives from 58 to 69 per cent metallic iron.

Simmons Mountain, one-half mile south of Salem, Dent County, is about 100 feet high, and covers nearly forty acres. The second sandstone is the country rock, and at the summit is uncovered, and mixed with specular and brown ores. Down the elevation larger masses of ore are met with that have the appearance of being drifts from the main deposit, higher up. Shafts have been sunk in this elevation determining more than thirty feet of solid ore. The ore is a splendid, close, compact, brilliant specular, very hard and free from deleterious substances. The ores of this mountain do not show nearly as much metamorphism as many of the other banks in the second sandstone of this region. The ore is quite strongly magnetic, and gives a bright red streak. This is the largest specular iron deposit, with the exception of Iron Mountain, that is known in the State.

Some of the most extensive red hematite banks in Missouri are located in Franklin County. Along the Bourbeuse there are thirteen exposures of fine red hematite iron ore. Near Dry Branch Station is an elevation, capped at the summit with saccharoidal sandstone, beneath which there is a large body of red and specular ore. The red hematite, however, predominates, and is remarkably pure and free from sulphur or other deleterious substances. The sinking of a number of shafts upon this hill reaches the deposits in several places, in all of which the red hematite shows itself to be the prevailing ore. This ore will be found to work well with the hard specular and ores of the siliceous character, like Pilot Knob.

In Miller, Maries, Cole and Camden Counties, also in Bollinger, Stoddard and Butler Counties, along the line of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad, there are a number of red hematite banks of considerable promise. There are similar banks in the northern part of Texas and Wright Counties, and in Morgan, Benton, Cedar and Laclede.

In Wayne County there are over seventy different limonite ore banks. In Miller, Maries, Camden, Cole, Moniteau and Callaway Counties there are very extensive banks of the same kind. In Morgan, Benton, St. Clair, Cedar, Hickory and Vernon Counties, considerable brown hematite has been found.

In Franklin, Gasconade, Phelps, Crawford, Laclede, Christian, Webster and Greene Counties large limonite beds have been found. In the Moselle region very large deposits have been opened and worked for many years. In Osage County there are a number of promising brown ore banks, as well as fine specular and red hematite.

It is impossible, in the brief space granted, to describe the number of banks, rich in iron ore, which are situated in the above and other counties of this State; but a glance at the tables found in the works of prominent geologists of the State, will give some idea of the resources of Missouri as an iron producing region.

Zinc.—The ores of zinc in Missouri, almost as numerous as those of lead, are distributed throughout mostly all the geological strata, and scattered through nearly every mineral district; but the principal supply of the metal for commercial purposes is obtained from a very few ores, the more important of which are zinc blende (sulphuret of zinc), the silicate of zinc and the carbonate of zinc, and these are furnished by a comparatively few localities.

In reference to their geological position, the ores are in two classes: The first class includes all zinc ores which occur in the regular veins of the older rocks, and hence are associated with other metalliferous ores. The second mode of occurrence, and the ore by far of paramount importance in Missouri, is that of the third magnesian limestone of the lower silurian series, where it usually occurs in association with galena in the cave formation.

Zinc blende abounds at Granby and Joplin, and is found at many other mines of the Southwest. It also occurs at the lead mines of Franklin and Washington Counties, and at some other points in Southeast Missouri.

The pockets of coal in Central Missouri nearly all contain zinc blende. The lead mines of the same section also sometimes carry it.

There are quantities of silicate of zinc at Granby and Joplin, and the ore is found at most of the lead mines of the Southwest, and occasionally in Central and Southeast Missouri. Carbonate of zinc occurs at Granby, Joplin, Minersville and Valle's mines. It is in the Granby, Joplin and Valle mining districts that zinc ore is principally worked.

Copper, in several varieties, exists in the Missouri mines. The copper mines of Shannon, Madison and Franklin Counties have been known for a long time. Some of those in Shannon and Franklin were once worked with bright prospects of success, and some in Madison have yielded good results for many years.

Deposits of copper have been discovered in Dent, Crawford, Benton, Maries, Green, Lawrence, Dade, Taney, Dallas, Phelps, Reynolds and Wright Counties, but the mines in Franklin, Shannon, Madison, Crawford, Dent and Washington give greater promise of yielding profitable results than any other yet discovered.

Nickel and Cobalt.—These ores abound at Mine La Motte and the old copper mines in Madison County, and are also found at the St. Joseph mines.

Sulphuret of nickel, in beautiful hair-like crystals, is found in the limestone at St. Louis, occupying drusy cavities, resting on calcite or fluor spar.

Manganese.—The peroxide of manganese has been found in several localities in Ste. Genevieve and other counties.

Silver and Gold.—Silver occurs to a limited extent in nearly all the lead mines in the State. Gold, though found in small quantities, has never been profitably worked in any part of Missouri.

Marble.—Missouri has numerous and extensive beds of marble of various shades and qualities. Some of them are very valuable, and are an important item in the resources of the State.

Fort Scott marble is a hard, black, fine-grained marble, with veins of yellow, buff and brown. It receives a fine polish, and is very beautiful. It belongs to the coal measures, and is common in the western part of Vernon County.

There are several beds of fine marble in the St. Louis limestone, of St. Louis County.

The fourth division of encrinital limestone is a white, coarse-grained crystalline marble of great durability. It crops out in several places in Marion County.

The lithographic limestone furnishes a fine, hard-grained, bluish-drab marble, that contrasts finely with white varieties in tessellated pavements.

The Cooper marble of the Devonian limestone has numerous pellucid crystals of calcareous spar disseminated through a drab or bluish-drab, fine compact base. It exists in great quantities in some localities of Cooper and Marion Counties, and is admirably adapted to many ornamental uses. There are extensive beds of fine, variegated marbles in the upper silurian limestones of Cape Girardeau County. Cape Girardeau marble is also a part of the Trenton limestone, located near Cape Girardeau. It is nearly white, strong and durable. This bed is also found near Glencoe, St. Louis County.

In the magnesian limestone series there are several beds of very excellent marble. Near Iron-ton there are beds of semi-crystalline, light-colored marbles, beautifully clouded with buff and flesh colors. In the third magnesian limestone, on the Niangua, is a fine-grained, crystalline, silico-magnesian limestone, light drab, slightly tinged with peach blossom, and beautifully clouded with deep flesh-colored shades. It is twenty feet thick, and crops out in the bluffs of the Niangua for a long distance.

There are numerous other beds in the magnesian limestones, some of which are white and others so clouded as to present the appearance of breccias.

The Ozark marbles are well known, some of them having been used to ornament the Capitol at Washington. Wherever the magnesian limestones come near the igneous rocks, we may expect to find them so changed as to present beds of the beautiful variegated marbles.

Sulphate of Baryta, in its pure white form, is very abundant in Missouri. It occurs in large beds in the mining regions, as the gangue of our lead veins, and as large masses, especially in the magnesian limestone of the lower silurian rocks. It is utilized as a pigment in connection with lead, and may be made valuable for the same purpose in connection with some of our ferruginous and argillaceous paints.

Clays.—Fire clays, possessing refractory qualities, suitable for making fire brick, occur beneath most of the thicker coal seams.

Potter's clay is abundant, especially among the coal measure clays. It is also sometimes found associated with the lower carboniferous rocks.

Kaolin is only found in Southeast Missouri, where porphyries or granites prevail.

Brick clays have been found and worked in nearly all the counties where there has been a demand for them. The argillaceous portions of the bluff formation make good brick, as shown in the brick yards all along the large rivers. Some of the tertiary clays will make the very best brick.

Caves, etc.—There are several very interesting and quite remarkable caves in the State. Hannibal Cave, one mile below the city of Hannibal, and about a quarter of a mile from the Mississippi River, is approached through a broad ravine, hemmed in by lofty ridges, which are at right angles with the river. The antechamber is about eight feet high and fifteen feet long. This descends into the Narrows, thence through Grand Avenue to Washington Avenue, and through the latter to Altar Chamber. This is a ferruginous limestone formation, and crystal quartz, carbonate of lime and sulphate of magnesia abound. Stalactites and stalagmites are continually forming by limestone percolations. In Bat Avenue Chamber the bats may be seen hanging from the ceiling in clusters, like swarms of bees, some of them fifteen inches from tip to tip. Washington Avenue, over sixteen feet high, with long corridors of stalactites and stalagmites, is the largest division of the cave. It contains a spring, and a deep pool, in which are found the wonderful eyeless fish. The Devil's Hall, Alligator Rock, Elephant's Head, two natural wells filled with limpid water, Table Rock, and numbers of other curiosities, will amply repay the tourist for his exploration.

Cliff Cave, thirteen miles below St. Louis, has been utilized by the Cliff Cave Wine Company as a wine cellar.

There are several caves in Miller County, the largest of which is on Big Tavern Creek, in the bluff near its confluence with the Osage River. The entrance is about twenty-five feet square, and is situated thirty or forty feet above the river, in a solid limestone bluff. During the Civil War it was used as a retreat by the bandit, Crabtree. The stalactite formations are of strange and fantastic appearance, some of them looking like colossal images of marble, and the whole effect by torchlight is wierd and solemn.

Phelps County contains several interesting caves, the most accessible of which is Freide's Cave, about nine miles northwest of Rolla. Its mouth is 60 feet in width and 35 feet in height. It has been penetrated to a distance of three miles without finding any outlet. The Stalactite Chamber is a beautiful apartment 200 yards in length, varying from 15 to 30 feet in width, and from 5 to 30 feet in height. The Bat Chamber contains thousands of wagon loads of guano, which is extensively used by the farmers of the neighborhood. The cave also contains quantities of saltpetre, and during the war large amounts of powder were manufactured there.

There are also caves in Christian County. The principal one is two and a half miles northeast of Ozark. Its entrance is through a rock arch 50 feet across and 80 feet high. About 400 feet from the entrance, the passage is so contracted that the explorer must crawl through on his hands and knees. A fine stream of water, clear and cold, gurgles down through the cave.

About twelve miles south of Ozark, near the Forsyth road, on the top of a very high hill, is a small opening, which, about 100 feet from the surface, expands into a hall 30 feet wide and about 400 feet long, the sides and top of which are of rock lined with beautiful stalactites.

In Stone County at least twenty-five caves have been explored and many more discovered. One mile from Galena is an extensive cave from which the early settlers procured saltpetre in large quantities. About two and a half miles above this is a smaller one of great beauty. From the ceiling depend glittering stalac-tites, while the floor sparkles with fragments of gem-like luster. A pearly wall, of about half an inch in thickness and 15 inches high, encloses a miniature lake, through whose pellucid waters the wavy stalagmite bottom of this natural basin can be plainly seen. The sacred stillness of the vaulted chamber renders its name, "The Baptismal Font," a peculiarly fitting one.

A cave about twelve miles from Galena is well known among curiosity seekers in the adjacent country. The entrance chamber is a large, dome-shaped room, whose ceiling is very high; a glittering mound of stalagmites rises in the center of the room, nearly one-third the height of the ceiling. Stretching out at right angles from this are long shining halls leading to other grand arched chambers, gorgeous enough for the revels of the gnome king and all the genii of the subterranean world. One can not but think of the Inferno, as, wandering down a labyrinthian passage, he reaches the verge of an abyss, striking perpendicularly to unknown and echoless depths. The name, "Bottomless Pit," is well bestowed on this yawning gulf.

Knox Cave, in Greene County, about seven miles northwest of Springfield, is of large dimensions, and hung in some parts with the most beautiful stalactites.

Fisher's Cave, six miles southeast of Springfield, is of similar dimensions, and has a beautiful stream of water flowing out of it.

There are a number of saltpetre caves along the banks of the Gasconade, which were once profitably worked. Some of these caves are large and interesting, consisting frequently of a succession of rooms joined to each other by arched halls of a considerable height, with walls of white limestone, upon which, as well as upon the floors, the saltpetre is deposited, and is generally so pure as to need but one washing to prepare it for use or export. When these caves were first discovered, it was not unusual to find in them stone axes and hammers, which led to the belief that they had formerly been worked for some unknown purpose by the savages. It is doubtful whether these tools were left there by the Indians or by another and more civilized race which preceded them.

There are numerous caves in Perry County, two of which penetrate beneath Perryville.

Connor's Cave, seven miles southeast of Columbia, has an entrance twenty feet wide and eight feet high, and has been explored for several miles.

There are extensive and beautiful caves in Texas, Webster, Lawrence, Laclede, Oregon and several other counties.

Mineral Springs.—Salt springs are exceedingly abundant in the central part of the State, discharging vast quantities of brine in Cooper, Saline, Howard and the adjoining counties. These brines are near the navigable waters of the Missouri, in the midst of an abundance of wood and coal, and might furnish salt enough to supply all the markets of the continent.

Sulphur springs are also numerous throughout the State. The Chouteau Springs, in Cooper, the Monagaw Springs, in St. Clair, the Elk Springs, in Pike, and the Cheltenham Springs, in St. Louis County, have acquired considerable reputation as medicinal waters, and have become popular places of resort. There are similar sulphur springs in other parts of the State.

Chalybeate Springs.—There are a great many springs in the State which are impregnated with some of the salts of iron. Those containing carbonates and sulphates are most common, and several of these are quite celebrated for their medicinal properties. Sweet Springs, on the Blackwater, and the Chalybeate Spring, in the University campus, are perhaps the most noted of the kind in the State. The Sweet Springs flow from cavities in the upper beds of the Burlington limestone. The hill is here forty-seven feet high above water in the Blackwater, spreading out at the back in a flat table-land. The spring itself is about twenty-feet above the river, and has a sweetish alkaline taste. It is useful as a promoter of general good health, and is much resorted to at the proper season. The water is used for ordinary cooking and drinking purposes, except for making tea.

Petroleum Springs.—These are found in Carroll, Ray, Randolph, Cass, Lafayette, Bates, Vernon and other counties. Many of these springs discharge considerable quantities of oil. The variety called lubricating oil is the most common. It is impossible to tell whether petroleum will be found in paying quantities in these localities, but there is scarcely a doubt that there are reservoirs of considerable quantities.

EVENTS CONNECTED WITH THE EARLY DISCOVERIES, SETTLEMENTS, ETC.

The Indians.—When Christopher Columbus set sail from Palos, it was with no expectation of finding a new continent, but with the hope of discovering a direct western route to those far-famed Indies, whose fabulous riches were the unfailing theme of travelers and geographers. Even to the day of his death the illustrious explorer had no suspicion of having discovered other than the remote islands and shores of the old world, and, accordingly, he called all the inhabitants of the mysterious country "Indians"—a name which has not only outlasted the error of early navigators, but is destined to cling to this unhappy race as long as a vestige of it remains. Whence they came, and to what other family of the earth they are allied, or whether they were originally created a distinct people in the forest wilds of America, have been questions much mooted among the learned and unlearned of modern times, but thus far have elicited only hypotheses in reply. The most common supposition is, however, that the Indians are a derivative race, sprung from one of the more ancient people of Asia, and that they came to this continent by way of Behring's Strait, and this, doubtless, is the true theory.

The tribes with whom the first settlers of Missouri came principally in contact were the Pottawattomies, the Iowas, the Kickapoos, the Sacs and the Foxes.

Other Races.—The ancient cities of Central America, judging from their magnificent ruins of broken columns, fallen arches and the crumbling walls of temples, palaces and pyramids, which, in some places, bestrew the ground for miles, must have been of great extent, magnificent and very populous. When the vast period of time necessary to erect such colossal structures, and the time required to reduce them to their present ruined state are considered, something can be conceived of their antiquity. These edifices must have been old before many of the ancient cities of the Orient were built, and they point, without doubt, to a civilization at once considerably advanced and very far removed from the present.

The Mound-Builders, of a much less degree of culture, but reaching back into an antiquity so remote as to have left behind no vestige of tradition, present themselves to the archæologist as a half-civilized people who once occupied Missouri and various other parts of the country now included in the United States. This pre-historic race has acquired its name from the numerous large mounds of earth left by them. Remains of what were apparently villages, altars, temples, idols, burial places, monuments, camps, fortifications and pleasure grounds have been found, but nothing showing that any material save earth was used in the construction of their habitations. At first these works were supposed to be of Indian origin, but careful examination has revealed the fact that—despite several adverse theories—they must have been reared by a people as distinct from the North American Indian as were those later people of Central America. Upon making excavations in these mounds, human skeletons were found with skulls differing from those of the Indians, together with pottery and various ornaments and utensils, showing considerable mechanical skill. From the comparatively nude state of the arts among them, however, it has been inferred that the time of their migration to this country, if indeed they did migrate, was very remote. Their axes were of stone, their raiment, judging from fragments which have been discovered, consisted of the bark of trees interwoven with feathers, and their military works were such as a people would erect who had just passed to the pastoral state of society from that dependent alone upon hunting and fishing. They were, no doubt, idolaters, and it has been conjectured that the sun was the object of their adoration. The mounds were generally built in a situation affording a view of the rising sun; when enclosed in walls their gateways were toward the east; the caves in which their dead were occasionally buried always opened in the same direction; when bodies were buried in graves, as was frequently the case, they were laid in a direction east and west, and, finally, medals have been found representing the sun and his rays of light.

The mounds and other ancient earth-works constructed by this people are far more abundant than is generally supposed, from the fact that while some are quite large, the greater part of them are small and inconspicuous. Along nearly all the water courses, that are large enough to be navigated by a canoe, the mounds are almost invariably found, so that when one places himself in such positions as to command the grandest river scenery he is almost sure to discover that he is standing upon one of these ancient tumuli, or in close proximity thereto.

St. Louis was originally known as the "Mound City," from the extent and variety of the curious monuments found there, and although these, as well as numbers of others scattered over various parts of the State, have been defaced or entirely obliterated, Missouri still presents an unusually fruitful field of investigation to the archaeologist. This is particularly true of the southeastern counties, especially in the region of New Madrid.

Mr. Brackenridge, who examined the antiquities of the West in 1817, speaking of the mounds in the Mississippi Valley, says: "I have sometimes been induced to think, that, at the period when they were constructed, there was a population here as numerous as that which once animated the borders of the Nile or Euphrates, or of Mexico. I am perfectly satisfied that cities similar to those of ancient Mexico, of several hundred thousand souls, have existed in this country."

Early Discoveries and Explorers.—Ferdinand De Soto, an adventurer recognized as a Spanish cavalier, who had been associated with Pizarro in the conquest of Peru, but whose ambition and cupidity were only increased by his success in that country, determined to possess himself also of the boundless wealth reputed to lie hidden in the mines of Florida. Undismayed by the fate of other adventurers, he equipped at his own expense a band of 700 men, or more, and landed in Tampa Bay, in the spring of 1539. Thence, in spite of hostile Indians, he forced his way to the Northwest, and, although not finding gold or precious stones, he made himself immortal as the discoverer, in 1541, of the Mississippi River. The point at which De Soto first saw the Mississippi was at the lower Chickasaw Bluffs, a few miles below Memphis. There he constructed boats, and, after crossing the stream, proceeded up its west bank, and made his way into the region now known as New Madrid, in Missouri. At this point, therefore, and at this time, the first European set foot on the soil of Missouri. In 1542, overcome by disease, privation and discouragement, De Soto died, and those of his followers who remained, having secretly sunk his body in the Mississippi, lest the Indians should discover his death, floated down the river to the Gulf of Mexico, and returned to their homes. The design of the expedition had been conquest as a means of acquiring gold, and it left behind no traces of civilization.

Marquette.—While Spain had attended to the conquest of Mexico, South America, the West Indies and Florida, and English colonists had made feeble beginnings in Virginia and New England, the French, advancing still farther north, had possessed themselves of the St. Lawrence River, and were fast pushing their way into the interior by way of the great lakes. Jacques Marquette, a Jesuit missionary, belonging to an ancient family of France, arrived in Canada at a time when the public mind was much exercised upon the subject of exploring the Mississippi River. A plan of operations was accordingly arranged, and Louis Joliet, a native of Canada, joined Father Marquette at the Jesuit mission on the Straits of Mackinaw, and with five other Frenchmen and a simple outfit, the daring explorers, on the 17th of May, 1673, set out on their perilous voyage to re-discover the great river. Coasting along the northern shore of Lake Michigan they entered Green Bay, and passed thence up Fox River and Lake Winnebago to a village of the Muscatines ("Mascoutens") and Miamis, where great interest was taken in the expedition by the natives. Procuring guides they proceeded up the river. Arriving at a portage between the Fox and Wisconsin, they soon carried their light canoes and scanty baggage to the latter stream, about three miles distant. Their guides now refused to accompany them further, and endeavored, by reciting the dangers incident to the voyage, to induce them to return. They stated that huge demons dwelt in the great river, whose voices could be heard a long distance, and who engulfed in the raging waters all who came within their reach. They also represented that if any of them should escape the dangers of the river, fierce tribes of Indians dwelt upon its banks ready to complete the work of destruction. The explorers proceeded on their journey, however, and on the 17th of June, with joy inexpressible, pushed their frail barks out on the bosom of the stately Mississippi, 132 years after its first discovery by De Soto. Journeying down the mysterious stream, which Marquette named the "Conception," they passed the mouth of the Illinois, Missouri and Ohio, landing at various places, and, after proceeding up the Arkansas a short distance, at the advice of the natives, they turned their faces northward. After several weeks of hard toil they reached the Illinois, up which stream they proceeded to Lake Michigan, and entered Green Bay in September of the same year, having traveled a distance of 2,500 miles in a little more than four months.

La Salle.—About the time of Marquette's return, Robert de La Salle, of Normandy, set about discovering a northwest passage to China and Japan, the scientific men of that time generally coinciding in the belief that such a passage existed in the direction of the Great Lakes. He was accompanied from France by an Italian named Tonti, and was joined in his enterprise by Louis Hennepin, a Franciscan friar of a bold and ambitious disposition. After various hindrances and perils, they arrived at the present site of Peoria on the Illinois River, where they built a fort, which, on account of their many vicissitudes, they named Creve Coeur, or Broken Heart. There they separated, Hennepin turning northward to discover, if possible, the source of the Mississippi; La Salle, after visiting Canada, to perfect his arrangements, descending that river in search of its mouth, and Tonti remaining at Creve Coeur in command of men and supplies left at that point. La Salle reached the junction of the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, in February, 1682, and on the 5th of April following, passed safely through one of the three channels by which the latter stream discharges its waters into the Gulf of Mexico. Three days afterward, with the most imposing ceremonies, La Salle took formal possession of the country in the name of Louis XIV, the reigning king of France, in whose honor he named it Louisiana. The region thus acquired by the French embraced territory on both sides of the Mississippi, and, comprising rather indefinite limits, included the present States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Arkansas and Missouri.

La Salle subsequently returned to Canada, thence to France, and led an expedition to the Gulf of Mexico for the purpose of entering the Mississippi at its mouth, and establishing settlements in Louisiana. Being unable to find the mouth of the river, he landed upon the coast of Texas, and after some fruitless wanderings, was shot by one of his own disaffected followers. However, he had effectually opened the way for the French occupancy of the Mississippi Valley.

Early Settlements.—A few years after La Salle's death, forts and colonies were located at Biloxi Bay, Mobile, Natchez, New Orleans and other points farther north. It is a fact worthy of notice that the first French settlements, all of which were projected in the interest of gold and silver mining, were confined entirely to the eastern bank of the river. It was not until 1705 that the Missouri River was explored as far as the mouth of the Kansas.

In 1720 Renault, the son of a French iron founder, came to Louisiana for the purpose of engaging in gold and silver mining. He brought with him from France 200 miners and artificers, and purchased 500 slaves at the island of San Domingo. Proceeding up the Mississippi River, he established himself at Fort Chartres, about ten or fifteen miles above the present site of Ste. Genevieve, on the opposite bank of the stream. From this point he dispatched miners to "prospect" for the precious metals, and they crossed the river to the west bank, and explored what is now Ste. Genevieve County. Although Renault failed to discover either gold or silver, he found lead ore in great abundance, and having built rude furnaces for smelting it, conveyed it on pack-horses to Fort Chartres, and thence by boat to New Orleans and France.

The date of the actual settlement of Ste. Genevieve is disputed by historians, though all agree that it was the first in the State of Missouri. There is some evidence to support the theory that there might have been inhabitants at this place as early as 1735. The cultivation of tobacco, indigo, rice and silk had already been introduced into the southern part of the province of Louisiana, the lead mines of Missouri were opened, and the culture of wheat was commenced in Illinois. In the meantime the French were firmly establishing their power in the Northwest. By the middle of the eighteenth century (1750) they had control of all the water routes leading from the Great Lakes to the valley of the Mississippi. They had more than sixty military stations from Lake Ontario by way of Green Bay and the Illinois River, the Wabash and Maumee Rivers, down the Mississippi to New Orleans.

French and Indian War.—The French had formed the design of establishing a magnificent empire in the interior of the continent, having abundant and uninterrupted intercourse with the outside world by means of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence and Mississippi Rivers. The English, whose colonies were scattered up and down on the Atlantic coast, claimed the right to extend their possessions as far westward as they chose. As long as the latter nation confined itself to the eastern part of the country there was little reason for controversy. As soon, however, as the English became acquainted with the beautiful and fertile Mississippi Valley, they not only learned the value of the vast territory, but also resolved to set up a counter-claim to the soil. The French, besides establishing numerous military and trading posts from the frontiers of Canada to New Orleans, in order to confirm their claims to jurisdiction over the country, had carved the lilies of France on the forest trees, or sunk plates of metal in the ground. These measures did not, however, deter the English from going on with their explorations; and though neither party resorted to arms, yet the conflict was gathering, and it was only a question of time when the storm should burst upon the frontier settlement. The French based their claims upon discoveries, the English on grants of territory extending from ocean to ocean, but neither party paid the least attention to the prior claims of the Indians. From this position of affairs, it was evident that actual collision between the contending parties would not much longer be deferred. The English Government, in anticipation of a war, urged the governor of Missouri to lose no time in building two forts, which were equipped with arms from England. The French anticipated the English, and gathered a considerable force to defend their possessions. The governor determined to send a messenger to the nearest French post, to demand an explanation. This resolution brought into the history of our country, for the first time, the man of all others whom America most loves to honor, namely, George Washington. He was chosen, although not yet twenty-one years of age, as the one to perform this delicate and difficult mission. With five companions he set out on November 10, 1753, and after a perilous journey returned January 6, 1754. The struggle could not, however, be averted by diplomacy. It commenced, continued long, and was bloody and fierce; but on October 10, 1765, the ensign of France was displaced on the ramparts of Fort Chartres by the flag of Great Britain. This fort was the depot of supplies, and the place of rendezvous for the united forces of the French, and was then the best built and most convenient fort in North America. In subsequent years the Mississippi reached and undermined its west wall; the inhabitants of Kaskaskia carried away much of the remaining portions for building material, and at the present day nothing remains of it but a ruin in the midst of a dense forest.

Although, as has been already seen, Fort Chartres was not occupied by the English until 1765, the treaty which terminated what is known as the French and Indian War had been arranged late in 1762. According to its stipulations France ceded to England all of her possessions in Canada and east of the Mississippi, and to Spain all that part of the province of Louisiana lying west of the same, which, although really belonging to Spain, remained under French laws and jurisdiction until 1768.

The Founding of St. Louis.—In 1762 M. D'Abadie, at that time director general and civil and military commandant of Louisiana, granted to a certain company the exclusive right to trade with the Indians of Missouri, and indeed of all the Northwest, for a term of eight years. At the head of this company was M. Pierre Laclède Liguist—Laclède, as he is generally known, a man of ability, foresight and experience. He left New Orleans in August, 1763, and arrived in Missouri the following November. It will be remembered that all the French settlements, except that of Ste. Genevieve, were on the east side of the river, and consequently included in the territory ceded to England. At the one small village west of the Mississippi there was no building large enough to contain one quarter of M. Laclède's merchandise. M. De Neyon, the commandant at Fort Chartres, hearing of Laclède's dilemma, offered him room for his goods until the occupation of the fort by the English. Laclède readily availed himself of this generous offer, and repaired to Fort Chartres, where he deposited his effects, and then turned his attention to finding a site, near the Missouri River, suitable for his enterprise. Ste. Genevieve he rejected both on account of its distance from that stream and its unhealthful situation. Accompanied by his stepson, a lad of fourteen, named August Chouteau, he explored the region thoroughly, and fixed upon the place of his settlement. Upon returning to the fort, he assured De Neyon and his officers that he had found a situation where he would form a settlement, which might become, hereafter, "one of the finest cities of America." Thus readily did his sagacious mind appreciate the advantages of this location. Navigation being open, early in the February of 1764, Laclede sent thirty men, in charge of Chouteau, to the place designated, with orders to clear the land, build a large shed to shelter the tools and provisions, and also erect some small cabins for the men. On the 14th of February the work was commenced. Early in April Laclede himself arrived, chose the place for his own house, laid out a plan for his village and named it Saint Louis, in honor of Louis XV, not knowing that the territory had already been transferred to Spain, and then hastened back to Fort Chartres to remove his goods, as the English garrison was daily expected.

When, in 1765, Capt. Sterling in command of the English troops, a company of highlanders, actually took possession of the fort, St. Ange, French commandant at the time, removed with his officers and men to St. Louis, which was recognized as the capital of Upper Louisiana. M. D'Abadie had died, and M. Aubry was acting governor at New Orleans. Receiving, probably, the sanction of this latter gentleman, St. Ange at once assumed the reins of government at St. Louis, and so liberal was the spirit in which he conducted affairs that a stream of immigration soon set in from Canada and Lower Louisiana.

Death of Pontiac.—At the time of the founding of St. Louis, the Ottawa chieftain, Pontiac, was enjoying his greatest fame. At the breaking out of the war between France and England, he had allied himself with the former country, which had at all times followed a conciliatory policy with the Indians, and he had achieved some brilliant exploits at the ambushade near Pittsburgh (1755), which resulted in Braddock's defeat, and on other occasions. He had subsequently formed a confederacy of all the western tribes, and had endeavored, by one general and combined movement, to sweep the English settlers from the country west of the Alleghanies. In this effort he was so far successful that, at one time, every English fort in the west, except Niagara, Fort Pitt and Detroit, had fallen into the hands of the savages. St. Ange, hating the English and dreading their encroachments, was proportionately friendly to Pontiac, whom he invited to St. Louis in 1769. Here the chief was received in the most flattering manner, and was warmly welcomed by the principal citizens. Soon, however, it became apparent that Pontiac's plans were doomed to failure.

Tribe after tribe had forsaken him, his powerful allies, the French, were conquered, and his most trusted friends among the latter counseled him to give up the unequal contest. He endeavored to drown his disappointment in drink, and in spite of the remonstrances of St. Ange, sank lower and lower in debauchery. Finally, while in a state of intoxication, he was assassinated at Cahokia by a Kaskaskia Indian. His body was interred with great pomp near the tower at the intersection of Walnut and Fourth Streets. St. Ange, himself, lies buried near, but nothing is left to mark either grave. Houses have been built above them, and but few persons even know that these remains repose in the midst of the great city.

Spanish Rule.—The transfer of Louisiana to Spain caused sorrow to the inhabitants of the province, and at St. Louis this feeling was deepened to one of horror when it became known that Don Alexander O'Reilly had arrived at New Orleans with 3,000 men, and, upon the inhabitants of that city making armed resistance to his authority, had executed several of the ringleaders of the revolt and imprisoned others. The new commandant-general soon established his authority at New Orleans, and in 1770 sent Don Pedro Piernas to St. Louis as lieutenant-governor. This official showed himself master of the situation by treating the terrified inhabitants with the utmost consideration, securing the friendship of St. Ange, whom he made a captain of infantry, and establishing all the grants of land which the latter had bestowed. St. Ange died soon after. Piernas was succeeded by Francisco Cruzat, and he by Don Ferdinando Leyba. During the early part of Leyba's administration, Laclede died while on an expedition to New Orleans, and was buried at the mouth of the Arkansas River. His grave, also, is unknown, and probably has long ere this been washed into the stream.

The Revolutionary War.—War having already begun between Great Britain and her American colonies, Washington, who had been active in the service of England against the French, now commanded the forces opposed to English tyranny. On the breaking out of the Revolution the British held every important post in the West. The Indians, jealous of the rapid extension of American settlement westward, and aroused to action by the English, became the allies of the latter, and, while the colonies at the East were struggling against the armies of the mother country, the western frontiers were ravaged by the savages, often led by British commanders. To prevent indiscriminate slaughter in the West, some of the most daring exploits connected with American history were planned and executed. The hero of the achievements by which this region was snatched as a gem from the British crown, was Gen. George Rogers Clark, of Virginia. He had closely watched the movements of the English throughout the Northwest, and understood their plans; he also knew that the Indians were not unanimously in accord with them, and that although the forts were in control of the English, the inhabitants were mostly French, and retained much of their old hostility against their conquerors, while sympathizing with the colonies. He was convinced that American soldiers would be welcomed and aided, as far as possible, by the French settlers, and that the English garrisons once driven out, the natives might be easily awed into neutrality. Patrick Henry was governor of Virginia and at once entered heartily into Clark's plans. The latter proceeded to Pittsburgh, raised his small army west of the Alleghanies, as he well knew the colonies needed all the available men farther east, for the conflict there. His plan was to go by water as far as Fort Massac, and thence march direct to Kaskaskia. Here he intended to surprise the garrison, and after its capture to proceed to Cahokia, then to Vincennes, and lastly to Detroit. Each of these posts was in turn captured, and the plans of the English in the West entirely overthrown.

In the meantime, although the settlement at St. Louis was under the jurisdiction of Spain, it was well known that the sympathies of that country were identified with the colonies, and therefore the inhabitants of the little city were in constant dread of attacks from the Indians. Hearing rumors, also, of a threatened assault by the British, they at once began to fortify the place. A wall of brush and clay, five feet in height, with three gates, was built, encircling the town, the extremes terminating at the river. A small fort, which was afterward used as a prison, was also built. At each of the gates a piece of ordnance was mounted, and kept in constant readiness for use. These preparations were made in the summer and fall of 1779. No attack was made during the winter, and the people of St. Louis were almost beginning to hope their precautions unnecessary, when in May, bands of Ojibways, Winnebagos, Sioux and other tribes began to gather on the east side of the river, preparing to fall upon the settlement on the 26th of the month. These savages were instigated by Canadian fur traders, and commanded by officers from the British fort at Michilimackinac.

On May 25, which was the festival of Corpus Christi, a portion of the Indians crossed the river, but made no assault, an extremely fortunate circumstance, as many of the citizens, together with their wives and children, were outside of the wall, and scattered about over the prairie, gathering strawberries. The following day the entire force of savages stole silently across the river, and crept to the rear of the town, expecting to find some of the inhabitants working in the fields. Near what is now the fair grounds, at the "Cardinal Springs," they surprised the man from whom the spring was named and another person call Riviere. The former they killed, and took the latter prisoner. A few other settlers were surprised and massacred.

On account of his misconduct at this time, Leyba was removed from office and Francisco Cruzat once more placed in authority at St. Louis. During the administration of Cruzat, the town was thoroughly fortified, but was not subjected to another attack, although other settlements on the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers were often harassed by the Indians even after the close of the war.

Floods.—In 1785 occurred a sudden and remarkable rise in the Mississippi River, causing great alarm and considerable loss of property to the inhabitants of St. Louis and the adjacent settlements. Cahokia and Kaskaskia were menaced with entire destruction. Ste. Genevieve, which was located at first in the river bottom, three miles south or southeast of its present site, was completely inundated, and the inhabitants, unwilling to risk a repetition of the disaster, removed to higher ground and founded the present town, which therefore dates from 1785. Most of the buildings in St. Louis were then situated on Main Street, and the rise of the river above the steep bank occasioned extreme anxiety and terror. The flood subsiding, however, nearly as rapidly as it had risen, the inhabitants returned to their houses, and business was speedily resumed. This year received the name of "L'annee des Grandes Eaux," or "The year of the Great Waters." Other remarkable floods occasioning loss of life and property, and involving St. Louis and other river towns of Missouri, have occasionally occurred, most destructive among which may be mentioned those of 1844, 1851, 1875 and 1881.

1785-1800.—Cruzat was succeeded in office by Manuel Perez, who bestowed a large tract of land in the vicinity of Cape Girardeau upon friendly Indians of the Pawnee and Delaware tribes, in return they agreeing to aid the young settlements in repelling the incursions of the hostile Osage Indians. Trudeau, who succeeded Perez, devised and carried out many improvements at St. Louis, and stimulated in a great measure the fur traffic, and by this means encouraged traders to penetrate the wilderness, and make further expeditions on the Missouri River. The administration of Trudeau was followed by that of Delassus, who, in 1799, ordered that a census be taken of the settlements in Upper Louisiana or Western Illinois, as Missouri was sometimes called. According to this census, the total number of inhabitants in the settlements was 6,028. Of these 4,948 were white; 197 free colored, and 883 slaves. St. Louis had a population of 925; Ste. Genevieve, 949; St. Charles, 875; New Madrid, 782; New Bourbon, 560; Cape Girardeau, 521; St. Ferdinand, 276; St. Andrew, 393; Carondelet, 184; Meramec, 115; Little Meadows, 72.

Daniel Boone, famous in the annals of Kentucky and the West, came to Louisiana about the year 1797. He renounced his allegiance to the United States, became a Spanish subject, and was appointed by Delassus commandant of the Femme Osage District. When the province was transferred to the United States, he again became an American citizen. At some time between the years 1804 and 1808 he may very probably have hunted through Howard County, and discovered the salt springs there. During the summer of 1807, Boone's sons, Nathan and Daniel M., visited these springs and there manufactured salt, but there is no evidence that the elder Boone ever resided, even temporarily, at the place. The settlement afterward made was called Boone's Lick, and a large region in that part of the State, the "Boone's Lick Country." Boone County, organized in 1820, was named after the great frontiersman, who died in September of that year at the residence of his son, on Femme Osage Creek, in St. Charles County, aged eighty-eight years.

Louisiana Purchased by the United States.—In the year 1801 Napoleon Bonaparte made a treaty with Spain, known in the annals as the treaty of San Ildefonso, the conditions of which were that Spain should surrender to France all the region known as Louisiana west of the Mississippi River, in return for certain assistance which she expected to receive from the great warrior in her European affairs. It was not, however, until 1803, that M. Laussat, a French officer, was placed in authority at New Orleans. Although Napoleon fully realized the immense value of his acquisition, it was on many accounts an occasion of perplexity. In the first place, the American Government regarded with a jealous eye this attempt of the French to re-establish themselves in Louisiana; and the English, who had control of the seas, made it extremely difficult for men and equipments to be conveyed into the country; and, rather than have it wrested from him by this powerful foe, he determined to tantalize the mother country by adding it to the possessions of the young nation, which had succeeded in maintaining its independence in the face of her authority. Accordingly, he accepted an offer made by the United States, and the transfer was accomplished during the administration of Thomas Jefferson. In December, 1803, M. Laussat, the French commandant, who had but just acquired jurisdiction of Louisiana from Spain, conveyed it to Gov. Claiborne and Gen. Wilkinson, commissioners appointed by the United States. The price paid for this purchase was $15,000,000, including various claims, the payment of which was assumed by the American Government.

At St. Louis the French flag was in the ascendant only one day, Capt. Stoddard, the representative of France, receiving possession of the territory at the hands of Delassus, the Spanish governor, on March 9, 1804, and transferring his authority to the United States on the following day.

The District of Louisiana.—March 26, 1804, Congress passed an act separating the provinces of Louisiana into two parts—the southern designated as “The Territory of Orleans,” and the northern, “The District of Louisiana.” This latter included all of the province north of “Hope Encampment,” a place near Chickasaw Bluffs, and embraced within its boundaries the present States of Arkansas, Missouri and Iowa, a large part of Minnesota, and all the vast region extending westward to the Pacific Ocean, excepting the territory claimed by Spain.

The executive power of the Government in the Territory of Indiana was extended over the district of Louisiana or “Upper Louisiana” as it was popularly called. Gen. William Henry Harrison, then governor of Indiana, assisted by Judges Griffin, Vanderberg and Davis, represented the authority of the United States, under the provisions of the act of 1804, and, during the following winter, courts of justice were held in the old fort, near Fifth and Walnut Streets, in St. Louis.

The Territory of Louisiana.—March 3, 1805, by another act of Congress, the Territory of Louisiana was regularly organized, and the President appointed Gen. James Wilkinson, governor, and Frederick Bates, secretary. Gov. Wilkinson, together with Judges R. J. Meigs and John B. C. Lucas, constituted the Legislature of this almost boundless territory. Gov. Wilkinson was visited in 1805, by Aaron Burr, when the latter was planning his daring conspiracy against the United States.

In 1807 Capt. Merriwether Lewis, of the famous Lewis and Clark expedition, was appointed governor, but in 1809, in Lewis County, Tenn., he committed suicide at the age of thirty-five, by shooting himself with a pistol, and President Madison designated Gen. Benjamin Howard, of Lexington, Ky., as governor in his stead. Gov. Howard served as brigadier-general in the War of 1812, and died in 1814. Howard County was named in his honor.

Lewis and Clark's Expedition.—After the purchase of Louisiana, President Jefferson, anxious to prove the value of that immense tract then in possession of the United States, planned an expedition for the purpose of exploring the country from the Mississippi to the Pacific Ocean. The expedition was organized with Merriweather Lewis, Mr. Jefferson's private secretary, at its head, assisted by Capt. William Clark, of the American army. With a small party, these indomitable explorers ascended the Missouri River as far as Jefferson, Madison and Gallatin, which they named in honor of the President, Secretary of State and Secretary of the Treasury, respectively, followed the Jefferson to its source, crossed the Rocky Mountains, navigated the Columbia River, and returned to St. Louis, in September, 1806, after an absence of two years and four months, having overcome innumerable hardships and difficulties, and traveled nearly 6,000 miles. Lewis, as has been already noted, was appointed governor of the Territory of Louisiana, which office he filled until his untimely and tragical death.

Lieut. Zebulon M. Pike also organized two successful exploring parties, one of which, in 1805, discovered the sources of the Mississippi, and the other, in the two succeeding years, the sources of the Arkansas, Kansas, Platte and Pierre Jaune (Yellowstone) Rivers, and penetrated the Spanish Provinces. Pike's Peak was named from this explorer. The county of Pike, in this State, was named in honor of Lieut. Pike, who rose to the rank of brigadier-general in the War of 1812, and was killed at York, Canada, in 1813.

Earthquakes at New Madrid.—New Madrid, rendered famous by the great earthquake of 1811-12, was, originally, one of the old Spanish forts, and lies about seventy miles below the mouth of the Ohio River. It was settled immediately after the close of the Revolutionary War by families from Virginia and the Carolinas, and was growing rapidly in wealth and population when its progress was arrested by that frightful calamity which affected not only the county of New Madrid, but also the adjacent country on both sides of the Mississippi. Streams were turned from their channels or dried up; hills, forests and plains disappeared, and lakes (one of which was sixty or seventy miles in length, and from three to twenty in breadth) were formed in their places; vast heaps of sand were scattered in various places, and whole tracts of land sank below the level of the surrounding country. Short extracts from the description of Mr. Godfrey Lesieur, who was an eye-witness of the scene, are quoted:

"The first shock was about 2 o'clock A. M., on the night of December 16, 1811, and was very hard, shaking down log houses, chimneys, etc. It was followed at intervals, from half an hour to an hour apart, by comparatively slight shocks, until about 7 o'clock in the morning, when a rumbling noise was heard in the west, not unlike distant thunder, and in an instant the earth began to totter and shake so that no persons were able to stand or walk. This lasted a minute; then the earth was observed to be rolling in waves of a few feet in height, with a visible depression between. These swells burst, throwing up large volumes of water, sand and a species of charcoal, some of which was partly covered with a substance, which, by its peculiar odor, was thought to be sulphur. Where these swells burst, large, wide and long fissures were left, running north and south parallel with each other for miles. I have seen some four or five miles in length, four and one-half feet deep on an average, and about ten feet wide.

"After this, slight shocks were felt at intervals, until January 7, 1812, when the region was again visited by an earthquake equal to the first in violence, and characterized by the same frightful results." Mr. Lesieur says further that, upon this second visitation, the inhabitants, excepting two families, fled from the country in dismay, leaving behind their stock, and even many of their household goods, all of which were appropriated by adventurers and carried away in flat-boats. The last violent shock occurred on the 17th of February, 1812.

During these terrible earthquakes, but two among the settlers were killed, both of whom were women, but many of the boatmen on the river must have perished. An act of Congress for the relief of the New Madrid sufferers was passed in 1817.

By its provisions, persons whose lands had been seriously damaged by the earthquakes were allowed to locate a like quantity upon any of the public lands of the State, provided that no claims should exceed 640 acres. This was the origin of the "New Madrid Claims," of which speculators and sharpers gained the chief benefit, the people many of them being uninformed as to their exact privileges.

TERRITORIAL AND STATE ORGANIZATION.

The Territory of Missouri was organized by Congress, June 4, 1812, the first Council consisting of nine members, and the House of thirteen.* Its real boundaries were the same as those of the "Territory of Louisiana," but practically it consisted of only the settled parts of Missouri, comprising four districts, as follows: Cape Girardeau, embracing the territory between Tywapity Bottom and Apple Creek; Ste. Genevieve, extending from

*These members were as follows: House: St. Charles County—John Pitman and Robert Spencer; St. Louis County—David Music, Bernard G. Farrar, William C. Carr and Richard Caulk; Ste. Genevieve County—George Bullett, Richard S. Thomas and Isaac McGready; Cape Girardeau—George F. Bollinger and Stephen Byrd; New Madrid—John Schrader and Samuel Phillips. W. C. Carr became speaker and Andrew Scott clerk. Council: St. Charles County—James Flaugherly and Benjamin Emmons; St. Louis County—Auguste Chouteau, Sr., and Samuel Hammond; Ste. Genevieve—John Scott and James Maxwell; Cape Girardeau—William Neeley and George Cavener; New Madrid—Joseph Hunter.

Apple Creek to the Meramec River; St. Louis, including that part of the State between the Meramec and Missouri Rivers, and St. Charles, comprising the settled country between the Missouri and Mississippi.

The legislative power of the Territory was vested in a governor, legislative council and House of Representatives. By the same act the Territory was authorized to send one delegate to Congress. In October of the same year the four districts, by proclamation of Gov. Howard, were reorganized into five counties, the fifth being called New Madrid, and included Arkansas. An election of a delegate to Congress, and members of the Territorial House of Representatives, was held in the following November. Capt. William Clark, the associate explorer of Capt. Lewis, was appointed by the President as governor, and entered upon his duties in 1813. He continued to occupy the gubernatorial chair until the admission of the State into the Union, and died in St. Louis in 1838.

Edward Hempstead was chosen the first delegate to Congress. It was mainly owing to his efforts that an act was passed by that body confirming to the people of Missouri the titles of their lands derived from Spanish grants, and also providing that "all village lots, out lots, or common field lots" held by them at the time of the cession of Louisiana to the United States, should be retained for school purposes. The real estate thus secured to the city of St. Louis alone, for educational purposes, was valued at $1,252,895.79. Col. Thomas F. Riddick, who first originated the proposition, rode to Washington on horseback to aid Mr. Hempstead in obtaining the ratification of Congress.

Growth.—In 1814 the population of the Territory was 25,000. The country was rapidly settled, and new counties were organized. The Legislature of 1816-17 incorporated a board of trustees for superintending schools in the "Town of St. Louis," the beginning of the school system of that city. At the same session the old "Bank of Missouri" was chartered, and in the fall of 1817 the two banks, "St. Louis" and "Missouri," were issuing bills, the former having gone into operation in 1814.

The first newspaper west of the Mississippi was published at St. Louis, July 12, 1808. It was called the Missouri Gazette, and was a diminutive sheet, measuring 12x16 inches. Although this paper has undergone several changes of title it still lives and flourishes as the Missouri Republican. The first newspaper west of St. Louis was the Missouri Intelligencer, established at Old Franklin, by Nathaniel Patton, in 1819, and subsequently removed to Fayette. In 1818 a cathedral was commenced at St. Louis, on the site of the old log church which had been erected by the early French inhabitants, and in the same year the first Protestant Church (Baptist) was built.

The first steamboat which ascended the Mississippi, above the mouth of the Ohio, was the "Gen. Pike," Capt. Jacob Read, which landed in St. Louis at the foot of Market Street August 2, 1817, and was received with every demonstration of delight. The next was the "Constitution," Capt. R. T. Guyard, which arrived in the October following. In 1819 the "Independence," Capt. Nelson, from Louisville, Ky., navigated the Missouri as far as Old Chariton, an abandoned town a short distance above Glasgow, and, returning to Franklin, took freight for Louisville. The first steamboat on the Upper Mississippi was the "Gen. Putnam," Moses D. Bates, captain, which made several trips between St. Louis, and Galena, Ill., during the summer of 1825.

In 1818 the Government of the United States projected the celebrated Yellowstone expedition, the objects of which were to ascertain whether the Missouri was navigable by steamboats, and to establish a line of forts from its mouth to the Yellowstone. This expedition left St. Louis in June, 1819. In the same year Arkansas was formed into a separate Territory.

State Organization.—In 1818, John Scott being delegate to Congress, the inhabitants of Missouri petitioned for admission into the Union. The House of Representatives passed a bill to admit the State without slavery, but, the Senate refusing to concur in this anti-slavery clause, the bill failed. Subsequently the measure was amended so as to provide for the gradual restriction of involuntary servitude, but the Senate refused to endorse any anti-slavery proviso whatever, and the House insisting on that provision, the bill again failed. In 1820, while the matter was still under discussion, Jesse B. Thomas, of Illinois, presented an amendment, which settled for the time all differences between the two Houses, and allowed Missouri to enter the Union with slavery. That amendment, famous in history as the "Missouri Compromise," is as follows:

AN ACT TO AUTHORIZE THE PEOPLE OF THE MISSOURI TERRITORY TO FORM A CONSTITUTION AND STATE GOVERNMENT, AND FOR THE ADMISSION OF SUCH STATE INTO THE UNION ON AN EQUAL FOOTING WITH THE ORIGINAL STATES, AND TO PROHIBIT SLAVERY IN CERTAIN TERRITORIES—ADOPTED MARCH 6, 1820.

* * * * *

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That in all that territory ceded by France to the United States, under the name of Louisiana, which lies north of thirty-six degrees and thirty minutes north latitude, not included within the limits of the State contemplated by this act, slavery and involuntary servitude, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes whereof the parties shall have been duly convicted, shall be and is hereby forever prohibited. Provided always, That any person escaping into the same, from whom labor or service is lawfully claimed in any State or Territory of the United States, such fugitive may be lawfully reclaimed and conveyed to the person claiming his or her labor or services as aforesaid.

Such was the "Missouri Compromise," one of the most important acts of American Legislation. The pro-slavery senators consented to this measure because they saw by the determination of the House that they would be unable otherwise to secure the admission of Missouri.

State Convention.—Under the act of Congress, the people of the Territory of Missouri, organized into fifteen counties, were authorized to hold an election in May, 1820, to choose representatives to a State convention whose object should be the framing of a constitution. Accordingly, forty-one representatives thus chosen convened at St. Louis on June 12. The following are the names of the members of the convention, together with the counties which they represented:

Cape Girardeau—Stephen Byrd, James Evans, Richard S. Thomas, Alexander Buckner, Joseph McFerran.

Cooper—Robert P. Clark, Robert Wallace, William Lillard.
Franklin—John G. Heath.

Howard—Nicholas S. Burkhardt, Duff Green, John Ray, Jonathan S. Findlay, Benjamin H. Reeves.

Jefferson—Daniel Hammond.

Lincoln—Malcolm Henry.

Montgomery—Jonathan Ramsey, James Talbott.

Madison—Nathaniel Cook.

New Madrid—Robert D. Dawson, Christopher G. Houts.

Pike—Stephen Cleaver.

St. Charles—Benjamin Emmons, Nathan Boone, Hiram H. Barber.

Ste. Genevieve—John D. Cook, Henry Dodge, John Scott, R. T. Brown.

St. Louis—David Barton, Edward Bates, Alexander McNair, William Rector, John C. Sullivan, Pierre Chouteau, Jr., Bernard Pratte, Thomas F. Riddick.

Washington—John Rice Jones, Samuel Perry, John Hutchings.

Wayne—Elijah Bettis.

David Barton was elected president of the convention and William G. Pittis, secretary.

The constitution which the convention formed took effect from the authority of the body itself, no provision having been made to submit it to the vote of the people. It withstood the mutations of parties and all efforts at material amendment from the time of its adoption till the convention of 1865.

The Clay Compromise.—November 16, Mr. Scott laid before the House of Representatives at Washington a copy of the constitution of the new State, when a fresh debate arose, first, because the constitution sanctioned slavery and, second, because one of its articles especially enjoined that such laws should be passed as might be necessary to prevent free mulattoes and negroes from coming to or settling in the new State, under any pretext whatsoever.

The perils of the political situation becoming imminent, Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, moved that twenty-three representatives, one from each State, be appointed to act jointly with the Senate committee, in an attempt to adjust the difficulty. Such a committee was chosen with Mr. Clay as its chairman. The Senate also appointed seven of its members on the joint committee, which, on February 26, 1821, reported to each House the following:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress Assembled, That Missouri shall be admitted into this Union on an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatever, upon the fundamental condition that the fourth clause of the twenty-sixth section of the third article of the constitution, submitted on the part of said State to Congress, shall never be construed to authorize the passage of any law, and that no law shall be passed in conformity thereto, by which any citizen of either of the States in this Union shall be excluded from the enjoyment of any of the privileges and immunities to which such citizen is entitled under the constitution of the United States. Provided, That the Legislature of said State, by a solemn public act, shall declare the assent of the said State to the said fundamental condition, and shall transmit to the President of the United States, on or before the fourth Monday in November next, an authentic copy of the said act; upon the receipt whereof the President, by proclamation, shall announce the fact; whereupon, and without any further proceeding on the part of Congress, the admission of the said State into the Union shall be considered as complete.

The resolution was soon adopted by both Houses, and on the 26th of the following June, the Legislature of Missouri adopted an act declaring the assent of the State to the conditions of admission, and transmitted to the President a copy of the same. August 10, 1821, after a struggle of two years and a half, the admission of Missouri into the Union was announced by the proclamation of President Monroe, and the State from that day took rank as the twenty-fourth of the American Republic.

First General Assembly.—Anticipating the admission of the State into the Union a general election had been held August 28, 1820. Alex. McNair was chosen governor; Wm. H. Ashley, lieutenant-governor, and John Scott, representative to Congress. Senators and representatives to the General Assembly (fourteen of the former and forty-three of the latter) were also elected. This body convened at St. Louis in September, and elected David Barton and Thomas H. Benton United States senators, although, as the State was not formally admitted into the Union until the following August, they were not allowed to take their places until December, 1821. Mr. Benton held the position of United States senator for thirty consecutive years.

At this session of the Legislature were organized the counties of Boone, Callaway, Chariton, Cole, Gasconade, Lillard (afterward La Fayette), Perry, Ralls, Ray and Saline. The seat of government was fixed at St. Charles, but was moved, in 1826, to Jefferson City. According to the first census taken in September, 1821, the population of the State was 70,647, of whom 11,254 were slaves.

EARLY WARS.

War of 1812.—Although the inhabitants of Missouri were far distant from the principal scenes of this conflict, they participated in many engagements with the Indians, and were obliged to exercise ceaseless vigilance against their insidious foe. For several years British traders had incited the savages against the settlers, and had supplied the former with arms and ammunition. In July, 1810, W. I. Cole and two other men at Loutre Island were killed while attempting to rescue property stolen by the Pottawattomies. In 1815 the Sac and Fox Indians, who had stolen horses from the same settlement, were followed by a party of "rangers," with Capt. James Callaway, a grandson of Daniel Boone, in command. Four of the pursuers, including Capt. Callaway, were killed.

In 1813 Fort Madison, Iowa, was abandoned by its garrison, and burned to save it from Indian occupation. During the same year the scattered settlements in the present counties of Montgomery, Lincoln and Pike were often plundered by the Indians, under the renowned Black Hawk and other noted chiefs. In St. Charles County there were many massacres, but at length a number of forts were erected, which proved a sufficient protection against further outrages. The Boone's Lick country was constantly harassed by tribes, who stole horses and murdered the inhabitants. Living beyond the jurisdiction of any organized county, these pioneers built forts, and defended themselves. Sentinels kept guard while the fields were plowed, sown and harvested, and upon the appearance of danger the people were notified by means of signals, and hastened to the shelter of the forts.

At Cote Sans Dessein (now Barkersville), on the Missouri River in Callaway County, three men and two women successfully withstood a protracted and determined siege of the Indians.

Of all the murders committed by the savages, none aroused more indignation than that of Capt. Sarshell Cooper, who was shot while sitting at his own fireside in Cooper's Fort, in the Boone's Lick country, in 1814. An Indian crept to the wall of Cooper's cabin, which also formed one side of the fort, and made a small opening between the logs, through which the fatal shot was fired.

Black Hawk War.—In 1804 a treaty was concluded between the United States and the Sac and Fox Indians. One old warrior of the Sacs, however, called Black Hawk, who had fought with great bravery in the service of Great Britain during the War of 1812 had always taken exception to this treaty, pronouncing it void. In 1831 he established himself with a chosen band of braves upon the disputed territory in Illinois, ordering the whites to leave the country at once. Fifteen hundred volunteers from that State, aided by Gen. Gaines, with a company of regulars, surprised the Indians, and forced them into another treaty, by which they ceded all their lands east of the Mississippi, and agreed to remain upon the other side of the river. Soon, however, a band of these same Indians attacked a party of friendly Menomines encamped at Prairie du Chien, murdering twenty-five and wounding many others. Brig.-Gen. Atkinson, with a large detachment of regular troops from Jefferson Barracks, was sent to chastise the murderers who had thus flagrantly violated their treaty. Upon this Black Hawk, with his adherents, recrossed the Mississippi and established himself at Rock River. Keokuk was the rightful chief of the Sacs and Foxes, and with the majority of his tribes remained true to their agreement with the United States, but Black Hawk's followers were bent upon revenge and plunder. May 14, 1832, a bloody engagement occurred near Dixon's Ferry. On account of the proximity of these hostilities to the Missouri border, and fearing an Indian invasion, Gov. Miller ordered Maj.-Gen. Richard Gentry, of Columbia, this State, to raise 1,000 volunteers, prepared to start for the frontier at a moment's warning.

Accordingly on May 29, 1832, orders were issued by Gen. Gentry to Brig.-Gens. Benjamin Means, commanding the Seventh; Jonathan Riggs, the Eighth, and Jesse T. Wood, the Ninth Brigade, Third Division, to raise, the first named 400 and each of the last 300 men. Each man was "to keep in readiness a horse with the necessary equipment, and a rifle in good order, with an ample supply of ammunition." Five companies were at once raised in Boone County, and others in Callaway, Montgomery, St. Charles, Lincoln, Pike, Marion, Ralls, Clay and Monroe. Two of them, Capt. John Jamison's, of Callaway, and Capt. David M. Hickman's, of Boone, in July, 1832, were mustered into service for thirty days, and placed under command of Maj. Thomas Conyers. This detachment, accompanied by Gen. Gentry in person, arrived at Palmyra July 10, and at Fort Pike, which was situated on the Des Moines, at the present site of St. Francisville, in Clark County, five days afterward. Finding that no hostile Indians had entered Missouri, Gen. Gentry ordered work to be discontinued on Fort Matson, in the northern part of Adair County, sixty-five miles from Fort Pike, and within eight miles of the Chariton, and left for Columbia, where he arrived on July 19. Maj. Conyers' command was left at Fort Pike. On August 5 this detachment was relieved by two other companies under Capts. Sinclair Kirtley, of Boone, and Patrick Ewing, of Callaway. Maj. Conyers' remained in command of the fort. In September, the Indian troubles having apparently subsided, the troops on the northern frontier of Missouri were mustered out of service.

For nearly a year afterward, the war was continued at various points in Illinois and Iowa, until, at the decisive battle of the Bad Axe, Black Hawk was entirely defeated, and a great number of his followers killed. He himself escaped, but was soon captured and delivered to the United States officers. He was carried in triumph through a great part of the States, after which, shorn of his power, if not his ambition, he was permitted to return to his tribe. Black Hawk died at the village of his people, on the Des Moines River, in Davis County, Iowa, in 1838, aged about seventy years.

Seminole War.—Florida originally belonged to Spain. Among its aboriginal inhabitants was a humane, romantic tribe of Indians—the Seminoles. Their manners were gentle, and their language soft; but the wrongs they suffered are as deep and wicked as any ever inflicted by a civilized nation upon a weak and defenseless people. Escaping slaves found refuge in the Spanish Territory, formed settlements along the Appalachicola and Suwanee Rivers and became members of the Seminole and Creek nations, holding lands and enjoying the fruits of their labors. Spain refused to deliver up the fugitives who had thus intermarried with the Indians, and whose descendants soon became an almost indistinguishable part of the tribe. The slaveholders of Georgia were furious, and the government of that State, on several occasions, sent troops into the Creek country and laid waste villages, burned huts, and killed innocent members of the tribe. Spain resented these piratical raids, and the President of the United States was compelled to disavow any responsibility for such outrages, which nevertheless continued.

On July 27, 1816, an old fort situated on the Appalachicola, which had been built by the British during the War of 1812, and subsequently occupied by the blacks and their descendants, was blown up by forces under command of Gen. Gaines. There were in the fort 334 persons, mostly women and children, and 270 of these unfortunate creatures were instantly torn in pieces.

The Seminoles, goaded from their placid ways, attempted to retaliate; but their efforts, though gallant, were feeble. The raids upon the Seminole country and its citizens continued, and the state of affairs became a matter of serious perplexity to the general Government.

In 1835, during President Jackson's administration, renewed hostilities arose from an attempt to remove the Seminoles and Creeks to lands west of the Mississippi. The chief of the former tribe was Osceola, a half breed of great talents and audacity, who, driven to desperation by personal wrongs, as well as those inflicted upon his people, formed a conspiracy to slaughter the whites and devastate the country. The Creeks were soon conquered and set beyond the Mississippi. In 1837 Osceola was captured and soon after died, but the war continued.

In the fall of 1837 the Secretary of War issued a requisition on Gov. Boggs, of Missouri, for two regiments of mounted volunteers for the Seminole War.

The first regiment was raised chiefly in Boone and neighboring counties by Col. Gentry, and was composed of eight companies. Four companies of the second regiment were also raised and attached to the first. Of these latter, two companies were composed of Delaware and Osage Indians.

Col. Gentry's regiment left Missouri in October, 1837. The men were taken by boat from St. Louis to New Orleans, and transported thence to Tampa Bay, Florida. On the voyage they encountered a severe storm, and several of the vessels were stranded. Many horses were lost but no men, and on the 15th of November the troops disembarked at their destination. On the 1st of December they received orders from Gen. Zachary Taylor, then commanding in Florida, to march to Okeechobee Lake, in the vicinity of which the whole force of the Seminoles was said to have collected. Having reached the Kissimee River, seventy miles distant, the cavalry scouts captured several Indians, from whom Col. Gentry learned that their main forces were near at hand, and immediately crossing the river he formed the Missouri volunteers in front, and, supporting them at a proper distance by the regular army on either flank, advanced to meet the attack. The Indians had chosen a fine position, and continued the battle with a pertinacity seldom exhibited in their method of warfare. Col. Gentry fought on foot, as did all his command, and had repulsed the enemy after several hours of severe fighting. He was gradually pushing them across a swamp, and had nearly reached the dry soil when a bullet pierced his abdomen, inflicting a fatal wound. He knew its serious nature, yet stood erect an hour afterward, and cheered his men to victory, until, at last, being compelled to desist, he was borne from the field, and expired the same night. The Missourians continued to fight several hours after the fall of their leader, until the Indians were entirely vanquished. The loss of the whites in killed and wounded was 138, most of whom were Missourians.

The forces from this State being no longer needed, they returned to their homes early in 1838. The remains of Col. Gentry, as well as those of Capt. Vanswearingen and Lieuts. Brooke and Center, of the Sixth Regular United States Infantry, were afterward brought to Jefferson Barracks and buried, the Government of the United States erecting over them a suitable monument. The country of Gentry was named in memory of the gallant commander.

After a war of eight years, during which nearly $40,000,000 had been expended, several hundred persons seized and enslaved, and hundreds of lives lost, the Seminoles and their colored kindred were removed as far as the Cherokee country, and subsequently to that of the Creeks. After persistent attempts of the latter to reduce them to a state of servitude, and after many of the exiles had been actually seized and sold into perpetual bondage, the remainder of the blacks, excepting 200 who were supposed to be so intermarried with the Seminoles as to render them safe, abandoned the country and fled to Mexico.

The Mormon War.—The origin, rapid development and prosperity of the religious sect, commonly called the Mormons, are among the most remarkable historical events of the present century. That an obscure individual, without money, education or elevated position in society, should persuade people to believe him inspired of God, and cause a book, insignificant as a literary production, to be received as a continuation of the sacred revelation, appears almost incredible. Yet in less than half a century the disciples of this personage have increased to hundreds of thousands; have founded a State in the distant wilderness, and compelled the Government of the United States to practically recognize them as an independent people.

The founder of Mormonism was Joseph Smith, a native of Vermont, who emigrated, while quite young, with his father's family to western New York. The story of the finding of the golden plates in the "Hill of Cumarah," their transcription, the printing of the Mormon Bible, the organization of the first church of the new faith, are themes not important to be considered here. It may be well to state in passing that the believers in Mormonism claim that their Bible gives a history of the peopling of the Western Continent, as the common Bible narrates the origin of the human race on the Eastern, and the Mormons accept both volumes as of Divine inspiration, calling themselves "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." The common name by which they are known is that given to one of the writers of the Mormon Bible.

Having gained a number of converts, Smith, in 1831, moved to Kirtland, Ohio, and, during the same year, made a visit to Missouri in search of a location for "Zion." He found it at Independence, Jackson County, named the place "The New Jerusalem," and returned to Kirtland.

In 1832 Smith established himself with many followers in Jackson County. Here the new church acquired several thousand acres of land, which the members professed to hold in common, and published a paper called The Morning and Evening Star, in which were printed promises of boundless prosperity to the "Saints," and frightful denunciations against the "Gentiles." The result was a series of trifling encounters between the two parties, until, October 31, 1833, an engagement occurred near Westport, in which two citizens and one Mormon were killed.

The Gentile citizens of Jackson County now rose in arms in considerable numbers, and committed a series of acts of violence toward the Mormons. The bishop was tarred and feathered, the printing press thrown into the river, the storehouse plundered, and the "Saints" were forced to leave the county without any compensation whatever for the lands they were compelled to abandon.

The Mormons next located in Clay, Carroll and Caldwell Counties, but principally in the latter, which was organized for their benefit. They established headquarters at Far West, which was founded in 1836, and which Smith assured his followers would soon become one of the great cities of the world. As the result of the preaching of missionaries in the Eastern States, converts flocked into the country, and their settlements soon spread into Daviess and Clinton Counties, but Far West was their chief town and commercial center. Some of the Mormon settlers were good and industrious people, but many were violent and lawless, and considered that they had a right to take anything they chose from the Gentiles. As the latter were in the minority in Caldwell County, and as most of the county offices were held by "Saints," there was considerable dissatisfaction among the Gentiles, and violent deeds were committed on either side.

In Carroll County a committee of citizens waited upon the leaders of the Mormon settlement at De Witt, and notified them that they must leave the county. Mormon recruits poured into the town, and an engagement took place on the 21st of September, 1838, but no serious casualty occurred. The attacking party was now increased by reinforcements to 400 or 500 men, but, before renewing the battle, they demanded once more that the obnoxious settlers should leave the county.

Although the terms of this proposition were quite stringent, they were acceded to, and the Saints loaded their property on wagons and removed to Far West.

October 25 a skirmish took place at Crooked River, in the southwestern part of Caldwell County, where one Gentile was killed, several others wounded, and David Patten, the leader of the Danite Band or United Brothers of Gideon, and two other Mormons, were killed. The Gentiles were commanded by Capt. Sam. Bogart.

The people of Missouri now determined to be rid of the Mormons, and in 1838 Gov. Boggs issued an order to Maj.-Gen. David R. Atchison, to call out the militia of his division and proceed against the Mormons and expel them from the State or "extenuate them." A part of the First Brigade of the Missouri State Militia, under command of Gen. Alexander W. Doniphan, at once proceeded to the seat of war. Upon receipt of Gov. Boggs' exterminating order, Gen. Atchison left the field, and the command of the forces was turned over to Maj.-Gen. S. D. Lucas, of Independence, pending the arrival of Gen. John B. Clark, of Howard County. The Mormon forces, numbering about 600 men, were led by Col. George W. Hinkle.

The principal event was the massacre at Haun's mills, five miles south of the present site of Breckinridge, Caldwell County. Three militiamen were wounded and seventeen of the Mormons, two of them little boys, killed — some of them after their surrender — and their bodies were thrown into a half-finished well. This massacre, for it was nothing else, was perpetrated by 250 men from Livingston and Daviess Counties, under Col. Thomas Jennings.

When the militia appeared at Far West, where the principal Mormon forces were gathered, the Mormons surrendered, agreeing to Gen. Lucas' conditions, viz.: That they should deliver up their arms, pay the expenses of the war, surrender their prominent leaders for trial, and the remainder of the Mormons should, with their families, leave the State.

The leaders were taken before a court of inquiry at Richmond, Judge Austin A. King presiding. He remanded them to Daviess County to await the action of the grand jury on a charge of treason against the State. The Daviess County jail being poor, they were confined at Liberty. Indictments for various offenses—treason, murder, robbery, receiving stolen goods, arson, resisting legal process, etc.,—were found against Joseph Smith, Hiram Smith, Sidney Rigdon, G. W. Hinkle, Parley P. Pratt and a number of others. Sidney Rigdon was released on a writ of habeas corpus. The others requested a change of venue, and Judge King sent their cases to Boone County for trial. On their way to Columbia, under a military guard, Joe Smith effected his escape. It is generally believed that the guard was bribed; subsequently P. P. Pratt and others also escaped; some of the prisoners were acquitted, and the indictments dismissed against all the others. In connection with the removal of the Mormons, and according to the terms of their surrender, there were many terrible scenes. Numbers of them were poor, and had invested their all in lands from which they were about to be driven. Valuable farms were traded for an old wagon, a horse, a yoke of oxen, or anything that would furnish means of transportation. In many instances, conveyances of lands were demanded and enforced at the muzzle of the pistol or the rifle. Nearly 4,000 Mormons removed from Caldwell County to Nauvoo, Ill.

The Mexican War.—From 1821 to 1836 the vast territory between Louisiana and Mexico had been a province of the latter. It had been the policy of Spain and Mexico to keep Texas uninhabited, in order that the vigorous race of Americans might not encroach on the Mexican borders. At last, however, a large land grant was made to Moses Austin, of Connecticut, on condition that he would settle 300 American families within the limits of his domain. Afterward the grant was confirmed to his son Stephen, with the privilege of establishing 500 additional families of immigrants. Thus the foundation of Texas was laid by people of the English race.

Owing to the oppressive policy adopted by Mexico, the Texans, in 1835, raised the standard of rebellion. Many adventurers and some heroes from the United States flocked to their aid. In the first battle fought at Gonzales, 1,000 Mexicans were defeated by a Texan force numbering 500. On March 6, 1836, a Texan fort, called the Alamo, was surrounded by a Mexican army, commanded by Pres. Santa Anna. The feeble garrison was overpowered and massacred under circumstances of great atrocity. David Crockett, an ex-congressman of Tennessee, and a famous hunter, was one of the victims of the butchery. In the next month was fought the decisive battle of San Jacinto, which gave to Texas her freedom. The independence of the new State was acknowledged by the United States, Great Britain and France.

On the 1st of March, 1844, Texas was admitted into the American Union as a sovereign State, and on the 4th of July, 1845, the Texan Legislature ratified the act of annexation. Knowing the warlike attitude of Mexico, the authorities of Texas sent an immediate and urgent request to the President to dispatch an army for their protection. Accordingly, Gen. Zachary Taylor was ordered to occupy Texas. The real issue between that State and Mexico was concerning boundaries. Texas claimed the Rio Grande as her western limit, while Mexico was determined to have the Nueces as the separating line. The territory between the two rivers was in dispute. Having made an unsuccessful attempt to settle the difficulty by negotiation, the American Government sent Gen. Taylor to Corpus Christi, at the mouth of the Nueces, where, by the beginning of November, 1845, he had concentrated a force of 4,000 or 5,000 men. In the following January Gen. Taylor was ordered to advance to the Rio Grande. He took his station opposite Matamoras and hastily erected a fortress, afterward named Fort Brown.

In April, 1846, Mexico declared war against the United States, and this was promptly followed by a counter declaration, on the part of the American Congress, against Mexico. Soon after this exchange of challenges, the Mexicans crossed the Rio Grande in strong force, headed by their famous generals, Arista and Ampudia, and, on the 8th and 9th of May, at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, were met and repulsed with great slaughter by Gen. Taylor.

When the news of the battles on the Rio Grande was borne through the Union, the national spirit was everywhere aroused, and party dissensions were hushed into silence. A call was made for 50,000 volunteers, and Missouri was not backward among her sister States in responding to the appeal. The St. Louis Legion, a military organization under command of Col. A. R. Easton, quickly prepared for the field of action. Supplies were raised for them by liberal subscriptions on the part of the citizens, and in a few days they departed for the seat of war. The American forces were organized in three divisions: The Army of the West, under Gen. Kearney, to cross the Rocky Mountains and conquer the northern Mexican provinces; the Army of the Center, under Gen. Scott as commander-in-chief, to march from the Gulf coast into the heart of the enemy's country; and the Army of Occupation, commanded by Gen. Taylor, to subdue and hold the districts on the Rio Grande. About the middle of May, 1846, Gov. Edwards, of Missouri, called for mounted volunteers to join the first of these divisions, which was about to undertake an expedition to Santa Fe. By the 18th of June the full complement of companies to compose the First Regiment had arrived at Fort Leavenworth, the appointed rendezvous. These volunteers were from the counties of Jackson, Lafayette, Clay, Saline, Franklin, Cole, Howard and Callaway. Alexander W. Doniphan, of Clay, was elected colonel; C. F. Ruff, lieutenant-colonel, and William Gilpin, major. The battalion of light artillery, from St. Louis, was commanded by Capts. R. H. Weightman and A. W. Fischer, with Maj. M. L. Clark as its field officer. Battalions of infantry from Platte and Cole Counties were commanded by Capts. Murphy and W. Z. Augney, respectively. The Laclede Rangers, from St. Louis, were led by Capt. Thomas B. Henderson.

In all, Gen. Kearney had 1,658 men and sixteen pieces of ordnance. After a long and wearisome march he reached Santa Fe, and on the 18th of August captured and garrisoned the city. The whole of New Mexico submitted without resistance. With a body of 400 dragoons Kearney then continued his march toward the Pacific coast, leaving Col. Doniphan in command of New Mexico.

With a body of 700 fearless men, this latter officer made one of the most brilliant movements of the war. He undertook a march through the enemy's country from Santa Fe to Saltillo, a distance of more than 800 miles. Reaching the Rio Grande on Christmas day, he fought and gained the battle of Bracito; then crossing the river, captured El Paso, and in two months pressed his way to within twenty miles of Chihuahua. On the banks of Sacramento Creek he met the Mexicans in overwhelming numbers, and on the 28th of February completely routed them. He then marched unopposed into Chihuahua, a city of more than 40,000 inhabitants, and finally reached the division of Gen. Wool in safety.

Early in the summer of 1846 Hon. Sterling Price, a member of Congress from Missouri, resigned, and was appointed by President Polk to command another regiment of Missouri volunteers to reinforce the Army of the West. This force consisted of a full mounted regiment, one mounted extra battalion, and one extra battalion of Mormon infantry. These troops were raised in the counties of Boone, Benton, Carroll, Chariton, Linn, Livingston, Monroe, Randolph, Ste. Genevieve and St. Louis, with Lieut.-Col. David Willock's extra battalion from Marion, Ray and Platte.

Col. Price's command took up the line of march for Santa Fe over the same route pursued by Doniphan and Kearney, and arrived on September 28, three days after Kearney's departure for California.

In the winter of 1847 an insurrection against the American authority broke out in New Mexico, and on the 24th of January Col. Price met the enemy, numbering about 2,000 men, at Canada, and repulsed them with a slight loss on both sides. He totally routed them at El Embudo, on January 29. On February 3 he found the Mexicans and Indians strongly fortified at Taos, and engaged them on the following day with shot and shell. The battle raged all day, and at night the Mexicans surrendered. Price's loss in these three engagements was but fifteen killed and forty-seven wounded. Afterward, by order of Gen. Price, twenty-one of the Mexican leaders were hung.

In August, 1847, Gov. Edwards made another requisition for 1,000 infantry to follow Col. Price's command. The regiment was organized immediately, and Maj. John Dougherty, of Clay County, was chosen colonel, but before it marched the President countermanded the order under which it was raised.

Another regiment of mounted volunteers (the Third Missouri Regiment) was formed to serve during the Mexican War. It was commanded by Col. John Ralls, of Ralls County, and was mustered into service about May, 1847. A portion of this regiment went as far as El Paso, Chihuahua and Santa Cruz De Rosales, and at the latter place participated in a battle against the Mexicans under Gen. Trias. The enemy were in the town, and sheltered by breastworks, but after fighting all day were obliged to surrender with their arms, ammunition, wagons and teams. The Americans were commanded by Gen. Sterling Price.

The war was now drawing to a close. Everywhere the arms of the United States had been victorious, and on February 2, 1848, a treaty was concluded between the two belligerent nations. By the terms of settlement the boundary line between Mexico and the United States was fixed as follows: The Rio Grande from its mouth to the southern limit of New Mexico; thence westward along the southern, and northward along the western boundary of that Territory to the river Gila; thence down that river to the Colorado; thence westward to the Pacific. The whole of New Mexico and Upper California was relinquished to the United States. Mexico guaranteed the free navigation of the Gulf of California, and the Colorado River from its mouth to the confluence of the Gila. In consideration of these territorial acquisitions and privileges, the United States agreed to surrender all places held by military occupation in Mexico; to pay into the treasury of that country $15,000,000, and to assume all debts due from the Mexican Government to American citizens, said debts not to exceed $3,500,000. Thus, at last, was the territory of the United States spread out in one broad belt from ocean to ocean.

Constitutional Convention of 1845.—At the August election of 1845, sixty-six members were chosen by the people to remodel the constitution. Representation under the old constitution, which allowed each county at least one representative, and limited the whole number to 100 members in the lower branch of the General Assembly, had become very unequal. Chiefly to remedy this irregularity, but at the same time for other purposes, the convention was called.

It convened at Jefferson City, on November 17, 1845, and organized by the election of Robert W. Wells as president; Claiborne F. Jackson, vice-president, and R. Walker, secretary. Some of the most able and distinguished men of the State were members of this body. The whole organic law was reviewed, and, in many material respects, remodeled. The convention adopted (ayes, forty-nine, nays, thirteen) a new constitution, and submitted it to the people, and adjourned sine die January 14, 1846. During the canvass the constitution was very generally discussed by the newspapers and candidates, and finally, at the August election, rejected by about 9,000 majority, the whole number of votes cast being about 60,000.

EVENTS PRECEDING THE CIVIL WAR.

The Jackson Resolutions.—The sixteenth General Assembly of Missouri, which convened at Jefferson City, December 25, 1848, will ever be remembered for its passage of the famous "Jackson Resolutions." The occasion of these was a bill called the "Wilmot-Anti-Slavery Proviso," which had been introduced into the preceding Congress by Hon. David Wilmot of Pennsylvania, prohibiting the extension of slavery into the recently acquired Territories. Slave holders throughout the Southern States were exceedingly agitated over this measure, seeing that it must effectually put an end to the formation of new pro-slavery States, thus giving the majority of members in Congress to the anti-slavery party, and insuring the final triumph of the Free Soilers. As a result of the excitement in Missouri, Carty Wells, a Democratic State senator from Lincoln County, introduced into the Upper House of the Legislature a series of resolutions on various subjects suggested by the Wilmot Proviso, which was referred to the Senate Committee on Federal Relations. On January 15, 1849, Claiborne F. Jackson, senator from Howard County, reported from this committee to the Senate the following modification of Mr. Wells' resolutions:

Resolved, by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, That the Federal constitution was the result of a compromise between the conflicting interests of the State which formed it, and in no part of that instrument is to be found any delegation of power to Congress to legislate on the subject of slavery, excepting some special provisions, having in view the prospective abolition of the African slave trade, made for the securing the recovery of fugitive slaves; any attempt, therefore, on the part of Congress to legislate on the subject, so as to affect the institution of slavery in the States, in the District of Columbia, or in the Territories, is, to say the least, a violation of the principles upon which that instrument was founded.

2. That the Territories acquired by the blood and treasure of the whole nation ought to be governed for the common benefit of the people of all the States, and any organization of the Territorial Governments, excluding the citizens of any part of the Union from removing to such Territories with their property, would be an exercise of power, by Congress, inconsistent with the spirit upon which our Federal compact was based, insulting to the sovereignty and dignity of the States thus affected, calculated to alienate one portion of the Union from another, and tending ultimately to disunion.

3. That the General Assembly regard the conduct of the Northern States on the subject of slavery as releasing the slave-holding States from all further adherence to the basis of compromise fixed on by the act of Congress of March 6, 1820, even if such act ever did impose any obligation upon the slave-holding States, and authorizes them to insist upon their rights under the constitution; but for the sake of harmony, and for the preservation of our Federal Union, they will sanction the application of the principles of the Missouri Compromise to the recent territorial acquisitions, if by such concession future aggressions upon the equal rights of the States may be arrested and the spirit of anti-slavery fanaticism be extinguished.

4. The right to prohibit slavery in any Territory belongs exclusively to the people thereof, and can only be exercised by them in forming their constitution for a State government, or in their sovereign capacity as an independent State.

5. That in the event of the passage of any act of Congress, conflicting with the principles herein expressed, Missouri will be found in hearty co-operation with the slave-holding States, in such measures as may be deemed necessary for our mutual protection against the encroachments of Northern fanaticism.

6. That our senators in Congress be instructed and our representatives be requested to act in conformity to the foregoing resolutions.

The resolutions were written by Hon. William B. Napton, afterward one of the judges of the supreme court.

The scope of this work forbids a detailed account of the discussion which followed the introduction of these resolutions into the General Assembly, as well as the names of the many distinguished men who took opposing sides upon the question of their adoption. The Jackson resolutions were finally adopted after much opposition, particularly in the Lower House, where a strong but unsuccessful attempt was made to modify them.

Perhaps the chief object in the introduction and passage of the resolutions was the retirement of Senator Thomas H. Benton. His course in and out of the Senate had become obnoxious to many of the Democratic politicians of the State, who determined to get rid of him. They knew he would not obey the instructions contained in the resolutions, and this would furnish an excuse for a refusal to return him for another term. There was much excitement throughout the State, and the feeling was still farther intensified by the course of Senator Benton, who appealed from the Legislature to the people, and prosecuted a canvass against the resolutions, denouncing them in powerful and passionate speeches, as tending to the dismemberment of the Union. He declared them to be in direct contradiction to the Missouri Compromise, upon which depended the safety and harmony of the nation.

That Col. Benton was right in his position, although, perhaps, intemperate in its defense, is perfectly apparent in the light of subsequent events; but his crusade against the "Jackson Resolutions" resulted in his defeat at the next election, when, after thirty years of loyal service toward his State and Nation, he was succeeded in 1851 by the Whig candidate, Henry S. Geyer, an eminent lawyer of St. Louis, who was chosen by Democratic votes.

Organization of Kansas and Nebraska.—Missouri was admitted into the Union as a slave State in the year 1820, only upon the terms of the Missouri Compromise, which forever prohibited involuntary servitude in territory north of $36^{\circ} 30'$, now constituting Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho and a portion of Minnesota. And now this great domain was to be organized into territorial governments. Already into these vast regions the tide of immigration was pouring, and it became necessary to provide for the future. In December, 1852, Hon. Willard P. Hall, of Missouri, introduced a bill into the United States House of Representatives, to organize the Territory of Platte, which was designed to embrace the country above mentioned. Having been referred to the Committee on Territories, that committee, in February, 1853, reported a bill to establish a territorial government in the Territory of Nebraska. As this bill did not contemplate a repeal of the Missouri Compromise, it was opposed in the House by all the Southern delegations. The only senators from the South who voted for it were David R. Atchison and Henry S. Geyer, of Missouri. On January 16, 1854, when the subject again came before the Senate, Senator Dixon, of Kentucky, gave notice that whenever the Nebraska bill should be called up, he would move an amendment to the effect that the Missouri Compromise, drawing the line of 36° 30' north latitude, and forever prohibiting slavery or involuntary servitude north of said line, should not be so construed as to apply to the Territory contemplated by the act, or to any other Territory of the United States; but that the citizens of the several States or Territories should be at liberty to take and hold their slaves within any of the Territories or States to be founded therefrom. That is to say, in plain language, that the Missouri Compromise should be made null and void. The announcement of this amendment in Congress was immediately followed by the most intense excitement throughout the country. Indeed, the introduction, in 1848, of the Wilmot Proviso, did not rouse the people in a greater degree.

On January 23, 1854, Senator Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois, reported from the Committee on Territories a bill which provided for the organization of the region of country embraced by Mr. Hall's bill, known as the Platte country, from the Platte River, which flows through it into two Territories, namely, Kansas and Nebraska. As Senator Douglas' bill must always be an important document in history, we transcribe some part of it.

* * * * *

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That, in order to avoid misconstruction, it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of this act, so far as the question of slavery is concerned, to carry into practical operation the following propositions and principles, established by the compromise measures of 1850, to wit:

First. That all questions pertaining to slavery in the Territories, and in the new States to be formed therefrom, are to be left to the decision of the people residing therein, through their appropriate representatives.

Second. That all cases involving title to slaves and questions of personal freedom are referred to the adjudication of the local tribunals, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Third. That the provisions of the constitution and laws of the United States, in respect to fugitives from service, are to be carried into faithful execution in all the organized Territories, the same as in the States.

The section of the bill which prescribed the qualifications and mode of election of a delegate to Congress from each of the Territories was as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, * * * * * That the constitution and laws of the United States, which are not locally applicable, shall have the same force and effect within the said Territory of Kansas as elsewhere within the United States, except the eight sections of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri into the Union, approved March 6, 1820, which was superseded by the principles of the legislation of 1850, commonly called the compromise measures, and is declared inoperative.

The debate which ensued upon the introduction of this bill, known as the "Kansas-Nebraska Bill," was conducted with great ability, and lasted several weeks. On February 6, Hon. S. P. Chase, a senator from Ohio, who was afterward Secretary of the Treasury under Lincoln's administration, and finally chief justice of the United States, moved to strike out so much of the bill as declared the Missouri Compromise "superseded" by the compromise of 1850, but the motion was defeated. On February 15 Mr. Douglas moved to strike out the clause objected to by Mr. Chase, and insert the following:

Which being inconsistent with the principle of non-intervention by Congress with slavery in the States and Territories, as recognized by the legislation of 1850 (commonly called the compromise measures), is hereby declared inoperative and void; it being the true intent and meaning of this act not to legislate slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom, but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the constitution of the United States.

This amendment embodied what was afterward known as the doctrine of "squatter sovereignty." It was at once adopted by the Senate; but Mr. Chase and others, not having full confidence that it was not the true intent and meaning of the act "to legislate slavery into any Territory or State," moved to add, after the words "United States," the following:

Under which the people of the Territories, through their appropriate representatives, may, if they see fit, prohibit the existence of slavery therein.

Mr. Chase's amendment was voted down. From January until May, Mr. Douglas' report was debated in Congress. By the Kansas-Nebraska bill the Missouri Compromise was virtually repealed, and the old settlement of the slavery question overthrown at a single blow. All the bitter sectional animosities of the past were aroused in full force. The bill was violently opposed by a majority of the representatives from the East and North; but the minority, uniting with the congressmen of the South, enabled Douglas to carry his measure through Congress, and in May, 1854, the bill received the sanction of the President.

Kansas itself now became a battlefield for the contending parties; whether the new State should admit slavery or not depended upon the vote of the people. Both factions made a rush for the territory in order to secure a majority. The people of Missouri were especially interested in the situation. Apprehensive that Kansas would become a free State, and that Missouri would in the future occupy the position of a slave-holding peninsula, jutting out into a sea of free soil, with Illinois and Iowa at the east and north, and Kansas and Nebraska on the west, many of her citizens, especially on the Kansas border, became seriously alarmed for the safety of their slaves, and in the excitement of the conflict were induced without authority of law to cross over into Kansas, and, carrying ballots in one hand and arms in the other, to coerce the new State into the Union with a pro-slavery constitution.

Meanwhile the Northern States were not idle. Massachusetts had chartered a wealthy corporation, called the Emigrant Aid Company; Connecticut followed soon after with a similar company. The New York Tribune, edited by Horace Greeley, opened a Kansas contribution, and aid societies sprang into activity at hundreds of points in the Northwest. Thus stimulated, the people of the free States flocked to Kansas in such numbers that in a few months they constituted a decided majority of the actual settlers. The Missourians, with force and arms, attempted to carry out their measures, and prevent Northern and Eastern settlers from passing through their State, but the emigrants then wound around through Iowa, thus circumventing their plans. The struggle between the hostile parties in Kansas and on the Missouri border resulted in a series of desultory but bloody encounters, some of which assumed the proportions of battles. Large and fiercely excited public meetings were held in Missouri, and at times in some localities a reign of intolerance and proscription prevailed. This was intensified in that portion of the State bordering on Kansas.

An election held in the new State in November of 1854 resulted in the choice of a pro-slavery delegate to Congress, and, in the general territorial election of the following year, the same party was triumphant. The State Legislature thus chosen assembled at Lecompton, organized the government, and framed a constitution permitting slavery. The Free Soil party declaring the general election to have been illegal, on account of fraudulent voting, assembled in convention at Topeka, September 25, 1855, framed a constitution excluding slavery, and organized a rival government. Civil war broke out between the factions.

From the autumn of 1855 until the following summer the Territory was the scene of constant turmoil and violence. The people of the North held meetings to enlist additional settlers, cash poured into the Tribune fund, and food, clothing, seeds, arms and money were sent in quantities to the Free Soil settlers.

On September 8, 1856, John W. Geary, of Pennsylvania, was appointed governor. He issued a proclamation of peace, and promised the settlers protection in their persons, pursuits and property. They, therefore, laid down their arms. This was no sooner done than an army from the Southern States attacked Lawrence, which had before been the scene of much violence; but Gov. Geary, calling out the United States troops, finally induced the invaders to retire. On January 26, 1857, the free Legislature met at Topeka, but was dispersed by the United States marshal, who captured several members and threw them into jail at Tecumseh. The pro-slavery people now met in legislature at Lecompton and adopted a resolution calling a convention to frame another State constitution.

Gov. Geary resigned because the pro-slavery United States Senate refused to uphold some of his measures, and Robert J. Walker, of Mississippi, was appointed to succeed him. Gov. Walker guaranteed protection to the settlers on election day, rejected fraudulent returns, condemned both the Lecompton constitution and the methods of promulgation, and started for Washington to prevent Congress from accepting it. The President had officially signed the instrument before the arrival of Gov. Walker, and the latter promptly resigned. J. W. Denver, of California, was appointed to succeed him.

An election was held for the rejection or adoption of the pro-slavery clauses of the Lecompton constitution, December 21, 1856. The Free-State men did not go to the polls, and the fraudulent instrument was therefore adopted by a vote of 6,143 to 569. The pro-slavery Legislature ordered a vote for State officers under the Lecompton constitution, January 4, 1858. The settlers' Legislature then submitted that constitution to the people, as a whole, to be accepted or rejected, this election also to take place on January 4, 1858. It was rejected by a majority of 10,226. Congress, after a long discussion, again sent the Lecompton constitution to a vote of the people, and again it was rejected by a majority of 10,000 votes, on August 3, 1858. Gov. Denver then resigned, and Samuel Medary, of Ohio, succeeded him.

The settlers' Legislature submitted another constitution, which was adopted. Some portions of it proving unsatisfactory, another convention was called, and at last the new constitution, forever prohibiting slavery, was promulgated at Wyandotte, July 4, 1859, and was adopted in October by a 4,000 majority. On December 6, 1859, a State election was held under the new constitution, and Charles Robinson, who had been chosen governor under the first Topeka constitution, in 1856, was once more elected to that office. January 29, 1861, Kansas came into the Union as a free State, and ultimately Nebraska was admitted upon the same conditions.

The facts thus briefly stated constitute the civil history of the struggle in Kansas. A fratricidal war raged over her rich plains for three years. Bloodshed, robbery, devastation and fire spread like a pestilence through her humble settlements, and but a faint shadow of the fearful events of that period is cast upon these pages.

In the final adjustment of these questions in Congress, Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois, and James S. Green, of Missouri, played a prominent part. Senator Green opposed the views of Mr. Douglas, and, as the acknowledged leader of the pro-slavery party, maintained his ground with rare ability and eloquence. Coming into the Senate, in 1857, during the discussion of the question of the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution, he supported the policy of the administration in speeches distinguished not only by perspicuity of style, but by powers of argument which called forth commendations, even from those who did not share his convictions.

The Dred Scott Decision.—A few days after the inauguration of President Buchanan (1857) the supreme court of the United States delivered the celebrated opinion known in American history as "The Dred Scott Decision."

Dred Scott was a negro slave belonging to Dr. Emerson, who was a surgeon in the army of the United States. In 1834 Dr. Emerson took Scott from the State of Missouri to the military post at Rock Island, Ill., and held him there as a slave until April or May, 1836. At the time last mentioned Dr. Emerson removed Scott to Fort Snelling, Minn., and there held him until 1838. At the latter place Scott was married to a colored woman who had been taken to Fort Snelling by her master in 1835, and had been subsequently sold there to Dr. Emerson. Two children were born of this marriage, and then the whole family were taken back to St. Louis and sold. Dred thereupon brought a complaint of assault and battery against John F. A. Sandford, the purchaser of himself, his wife and children, which was tried in the United States Circuit Court for the District of Missouri.

Before beginning this suit Scott had brought another in the State courts of Missouri for his freedom, on the ground that, having been a resident of a free State and a free Territory, he thereby relieved himself from the chains of bondage and became a citizen of the United States. The inferior court gave judgment in his favor, but on a writ of error to the supreme court of the State the judgment was reversed and the case remanded for a new trial. By consent this action was continued to await decision on the suit for assault and battery against Sandford, brought in the Federal court.

At the conclusion of the trial Scott's attorney asked the court to charge the jury, on the agreed statement of facts, to find for the plaintiff. This was refused, and the jury being instructed that the law was with the defendant, was ordered so to find. The verdict accordingly was that the plaintiff, his wife and children were slaves, as alleged by Sandford, and that therefore they had no rights in the court, and no redress against their master for personal violence.

Scott's attorney filed a bill of exception to the charge of the court, and thereupon carried the case by writ of error to the United States Supreme Court. After a delay of nearly three years a decision was finally reached in March, 1857. Chief Justice Taney, speaking for the court, decided that negroes, whether free or slave, were not citizens of the United States, and that they could not become such by any process known to the constitution; that under the laws of the United States a negro could neither sue nor be sued, and that therefore the court had no jurisdiction of Dred Scott's cause; that a slave was to be regarded in the light of a personal chattel, and that he might be removed from place to place by his owner as any other piece of property; that the constitution gave to every slave holder the right of removing to or through any State or Territory with his slaves, and of returning with them, at will, to a State where slavery was recognized by law; and that therefore the Missouri Compromise of 1820, as well as the compromise measures of 1850, was unconstitutional and void. In these opinions six of the associate justices of the supreme bench—Wayne, Nelson, Grier, Daniel, Campbell and Catron—concurred; while two associates—Judges McLean and Curtis—dissented. The decision of the majority, which was accepted as the opinion of the court, gave great satisfaction to the ultra slave-holding people of the South. Observing that the control of Congress and the Government was slowly passing out of their hands by the tremendous expansion of the North, and the growth of the spirit of freedom, they hoped, before it was too late, to so wall in and hedge about their peculiar institution, that future Congresses would be unable and would not dare attempt to reach it by legislative enactments.

At the North, on the contrary, the decision excited thousands of indignant comments, and much better opposition. This indignation could not be expended in mere words, but crystallized into a well-grounded determination to resist in the free States the enforcement of the laws of the slave States which contravened or were repugnant to their own.

War Mutterings.—The presidential campaign and canvass of 1860 must ever be regarded as one of the most important and exciting in the history of the republic. Four candidates were in the field. The Republican party nominated Abraham Lincoln, on a platform in which opposition to the further extension of slavery was declared to be the vital issue. The Democratic convention, assembled at Charleston, divided on the question of slavery in the Territories, and, after a long and stormy session, the party was disrupted, and the "Southern Rights" delegates withdrew from the convention. They met first at Richmond and afterward at Baltimore, where they nominated for president John C. Breckinridge, of Kentucky. The squatter sovereignty Democrats nominated Stephen A. Douglas—the apostle of popular sovereignty. Still another—the "American" party, or Constitutional Unionists—chose John Bell, of Tennessee, as their candidate.

The contest resulted in the election of Mr. Lincoln. The leaders of the South had declared that his election would be considered as a just cause for the dissolution of the Union. The Government was under the control of the Douglas Democrats, but a majority of the cabinet and a large number of members of Congress in both Houses were supporters of Mr. Breckinridge, and the advocates of disunion. It was now evident that under the new administration all the departments of the Government must pass into the power of the Republican party. Disunion was now possible, but the opportunity would shortly be past. The attitude of President Buchanan favored the measure. He was not himself a disunionist, but he did not consider that he had the constitutional right to coerce a sovereign State. The interval, therefore, between the presidential election of November, 1860, and the inauguration of the following March was improved to its full extent by the political leaders of the South.

Secession.—December 17, 1860, a convention assembled at Charleston, S. C., passed a resolution declaring that the union hitherto existing between that State and others, under the name of the United States of America, was dissolved. The cotton-growing States were almost unanimous in support of the measure. By the 1st of February, 1861, six other States—Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana and Texas—had withdrawn from the Union. Nearly all the senators and representatives of those States resigned their seats in Congress, and joined the disunion cause.

In the secession conventions there was little opposition to the movement, although in some instances a large minority vote was cast. A few of the speakers denounced disunion as wrong in principle and tending to certain ruin. Alexander H. Stevens, afterward vice-president of the Confederate States, while advocating the doctrine of State sovereignty and the right of secession, spoke against the latter as a practical measure on the ground that it was impolitic and disastrous. Not a few prominent men at the South held similar views, and yet were governed by the opinion of the majority.

On the 4th day of February, 1861, delegates from six of the seceded States met at Montgomery, Ala., and formed a new government under the name of the Confederate States of America. On the 8th of the same month, the government was organized by the election of Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, as provisional president, and Alexander H. Stevens as vice-president.

In 1850, when the representatives of the slave holders declared in Congress that, unless California should be admitted as a slave State, they would break up the Union, albeit they would do it "calmly and peaceably," Daniel Webster arose in his majesty and uttered this remarkable and prophetic warning:

"I hear with pain, anguish and distress the words secession; peaceable secession! Sir, your eyes and mine are never destined to see that miracle—the dismemberment of this vast country—without convulsion! The breaking up of the fountains of the great deep without ruffling the surface! Who is so foolish as to expect to see such a thing? Sir, he who sees these States now revolving in harmony around a common center, and expects to see them quit their places and fly off without convulsion, may look the next hour to see the heavenly bodies rush from their spheres and jostle against each other in realms of space, without producing the crash of the universe. There can be no such thing as peaceable secession. Peaceable secession is an utter impossibility. Is the great constitution under which we live here, covering the whole country, is it to be thawed and melted away by secession, as the snows of the mountains melt under the influence of the vernal sun, disappear almost unobserved and die off? No sir! No sir! I see it as plainly as I see the sun in heaven. I see disruption must produce such a war as I will not describe in its two-fold character."

Hostilities Begun.—The American nation seemed on the verge of ruin. The Government seemed paralyzed. The army was stationed in scattered detachments on remote frontiers. The fleet was dispersed in distant seas. President Buchanan was distracted with hesitancy and the contradictory counsels of his friends. With the exception of Forts Sumter and Moultrie in Charleston Harbor, Fort Pickens near Pensacola, and Fortress Monroe in the Chesapeake, all the important posts in the seceded States had been seized and occupied by the Confederates, even before the organization of their government.

In vain had Gen. Scott, lieutenant-general of the United States army, observing the energy of the Secessionists, repeatedly urged upon the President that strong garrisons be sent to the imperiled fortresses, some of which were indifferently occupied and some not at all. Scott was not allowed to do anything to save the United States forts, or even to send a warning to the handful of soldiers who garrisoned them, until it was too late to avail. Early in January, 1861, the President made a feeble effort to reinforce and provision the garrison at Fort Sumter. The steamer "Star of the West" was sent with men and supplies, but, upon approaching Charleston harbor, it was fired upon by a Confederate battery, and was obliged to return without performing its mission.

In March Abraham Lincoln was inaugurated as President of the United States, and entered upon the duties of his office. William H. Seward, of New York, was chosen Secretary of State; Salmon P. Chase, of Ohio, Secretary of the Treasury; Simon Cameron, of Pennsylvania, Secretary of War, succeeded in the following January by Edwin M. Stanton, and Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy. Lincoln declared, both in his inaugural address and in his early official papers, that the efforts of the new administration would be directed to the recovery of the forts, arsenals and other public property which had been seized by the Confederate authorities, and it was with this intention that the first military preparations were made. With the second attempt of the Government to reinforce Fort Sumter came the actual beginning of hostilities.

The defenses of Charleston Harbor were held by Maj. Robert Anderson with only seventy-nine men. He had deemed it prudent to evacuate Fort Moultrie and retire to Sumter, which was situated on an island in front of the city, but at some distance. That occupancy having been decided to be "a menace to the free people of the State," Fort Sumter was attacked by Gen. Beauregard, April 12, 1861, on the order of George W. Randolph, secretary of war for the Confederacy. On the 14th, Maj. Anderson and his gallant little band were forced to surrender, and thus were the fountains of the great deep broken up, deluging the South in blood, and turning her smiling fields to desolation.

On the 15th of April, Lincoln issued a proclamation declaring the South to be in a state of rebellion, and calling for 75,000 militia "to repossess the forts, places and property seized from the Union." He also summoned both Houses of Congress to assemble in extraordinary session on July 4, 1861.

The War of the Rebellion now began in earnest. With the firing on Fort Sumter a radical change took place in the sentiments of a large portion of the Democracy of the North. Every free State, and the slave States of Delaware and Maryland, pledged men and troops to suppress the Rebellion, and such Democratic leaders as Stephen A. Douglas, Matthew H. Carpenter, Daniel S. Dickinson, John J. Crittenden and Benjamin F. Butler announced their hearty support of the President. Jefferson Davis also issued a proclamation, two days later than that of Lincoln, calling upon the "good people of the Confederacy" to rally and drive out "the invaders." On the same day Virginia seceded from the Union; on May 6 Arkansas followed her example, and then North Carolina on the 20th of the same month. In Tennessee, specially East Tennessee, there was a strong opposition to disunion, and it was not until the 8th of June that a secession ordinance could be passed. The people of Maryland were divided in their opinions, but the disunion sentiment prevailed largely. In Missouri, as will presently be seen, the movement resulted in civil war, while in Kentucky the authorities issued a proclamation of neutrality.

On the 19th of April some Massachusetts regiments, passing through Baltimore on their way to Washington, were attacked by the citizens with stones and fire-arms, and three men were killed. This was the first bloodshed of the war. On the preceding day a body of Confederate soldiers advanced on the armory of the United States at Harper's Ferry. The officer in charge destroyed a portion of the vast stores collected there, and then escaped into Pennsylvania. On the 20th of the month, another company of Virginians attacked the great navy yard at Norfolk. The Federal officers commanding fired the buildings, sank the vessels, spiked the guns, and withdrew their forces. Most of the cannons and many of the vessels were afterward recovered by the Confederates, the property thus captured amounting to fully $10,000,000.

The Southern forces poured into Virginia in such numbers that for a time the city of Washington seemed in danger. May 3 the President called for 83,000 more soldiers, whose term of enlistment should be for three years, or during the continuation of the war. Lieut.-Gen. Winfield Scott was made commander-in-chief of the United States forces. As many war ships as could be mustered were sent to blockade the Southern harbors. In the seceded States, also, there were tireless preparation and activity. Richmond was chosen as the capital of the Confederacy. Mr. Davis and the officers of his cabinet had already repaired thither, for the purpose of directing the affairs of the government and the army. So stood the opposing powers in the beginning of the summer of 1861.

It was now evident that a great war, perhaps the greatest in modern times, was about to break over the American nation.

Having thus outlined the causes of the war, and the breaking out of actual hostilities, attention may well be directed to Missouri and the part she bore in the mighty conflict.

The Attitude of Missouri.—The people of Missouri had been deeply involved in the agitation caused by the territorial questions connected with the subject of slavery. Moreover, the State was largely populated by emigrants from Kentucky, Virginia and other Southern States, or by their descendants, and naturally there was a wide-spread sympathy with the secession movement. Nevertheless there was much intelligent conservatism among the people, and they were not, in the language of Gov. Stewart's last message, to be frightened from their property by the past unfriendly legislation of the North, or dragooned into secession by the restrictive legislation of the extreme South.

The General Assembly met in Jefferson City on December 31, 1860, under peculiarly embarrassing circumstances. Ten days before it convened South Carolina had passed an ordinance of secession, and before the 20th of January four other Southern States had followed her example. Besides this, the preceding national and State canvass had resulted in returning to the State Legislature representatives of each of the four political parties into which the people were divided. There were, in each branch of the General Assembly, Breckinridge Democrats, Douglas Democrats, Union or Bell-Everett men, and Republicans, and in neither Senate nor House was any one of these parties dominant. January 4, 1861, Claiborne F. Jackson, author of the famous "Jackson Resolutions," was inaugurated as governor, having been elected by the Douglas Democrats. While Gov. Stewart's farewell message concluded with an eloquent appeal for the maintenance of the Union, as he depicted the inevitable ruin and bloodshed that must attend secession, Gov. Jackson's inaugural insisted that the interests of all the slave-holding States were identical; that in case the Union was really divided, it would be the duty and privilege of Missouri to stand by the South; that the State was in favor of remaining in the Union as long as there was any hope of maintaining the guarantees of the constitution, but that, in any event, he was utterly opposed to coercion.

Believing that Missouri was entitled to a voice in the settlement of the questions then pending in the country, he recommended the immediate call of a State convention, that the will of the people might be ascertained. Such a convention was called by Gov. Jackson, in accordance with an act of the Legislature, and met at Jefferson City, February 28, 1861. Each senatorial district sent to this convention three times as many delegates as the number of members in the State Senate to which said district was entitled. In all ninety-nine members were present, and the convention was permanently organized by the election of the following officers: Sterling Price, of Chariton County, president

(he was then regarded as a decided Union man); Robert Wilson, of Andrew County, vice-president; Samuel A. Lowe, of Pettis, secretary; Robert A. Campbell, of St. Louis, assistant secretary; C. P. Anderson, of Moniteau, doorkeeper; B. W. Grover, sergeant-at-arms.

On March 9, during an adjourned meeting at St. Louis, Mr. Gamble, chairman of the Committee on Federal Relations, reported from the majority of that committee a list of resolutions, which after some amendments were adopted by the convention, which thus refused to pass the ordinance of secession.

The amended resolutions are as follows:

1. Resolved, That at present there is no adequate cause to impel Missouri to dissolve her connection with the Federal Union, but on the contrary, she will labor for such an adjustment of existing troubles as will secure the peace, as well as the rights and equality of all the States.

2. Resolved, That the people of this State are devotedly attached to the institutions of our country, and earnestly desire that by a fair and amicable adjustment all the causes of disagreement that at present unfortunately distract us as a people, may be removed, to the end that our Union may be preserved and perpetuated, and peace and harmony be restored between the North and South.

3. Resolved, That the people of this State deem the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, proposed by the Hon. John J. Crittenden, of Kentucky, with the extension of the same to the territory hereafter to be acquired by treaty or otherwise, a basis of adjustment which will successfully remove the causes of difference forever from the arena of national politics.

4. Resolved, That the people of Missouri believe the peace and quiet of the country will be promoted by a convention to propose amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and this convention therefore urges the Legislature of this State and the other States to take the proper steps for calling such a convention in pursuance of the fifth article of the constitution: and by providing by law for an election by the people of such number of delegates as are to be sent to such convention.

5. Resolved, That in the opinion of this convention the employment of military force by the Federal Government to coerce the submission of the seceding States, or the employment of military force by the seceding States to assail the Government of the United States, will inevitably plunge this country into civil war, and thereby entirely extinguish the hope of an amicable settlement of the fearful issues now pending before the country; we, therefore, earnestly entreat, as well the Federal Government as the seceding States, to withhold and stay the arm of military power, and on no pretense whatever bring upon the nation the horrors of civil war. And in order to the restoration of harmony and fraternal feeling between the different sections, we would recommend the policy of withdrawing the Federal troops from the forts within the borders of the seceding States, when there is danger of collision between the State and Federal troops.

The sixth and seventh resolutions we omit because they have no reference to war questions. Two of the resolutions will attract the attention of every intelligent reader: the first, containing the explicit declaration that there was no adequate cause to impel Missouri to dissolve her connection with the Federal Union; and the fifth, wherein the convention took uncompromising ground against the employment of military force by either the seceding States or the nation.

It was with the earnest and patriotic purpose of averting civil war that the Union men of Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee and other slave States entreated the Federal Government not to resort to military force, but after the firing upon Fort Sumter and other violent and unmistakably rebellious acts, these patriots assumed more extreme views.

Gov. Jackson and the Missouri Legislature.—Upon President Lincoln's call for 75,000 men, Simon Cameron, Secretary of War, issued a telegram to all of the loyal and doubtful States, requesting each of them to detail from the militia of the State a certain number of men, as infantry or riflemen, for a period of three months.

Missouri's quota was fixed at four regiments, which Gov. Jackson was requested to furnish. The following was his reply:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT OF MISSOURI, }

To the Hon. Simon Cameron, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.,

SIR:—Your dispatch of the 15th inst., making a call on Missouri for four regiments of men for immediate service has been received. There can be, I apprehend, no doubt but these men are intended to form a part of the President's army to make war upon the people of the seceded States. Your requisition, in my judgment, is illegal, unconstitutional and revolutionary in its objects, inhuman and diabolical, and cannot be complied with. Not one man will the State of Missouri furnish to carry on such an unholy crusade.

C. F. JACKSON,

Governor of Missouri.

Pursuant to a proclamation of Gov. Jackson, the State Legislature convened in extra session May 2, 1861. In his message to that body, the governor reiterated the declaration that the interests and sympathies of Missouri were identical with those of the slave-holding States, and recommended the policy of arming the people and placing the State in an attitude of defense.

The Legislature responded by passing several important measures, among which were the following: To authorize counties to loan money, not exceeding $30,000 each, to the State; to authorize the banks of Missouri to issue $1, $2, and $3 notes to the amount of $1,500,000, instead of the same amount of larger notes; to authorize the governor to purchase or lease David Ballentine's foundry at Boonville for the manufacture of arms and the munitions of war; to authorize the governor to appoint one major-general, who, in time of insurrection, invasion, or war, should command the entire military force in the field; to authorize the governor, whenever in his opinion the security and welfare of the State might require it, to take possession of the railroad and telegraph lines within the State; to provide for the organization, government and support of the "Missouri State Guard;" and to authorize the governor to borrow $1,000,000 to arm and equip the militia of the State, to repel invasion, and protect the lives and property of the people.

MILITARY HISTORY.

Surrender of Camp Jackson.—Into the midst of this body of busy legislators dropped the news of the capture of Camp Jackson, at St. Louis.

By order of Gov. Jackson, the United States arsenal at Liberty, Clay County, had been seized April 20, 1861, and on the same day of the governor's proclamation calling an extra session of the General Assembly the following general military order was issued by Warwick Hough, then adjutant-general of Missouri:

(General Orders No. 7.)

HEADQUARTERS ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, MO., }
JEFFERSON CITY, April 22, 1861. }

First. To attain a greater degree of efficiency and perfection in organization and discipline, the commanding officers of the several military districts in this State, having four or more legally organized companies therein, whose armories are within fifteen miles of each other, will assemble their respective commands at some place to be by them severally designated, on the 3d of May, and to go into an encampment for the period of six days, as provided by law. Captains of companies not organized into battalions will report the strength of their companies immediately to these headquarters, and await further orders.

Second. The quartermaster-general will procure and issue to the quartermasters of districts, for those commands not now provided for, all necessary tents and camp equipage, to enable the commanding officers thereof to carry the foregoing orders into effect.

Third. The light battery now attached to the Southwest Battalion, and one company of mounted riflemen, including all officers and soldiers belonging to the First District, will proceed forthwith to St. Louis, and report to Gen. D. M. Frost for duty. The remaining companies of said battalion will be disbanded for the purpose of assisting in the organization of companies upon that frontier. The details in the execution of the foregoing are intrusted to Lieut.-Col. John S. Bowen, commanding the battalion.

Fourth. The strength, organization and equipment of the several companies in the districts will be reported at once to these headquarters, and division inspectors will furnish all information which may be serviceable in ascertaining the condition of the State forces.

By order of the Governor.

WARWICK HOUGH,
Adjutant-General of Missouri.

Pursuant to this order, the military encampment of Camp Jackson, at Lindell's Grove, St. Louis, was organized May 3, by Brig.-Gen. Daniel M. Frost, of the Missouri Militia. Its object, as stated above, was said to be the attainment of greater efficiency in the organization and drill of the State troops, but there seemed to be reason for the suspicion, entertained by officers of the United States Army, that Gov. Jackson, Gen. Frost and their confreres had some ulterior purpose in view. This purpose was believed by many to be nothing less than the seizure of the United States arsenal at St. Louis, and the military control of the State by those who, notwithstanding the anti-secession voice of the people, were determined to link her destinies with the Confederacy.

The stars and stripes floated over Camp Jackson, yet Capt. Nathaniel Lyon, commandant of the arsenal, had in view the sentiments of Gov. Jackson's inaugural and of his more recent message to the Legislature, his response to the requisition of the Secretary of War, the seizure of the arsenal at Liberty, and the fact that two of the streets in the new camp were called "Davis" and "Beauregard," after two of the most prominent leaders of the Rebellion. Also Capt. Lyon discovered that cannon and mortars in boxes, marked "Marble," and shot and shell in barrels, had been landed at the St. Louis wharf and hauled to Camp Jackson.

On the morning of May 10, Gen. Frost, having been informed that the United States troops were preparing for an attack upon his camp, addressed the following note to Capt. Lyon:

HEADQUARTERS CAMP JACKSON, {
MISSOURI MILITIA, May 10, 1861. }

Capt. N. Lyon, Commanding United States Troops in and about St. Louis Arsenal,

SIR:—I am constantly in receipt of information that you contemplate an attack upon my camp, whilst I understand that you are impressed with the idea that an attack upon the arsenal and United States troops is intended on the part of the militia of Missouri. I am greatly at a loss to know what could justify you in attacking citizens of the United States who are in the lawful performance of duties devolving upon them under the constitution in organizing and instructing the militia of the State in obedience to her laws, and therefore have been disposed to doubt the correctness of the information I have received.

I would be glad to know from you, personally, whether there is any truth in the statements that are constantly pouring into my ears. So far as regards any hostility being intendent toward the United States, its property, or representatives by any portion of my command, or as far as I can learn (and I think I am fully informed) of any other part of the State forces, I can positively say that the idea has never been entertained. On the contrary, prior to your taking command of the arsenal, I proffered to Maj. Bell, then in command of the very few troops constituting its guard, the services of myself and all my command, and if necessary, the whole power of the State, to protect the United States in the full possession of all her property. Upon Gen. Harney's taking command of this department, I made the same proffer of services to him, and authorized his adjutant-general, Capt. Williams, to communicate the fact that such had been done to the war department. I have had no occasion since to change any of the views I entertained at that time, neither of my own volition nor through orders of my constitutional commander.

I trust that after this explicit statement we may be able, by fully understanding each other, to keep far from our borders the misfortunes which so unhappily affect our common country.

This communication will be handed to you by Col. Bowen, my chief of staff, who will be able to explain anything not fully set forth in the foregoing.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BRIG.-GEN. D. M. FROST,
Commanding Camp Jackson M. V. M.

On the day of this communication, and perhaps at the very hour of its writing, Capt. Lyon was making active preparations to march upon Camp Jackson. It was said that he refused to receive the communication from Gen. Frost.

Between 2 and 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the same day Gen. Frost received a note from Capt. Lyon, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES TROOPS, {
ST. LOUIS, MO., May 10, 1861. }

Gen. D. M. Frost, Commanding Camp Jackson,

SIR:—Your command is regarded as evidently hostile toward the Government of the United States.

It is, for the most part, made up of those secessionists who have openly avowed their hostility to the general Government, and have been plotting at the seizure of its property and the overthrow of its authority. You are openly in communication with the so-called Southern Confederacy, which is now at war with the United States, and you are receiving at your camp, from the said Confederacy, and under its flag, large supplies of the material of war, most of which is known to be the property of the United States. These extraordinary preparations plainly indicate none other than the well-known purpose of the governor of this State, under whose orders you are acting, and whose purpose, recently communicated to the Legislature, has just been responded to by that body in the most unparalleled legislation, having in direct view hostilities to the General Government and co-operation with its enemies.

In view of these considerations, and of your failure to disperse in obedience to the proclamation of the President, and of the eminent necessities of State policy and warfare, and the obligations imposed upon me by instructions from Washington, it is my duty to demand, and I do hereby demand, of you an immediate surrender of your command, with no other conditions than that all persons surrendering, under this demand, shall be humanely and kindly treated. Believing myself prepared to enforce this demand, one-half hour's time before doing so will be allowed for your compliance therewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

N. LYON.

Capt. Second Infantry, Commanding Troops.

Capt. Lyon's command numbered between 6,000 and 7,000 men, and about twenty pieces of artillery. With this force he rapidly invested Camp Jackson, planting batteries on the overlooking heights, and allowing none to pass the lines thus formed. Many of the citizens seized whatever weapons they could lay their hands upon, and rushed to the assistance of the State troops, but were, of course, foiled in their design. Men, and numbers of women and children, flocked to the neighboring hills, wishing to obtain a view of the scene, and thinking themselves out of harm's way. Upon the receipt of Capt. Lyon's communication, Gen. Frost called a hasty consultation of the officers of his staff, and as resistance seemed mere recklessness, a surrender upon the proposed terms was quickly agreed to. The State troops were therefore made prisoners of war, but an offer was made to release them on condition that they would take an oath to support the constitution of the United States, and would swear not to take up arms against the Government.

All but eight or ten men refused to accede to these terms, on the ground that having already sworn allegiance to the United States and its Government, repeating their oath would be to admit that they had been in rebellion, which they would not concede.

About half past five o'clock the prisoners of war left their camp, and entered the road, the United States soldiers enclosing them by a single file on each side of their line. Suddenly the report of fire-arms was heard from the front of the column, which was then opposite a small hill, on the left as one approaches the city. It seems that some members of the United States companies, upon being pressed by the crowd and receiving some blows from them, turned, and, without orders, discharged their pieces. No one was injured, and the offending soldiers were immediately placed under arrest. Hardly, however, had quiet been restored, when repeated volleys of musketry were heard from the extreme rear ranks, which were still at the entrance to the grove, and the crowd of spectators were seen running wildly from the spot. Many, even while escaping, were shot down, and the wounded and dying made the late beautiful field look like a battle-ground. The total number of citizens killed was twenty-eight, including two ladies; the wounded numbered about twenty-five. On the part of the Federals, one officer, Capt. C. Blandowski, and one private were killed and a dozen men wounded. As in the disturbance at the other end of the line, the arsenal troops were attacked with stones, and shots were discharged at them before they fired. Not until he himself had been seriously wounded did Capt. Blandowski give the order to fire on the mob.*

Gen. Frost's command was marched to the arsenal, and there remained, as prisoners of war, until the following day. They were then released, every man, Capt. Emmet McDonald excepted, subscribing to the following parole:

ST. LOUIS ARSENAL, May 11, 1861.

We, the undersigned, do pledge our words as gentlemen that we will not take up arms nor serve in any military capacity against the United States, during the present civil war. This parole shall be returned upon our surrendering ourselves, at any time, as prisoners of war. While we make this pledge with the full intention of observing it, we hereby protest against the injustice of its exaction.

The following letter, written by Gen. Frost to Gov. Jackson, and dated January 24, 1861, was afterward captured with other Con-

*In his report of the affair Gen. Lyon says: "The sad results are much to be lamented. The killing of innocent men, women and children is deplorable. There was no intention to fire upon peaceable citizens. The regular troops were over in the camp, beyond the mob, and in range of the firing. The troops manifested every forbearance, and at last discharged their guns in simply obeying the impulse, natural to all, of self-defense. If innocent men, women and children, whose curiosity placed them in a dangerous position, suffered with the guilty, it is no fault of the troops."

federate records. It pours a flood of light upon the events which transpired previous to the beginning of the war in Missouri. Maj. Bell, it will be remembered, was superseded by Capt. Lyon, as commandant at the arsenal:

ST. LOUIS, MO., January 24, 1861.

His Excellency, C. F. Jackson, Governor of Missouri,

DEAR SIR:—I have just returned from the arsenal, where I have had an interview with Maj. Bell, the commanding officer of that place. I found the Major everything that you or I could desire. He assured me that he considered that Missouri had, whenever the time came, a right to claim it as being upon her soil. He asserted his determination to defend it against any and all irresponsible mobs, come from whence they might, but at the same time gave me to understand that he would not attempt any defense against the proper State authorities.

He promised me, upon the honor of an officer and a gentleman, that he would not suffer any arms to be removed from the place without first giving me timely information; and I, in return, promised him that I would use all the force at my command to prevent him being annoyed by irresponsible persons. I at the same time gave him notice that if affairs assumed so threatening a character as to render it unsafe to leave the place in its comparatively unprotected condition, that I might come down and quarter a proper force there to protect it from the assaults of any persons whatsoever, to which he assented. In a word, the Major is with us, where he ought to be, for all his worldly wealth lies here in St. Louis (and it is very large), and then, again, his sympathies are with us.

I shall, therefore, rest perfectly easy, and use all my influence to stop the sensationalists from attracting the particular attention of the Government to this particular spot. The telegraphs you received were the sheerest "canards" of persons who, without discretion, are extremely anxious to show their zeal. I shall be thoroughly prepared with the proper force to act as emergency may require. The use of force will only be resorted to when nothing else will avail to prevent the shipment or removal of arms.

The Major informed me that he had arms for 40,000 men, with all the appliances to manufacture munitions of almost every kind.

This arsenal, if properly looked after, will be everything to our State, and I intend to look after it—very quietly, however. I have every confidence in the word of honor pledged to me by the Major, and would as soon think of doubting the oath of the best man in the community.

His idea is that it would be disgraceful to him as a military man to surrender to a mob, whilst he could do so without compromising his dignity to the State authorities. Of course I did not show him your order, but I informed him that you had authorized me to act as I might think proper to protect the public property.

He desired that I would not divulge his peculiar views, which I promised not to do except to yourself. I beg, therefore, that you will say nothing that might compromise him eventually with the General Government, for thereby I would be placed in an awkward position, whilst he would probably be removed, which would be unpleasant to our interests.

Grimsley, as you doubtless know, is an unconscionable jackass, and only desires to make himself notorious. It was through him that McLaren and George made the mistake of telegraphing a falsehood to you.

I should be pleased to hear whether you approve of the course I have adopted, and if not, I am ready to take any other that you, as my commander, may suggest.

I am, sir, most truly,

Your obedient servant,

D. M. FROST.

Upon the capture of Camp Jackson, and the consequent disastrous collision between some of the United States troops and the people, the wildest excitement prevailed throughout the State. The most sensational reports flew abroad of the brutal murder of men, women and children by an infuriated soldiery, of their charge with fixed bayonets upon an unoffending crowd of citizens, and of their committing the most horrid outrages upon these innocent victims. People in various localities rose to avenge the reported terrible slaughter, and the whole State was in a frenzy of indignation.

Final Efforts Toward Conciliation.—Two days after the capture of Camp Jackson, Brig.-Gen. William S. Harney, commandant of the department, returned to St. Louis from Washington, and issued a proclamation, in which he called upon the people to resume their accustomed peaceful vocations, and assured them that he would only use "the military force stationed in this district in the last resort to preserve the peace."

After two more days, Gen. Harney issued a second proclamation in which he characterized the "Military Bill," passed by the recent Legislature, as "an indirect secession ordinance, ignoring even the forms resorted to by other States," and as unconstitutional and void. He spoke approvingly of the overthrow of Camp Jackson, upon the ground that it had been "organized in the interests of the secessionists," the men openly wearing the dress and badge of the Southern Confederacy; and that arms had been received into the camp which had been unlawfully taken from the United States arsenal at Baton Rouge, and shipped up the river in boxes marked "marble." He declared that "no government in the world would be entitled to respect, that would tolerate for a moment, such openly treasonable preparations;" but added that it was but simple justice to suppose that there were many loyal men in the camp who were in no way responsible for its treasonable character. He disclaimed all intention of interfering with the prerogatives of the State, but expressed in plain terms that the "supreme law of the land must be obeyed, and that no subterfuges, whether in the form of legislative acts or otherwise," could be permitted to harass the law-abiding people of Missouri. He promised that his authority should be used to protect their persons and property, and that he would suppress all unlawful combinations of men formed under any pretext whatsoever.

Gen. Harney's policy was to preserve peace as long as it could be done, and the authority of the National Government preserved. Accordingly, he held a conference at St. Louis, May 21, 1861, with Gen. Sterling Price, whom Gov. Jackson had placed at the head of the Missouri State Guard, which resulted in an amicable agreement, signed by both generals, which undertook to calm the popular excitement and prevent further bloodshed.

The authorities at Washington disapproved of the Harney-Price compact, and they had already given orders that Capt. Lyon should succeed the former general in command of the department. Before, however, the order for his displacement reached him, Gen. Harney, in consequence of his agreement with Gen. Price, removed the Federal troops from the suburbs of St. Louis, Col. Sigel's regiment remaining at the arsenal. Gov. Jackson and Gen. Price, on their part, disbanded the State troops at Jefferson City and St. Joseph, and ordered them home, there to drill and receive military instruction.

Another conference was held in St. Louis between Gen. Lyon, Col. Frank P. Blair, Jr., and Maj. F. A. Conant, on one side, and Gov. C. F. Jackson, Gen. Sterling Price and Col. Thomas L. Snead, on the other. The interview lasted six hours, but resulted in nothing except to make the terrible truth evident that their differences could not be peaceably adjusted.

This final effort at conciliation having failed, Gov. Jackson and his associates left for Jefferson City the same night, burning railroad bridges and cutting the telegraph wires behind them.

Proclamation by Gov. Jackson.—On the next day (June 12) Gov. Jackson issued a proclamation, calling into active service

50,000 State Militia "for the purpose of repelling invasion, and for the protection of the lives, liberty and property of the citizens of this State." He instructed the people that their first allegiance was due to their own State; that they were "under no obligation, whatever, to obey the unconstitutional edicts of the military despotism which had enthroned itself at Washington, nor submit to the infamous and degrading sway of its wicked minions in this State." He declared that no brave and true-hearted Missourian would obey the one or submit to the other; and he called upon them to rise and "drive out ignominiously the invaders who have dared to desecrate the soil which your labors have made fruitful, and which is consecrated by your homes." This proclamation was the signal for civil war in Missouri, and immediately upon its publication active military movements within the State began.

The Legislature Again.—The "Missouri State Guard" bill was before the Legislature, and was meeting with much opposition, when the news of the attack on Camp Jackson so affected the minds of the legislators that they passed the act in less than fifteen minutes.

About 11 o'clock the same night the whole city of Jefferson was aroused by the pealing of bells and the shouts of men summoning the Legislature to the Capitol. There they went into secret session until past 3 o'clock in the morning. The cause of this sudden panic was the reception of a telegram, afterward asserted to be bogus, to the effect that 2,000 Federal troops would leave St. Louis that night for the express purpose of capturing the governor, State officers and members of the Legislature, then convened at Jefferson City. To prevent this anticipated raid the railroad bridge across the Osage River was burned, and the next day 12,000 kegs of powder were sent off in wagons to secret places of safety, while the money in the State Treasury was moved out of town to keep it out of the hands of the expected marauders. When the truth became known, comparative quiet was restored.

In accordance with the power conferred upon Gov. Jackson by an act of the Legislature before mentioned, he appointed Sterling Price major-general of the Missouri State Guard.

On the day before the final adjournment, Mr. George G. Vest, now a resident of Kansas City and a United States senator, made the following report to the House of Representatives from the Committee on Federal Relations.

WHEREAS, We have learned with astonishment and indignation that troops in the service of the Federal Government have surrounded and taken prisoners of war the encampment of State Militia lately assembled near the city of St. Louis, in pursuance of law and by command of the Governor, for the purpose alone of military instruction; and

WHEREAS, The United States troops aforesaid, assisted by a mob armed under Federal authority, have also murdered with unparalleled atrocity defenseless men, women and children, citizens of Missouri, lawfully and peacefully assembled: now, therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring therein, That we, the representatives of the people of Missouri, in general assembly convened, do hereby protest to the civilized world, and especially our sister States, against this illegal, unchristian and inhuman violation of our rights by the capture of our militia, assembled under the constitution of the United States, and the constitution of the State, and the murder of our defenseless people.

Resolved, Second, That whilst Missouri has been loyal to the Government, struggling for its reconstruction, and is now sincerely desirous of an honorable adjustment of existing difficulties, she has received as reward for her fidelity from persons assuming to act under Federal authority, unparalleled insult and wrong. An armed despotism, under infuriated partisan leaders, has been inaugurated in our midst, controlled by no law but passion, and actuated by the deepest hate against the people of Missouri and their institutions. Our railroads are now under military occupation. The steamboat "C. E. Hilman," engaged in transporting goods from the city of St. Louis to the city of Nashville, has been seized by Government troops within the jurisdiction of this State, and the cargo taken out. The capital of the State is openly threatened with capture, and our session is now being held in the midst of armed citizens hastily assembled for defense.

Resolved, Third, That it is the unquestioned constitutional right of the State to arm, equip and organize her militia for defense against aggression from any quarter; and the attempt of Capt. Lyon, acting, as he says, under authority from Washington, to use the exercise of this right as an excuse for his conduct evinces but too clearly a disposition upon the part of the authorities at Washington to disregard and trample upon the sacred rights of the people of Missouri.

Resolved, Fourth, That the charge of Capt. Lyon, in his letter to Gen. Frost, that the proceedings of the State authorities or of this general assembly, at any time, furnished a pretext for the course pursued by him, is entirely gratuitous and false.

Resolved, Fifth, That the governor of the State be hereby directed to make demand of the President of the United States, whether these outrages have been authorized by the Government, and for the immediate return of the arms, camp equipage and other property belonging to this State, lately taken from our military near St. Louis, and for the unconditional release of our State troops.

Resolved, Sixth, That the Government be requested to take instant action by calling forth the militia of the State for the purpose of defense; and that the people of Missouri should rally as one man to perish, if necessary, in defending their constitutional rights.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to furnish a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions to the President of the United States and to the governor of each of the States.

That these resolutions were passed in the House without a single dissenting vote is an evidence of the extraordinary excitement which prevailed, not only among the people, but also in the Legislature.

Immediately upon the adjournment of that body Gov. Jackson and the larger part of the State officers abandoned the capital, believing that delay would probably result in their falling into the hands of the United States militia and becoming prisoners of war. In September Gov. Jackson issued a proclamation, calling the General Assembly to meet in extra session at Neosho, Newton County, on the 21st day of October. At the time this official act was performed the governor was a fugitive from the State capital, and the State Convention, on the 31st of July, had declared his seat vacant, together with those of the members of the Legislature; and on the same day had invested Hamilton R. Gamble with the authority and obligations of Governor of Missouri.

Gov. Jackson's proclamation declared that the United States authorities had, "in violation of the constitution of the United States, waged a ruthless war upon the people of the State of Missouri, murdering our citizens, destroying our property, and, as far as in their power lay, desolating our land. I have in vain endeavored to secure your constitutional rights by peaceable means, and have only resorted to war when it became necessary to repel the most cruel and long-continued aggressions. War now exists between the State of Missouri and the Federal Government, and the state of war is incompatible with the continuance of our union of that Government. Therefore, for the purpose of giving to the representatives of the people of Missouri an opportunity of determining whether it be proper now to dissolve the constitutional bonds which binds us to the Government of the United States, when all other bonds between us are broken, I, Claiborne F. Jackson," etc.

In response to this proclamation, thirty-nine members of the House and ten members of the Senate assembled at Neosho in October. The proceedings of the Senate, afterward captured, show that during the first few days nothing was done but bring in absent members. In order to constitute a quorum there must have been present sixty-seven members of the House and seventeen members of the Senate. As it was impossible to muster that number, Gov. Jackson's message was read to those who were present. He recommended the passage of an ordinance of secession, and also the passage of a law authorizing the election of senators and representatives to the Confederate Congress.

An act, declaring the union between Missouri and the United States dissolved, passed both houses of this fragmentary Legislature, and as far as that body was concerned the connection between the State and the General Government was broken. This Senate met again at Cassville, Barry County, October 31, 1861, and November 7, adjourning to meet at New Madrid on the first Monday in March, 1862; but that meeting was never held. Gov. Jackson's death occurred December 6, 1862, at a farmhouse on the Arkansas River, opposite Little Rock.

The State Convention—Further Transactions.—On the 31st of July, 1861, this body elected Hamilton R. Gamble, Willard P. Hall and Mordecai Oliver, respectively, Governor, Lieutenant-Governor and Secretary of State, to succeed Claiborne F. Jackson, Thomas C. Reynolds and Benjamin F. Massey, whose seats had been declared vacant.

At another session, held in St. Louis, and beginning October 10, 1861, the board of public works and the offices of State superintendent of public schools and county school commissioners were abolished, the salaries of all civil officers were reduced 20 per cent, and test oaths of loyalty for civil officers and citizens were authoritatively promulgated.

On June 2, 1862, the convention assembled at Jefferson City, declared vacant the seats of Sterling Price, late president of the convention, and of others who had joined the secessionists; laid upon the table an ordinance offered by Mr. Breckinridge providing for the gradual emancipation of the slaves in the State; passed an ordinance continuing the provisional government until August, 1864, at which time, according to arrangements already made, their successors would be elected and qualified, and provided that no person should vote at any election thereafter held in the State, under its constitution and laws, who should not previously take the following oath:

I, ———, do solemnly swear (or affirm as the case may be) that I will support, protect and defend the constitution of the United States, and the constitution of the State of Missouri, against all enemies or opposers, whether domestic or foreign; that I will bear true faith, loyalty and allegiance to the United States, and will not, directly or indirectly, give aid or comfort, or countenance to the enemies or opposers thereof, or of the provisional government of the State of Missouri, any ordinance, law or resolution of any State convention or Legislature, or of any order or organization, secret or otherwise, to the contrary notwithstanding; and that I do this with a full and honest determination, pledge and purpose, faithfully to keep and perform the same, without any mental reservation or evasion whatever. And I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have not since the 17th day of December, A. D. 1861, wilfully taken up arms, or levied war against the United States, or against the provisional government of the State of Missouri. So help me God.

A similar oath was prescribed for all civil officers, and for jurymen and attorneys.

On June 15, 1863, pursuant to a proclamation from Gov. Gamble, the convention met to devise measures for the gradual emancipation of the slaves. Without especially noting the action of the convention on the various propositions submitted or the several amendments to these propositions, it is enough to say that on July 1, the fifteenth day of the session, the ordinance as amended was passed. It is as follows:

Be it ordained by the people of the State of Missouri in convention assembled:

SECTION 1. The first and second clauses of the twenty-sixth section of the third article of the constitution are hereby abrogated.

SEC. 2. That slavery and involuntary servitude, except for the punishment of crime, shall cease to exist in Missouri on the 4th day of July, 1870, and all slaves within the State at that day are hereby declared to be free; Provided, however, That all persons emancipated by this ordinance shall remain under the control, and be subject to the authority of their late owners or their legal representatives, as servants, during the following period, to-wit: Those over forty years for and during their lives; those under twelve years of age until they arrive at the age of twenty-three years, and those of all other ages until the 4th of July, 1870. The persons or their legal representatives, who up to the moment of the emancipation were the owners of the slaves thus freed, shall, during the period for which the services of such freed men are reserved to them, have the same authority and control over the said freed men for the purpose of receiving the possession and service of the same, that are now held absolutely by the master in respect to his slave; Provided, however, That after the said 4th day of July, 1870, no person so held to service shall be sold to a non-resident of or removed from the State of Missouri by authority of his late owner or his legal representatives.

SEC. 3. That all slaves hereafter brought into this State, and not now belonging to citizens of this State, shall thereupon be free.

SEC. 4. All slaves removed by consent of their owners to any seceded State, after the passage by such State of an act or ordinance of secession, and hereafter brought into this State by their owners, shall thereupon be free.

SEC. 5. The General Assembly shall have no power to pass laws to emancipate slaves without the consent of their owners.

SEC. 6. After the passage of this ordinance no slaves in this State shall be subject to State, county or municipal taxes.

Wednesday, July 1, 1863, the convention, after having held various sessions, since its first meeting, February 28, 1861, adjourned sine die.

Emancipation Proclamation and the XIIIth Amendment.—In connection with the emancipation measures of the State of Missouri, it may not be amiss to give a brief recital of the various means by which slavery in the United States was finally obliterated.

President Lincoln's policy was for some time criticised as timid and slow. His more hardy and aggressive advisers demanded that the negroes be either emancipated or declared contraband of war at once, as the Southern armies could never be beaten while 4,000,000 of blacks, without cost or remuneration, were at home tilling the soil for the support of the whites in the field. After waiting long enough to see that the South did not want peace upon any terms save a permanent withdrawal from the Union, and recognition by the North as an independent, sovereign power, he issued a provisional proclamation of emancipation on September 22, 1862. On the 1st of January, 1863, the President issued one of the most important documents of modern times—the emancipation proclamation. This could have been defended throughout the world as an act of progressive and civilized humanity, but it was in reality a war measure, it having become necessary to strike an effective blow against the labor system at the South, and as such was fully sanctioned by the laws and usages of nations. This proclamation is here given in full:

WHEREAS, On the 22d day of September, 1862, a proclamation was issued by the President of the United States, containing among other things the following, to wit:

“That on the first day of January, 1863, all persons held as slaves within any

State, or designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then, thenceforward and forever free, and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom.

"That the Executive will, on the 1st day of January, aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States and parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof, respectively, shall then be in rebellion against the United States, and the fact that any State, or the people thereof, shall on that day be in good faith represented in the Congress of the United States by members chosen thereto, at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such State shall have participated, shall, in the absence of strong countervailing testimony, be deemed conclusive evidence that such State and the people thereof are not then in rebellion against the United States."

Now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, by virtue of the power in me vested as commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States, in time of actual armed rebellion against the authority and Government of the United States, and as a fit and necessary war measure for suppressing said rebellion, do, on this 1st day of January, 1863, and, in accordance with my purpose so to do, publicly proclaim for the full period of 100 days from the day first above mentioned, order and designate, as the States and parts of States wherein the people thereof, respectively, are this day in rebellion against the United States, the following, to wit:

Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana (except the parishes of St. Bernard, Plaquemine, Jefferson, St. John, St. Charles, St. James, Ascension, Assumption, Terre Bonne, Lafourche, St. Mary, St. Martin and Orleans, including the city of New Orleans), Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia (except the forty-eight counties designated as West Virginia, and also the counties of Berkley, Accomac, Northampton, Elizabeth City, York, Princess Ann and Norfolk, including the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth), and which excepted parts are, for the present, left precisely as if this proclamation were not issued.

And by virtue of the power and for the purpose aforesaid I do order and declare that all persons held as slaves within said designated States and parts of States are and henceforward shall be free; and that the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons.

And I hereby enjoin upon the people so declared to be free, to abstain from all violence, unless in necessary self-defense, and I recommend to them that in all cases, when allowed, they labor faithfully for reasonable wages.

And I further declare and make known, that such persons of suitable condition will be received into the armed service of the United States to garrison forts, positions, stations and other places, and to man vessels of all sorts in said service.

And upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice, warranted by the constitution, upon military necessity, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my name, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

[L. s.] Done at the City of Washington, this first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-seventh.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President:

WILLIAM H. SEWARD,
Secretary of State.

As the State of Missouri was loyal to the Union, and was at the time of the proclamation represented in Congress by her chosen representatives, the provisions of that document had no effect upon slavery within her borders. As has been seen, the people of the State, through their legislators and their State convention ordinances, had adopted emancipation, but that action was superseded by the Thirteenth Amendment to the constitution of the United States, which was ratified by thirty-three States, including Missouri, ratified conditionally by Alabama and Mississippi, and rejected only by Delaware and Kentucky. As the permission of three-fourths of the States was all that was necessary for the adoption of the amendment, it was declared in force by President Johnson in 1865, although Lincoln himself lived to see it proposed. It is as follows:

Article XIII.—SECTION 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Thus, after an existence of more than two hundred and forty years, the institution of African slavery in the United States was swept away. Although it was the purpose of the General Government to discriminate carefully between Union and non-Union slave holders, and to sufficiently indemnify the former class against all losses occasioned by the freeing of their slaves, yet in many cases loyal men were ruined financially in this great overthrow of Southern institutions, and all classes suffered together.

Campaign of 1861—Boonville.—Jackson and Price had collected, at Boonville, a military force of from 3,000 to 4,000 men. This force was poorly armed, possessed of but a single piece of artillery, undisciplined, and deficient in organization and competent officers, yet they were eager to meet the troops, which under command of Lyon and Blair were coming up the river to attack them. On the eve of battle, Price was taken seriously ill, and was obliged to go home; therefore the Confederates marched under command of Col. John S. Marmaduke, to meet the advancing column of Lyon's forces. The latter had disembarked at Rochepoort, and were advancing with six pieces of artillery in the direction of Boonville, when they encountered the State troops about midway between the two places. Capt. Totten, of the Unionists, opened the engagement by throwing a few nine-pounder explosives into the State ranks, while the infantry of the former filed obliquely, right and left, and commenced a terrific volley of musketry, which was at first vigorously returned. Col. Marmaduke was stationed in a lane, leading toward the river from the road by which the United States troops were advancing, and in a brick house on the northeast corner of the two roads. A couple of shells were thrown into the house, dispersing the State troops in great confusion. This, together with the well-directed fire of the infantry from the right and left, soon forced Col. Marmaduke's men to fall back, but they again formed in line of battle, and advanced a few feet to meet the Union forces. The cannon were now brought into requisition, and the State troops opened a galling musketry fire from a grove on the left of Lyon's center, and from a shed still further to the left.

The skirmish now became a battle. Lyon's force was 2,000 in all, but not more than 500 were at any one time engaged. There were 1,500 of the State troops, but neither were they all continually in the conflict. Lyon brought his artillery to bear with deadly effect, and a forward movement on the right decided the engagement, the State forces retreating in great disorder. Such was the confusion of this retreat that this battle is often jocularly styled "The Boonville Races."

The Federal forces took possession of "Camp Vest" and the city of Boonville. At the former there were found twenty or thirty tents, fifty guns, a large number of shoes and other clothing, a quantity of blankets and ammunition, and two secession flags.

Carthage.—The lead mines in the southwest part of the State became an object of great importance to the Confederate Government, which, hoping to secure them, dispatched large bodies of troops from Arkansas and Texas. On July 5, a scouting party, sent out by Col. Franz Sigel, encountered, about two miles from Carthage, a picket guard of the State troops, who were taken prisoners. As soon as possible Col. Sigel prepared to advance, expecting to find the State troops some distance west of the town. About half-past 9 o'clock the armies met in an open prairie, seven miles beyond Carthage. The State forces numbered perhaps 5,000 men, mostly cavalry, but had a battery of five cannon. Col. Sigel's command comprised his own regiment of two battalions, and Col. Salomon's detached regiment, with several pieces of artillery, under command of Maj. Backoff. Col. Sigel's and Col. Salomon's men numbered together 1,100. Gens. Parsons and Rains were in command of the State troops. Maj. Backoff, by direction of Col. Sigel, opened fire, and in less than two hours the battery of the opposing forces was silenced. The superior arms of the Federals enabled them to maintain a situation of comparatively little danger. The State ranks were twice broken, but rallied, and held their position until their guns gave out, when their column was again broken.

At this time a large body of the Confederate cavalry was sent back to cut off Sigel's transportation train. Seeing this movement, he ordered a retreat, and sent word for the wagons to advance as quickly as possible. By keeping up an incessant fire with the infantry, and using the artillery whenever practicable, Sigel managed to retard the advance of the cavalry, and to fall back in good order, some three and a half miles, to the baggage train. The wagons were then placed in the center of the column in such a manner that there were artillery and infantry forces both in front and rear. At this the State forces retreated, and attempted to surround the entire column, taking a position upon some bluffs overlooking a creek. There was but one road across this stream, and, to change his position without further retreat, it was necessary for Sigel to cross the hill where the State cavalry was mainly stationed.

Maj. Backoff ordered two of the artillery pieces in front to oblique to the left, and two to the right, and at the same time a corresponding movement was made from Sigel's battalion. This manœuvre led the State troops into the belief that the Federals were seeking to outflank their cavalry. Accordingly the forces on the bluffs closed up to the right and left, when, on reaching a point 300 yards from them, Backoff's artillery was ordered to transverse oblique, and immediately opened a terrible cross-fire with canister. At the same time the Federal infantry charged at double quick, and in ten minutes the State troops were dispersed in every direction.

This engagement, with the manœuvering, occupied about two hours. The State cavalry was poorly armed and mounted, and, having no cannon on the bluffs, could make but little resistance to the attacks of Col. Sigel. Forty-five men and eighty horses were taken by the Federals, also a quantity of double-barreled shot-guns and some revolvers and bowie-knives. The loss of the State troops was estimated at 250 or 300 men. However these forces still prevented Sigel's advance over the creek, and that officer was compelled to retreat in the direction of Carthage, the State troops following and surrounding the column on three sides, although kept at a distance by the infantry fire.

Sigel's command reached Carthage at half past six o'clock, and at once attempted to enter the woods about a mile distant. This movement the State cavalry resisted, knowing that they could do nothing in the timber. An effort to rally the cavalry to a charge was made, which brought the whole of Sigel's infantry into action. After some hard fighting that officer got his men into the woods and forced the State troops to relinquish the pursuit. The latter returned to Carthage intending to renew the battle in the morning. In this last engagement the State troops lost ten killed and sixty-four wounded. The dispatchers of Col. Sigel placed his loss during the whole day at thirteen killed and thirty-one wounded.

Notwithstanding the terrible fatigue of the day—his men having been in action nearly twelve hours—Sigel continued his retreat. A forced march was made to Sarcoxie, in the southeast corner of the county (Jasper), a distance of twelve or fourteen miles. There the Federal troops went into camp at 3 o'clock in the morning. On the following afternoon the retreat was continued to Mount Vernon, Lawrence County, where, for a time, Sigel established his headquarters.

The Western Department.—On July 3, 1861, the Western Department was created, comprising Illinois and the States and Territories west of the Mississippi and east of the Rocky Mountains, including New Mexico. The headquarters of this department were at St. Louis, where, previous to its establishment, Gen. Harney, and, afterward, Gen. Lyon, were in command. Gen. John C. Fremont, who was a son-in-law of Senator Benton, and had been a candidate for the presidency in 1856, was appointed to the command of the new department, and assumed the duties of his office on the 26th of July.

The authorities at Washington, perplexed by the disastrous defeat at Bull Run, were so absorbed with the defenses of the National Capital, and with military operations at the East, as to be unable to give necessary aid to the Western Department. Fremont finally obtained $100,000 from the National sub-treasurer at St. Louis, with which he proceeded to secure the re-enlistment of many of the three-months' men, whose terms had expired, and to fortify the city against any probable attack. Harassed by a lack of resources, Fremont was soon placed in a dilemma, occasioned by the exigencies of the campaign in Missouri. The Confederate general, Pillow, was reported to be advancing with a large number of troops against Cairo and Bird's Point, while Gen. Hardee was pushing into the interior of Missouri to annoy Gen. Lyon's flank and rear. In addition to all this, Lieut.-Gov. Reynolds, Gov. Jackson being temporarily absent, elated with the Confederate victory at Bull Run, issued a proclamation to the people of Missouri, in which he alluded to the State convention as merely a tool in the hands of their enemies, assured them that peace and security could only be obtained through union with the South, and called upon them to rally as one man to the standard of the State, and aid Gen. Pillow in expelling the invader from their borders.

In view of this variety of changes, Gen. Fremont decided to secure Bird's Point against the attack of Gen. Pillow, but upon sending an expedition to that place, found that the menace against it was merely intended as a diversion.

Meanwhile, after the battle of Boonville, Gen. Lyon, with a force of nearly 3,000 men, four pieces of artillery and a long baggage train, left that place, and followed in pursuit of the State troops, who were reported to have fled to Syracuse and beyond. At Grand River, a branch of the Osage, in Henry County, he was reinforced by 3,000 Kansas troops under command of Maj. S. D. Sturgis. When within eighty miles of Springfield, Lyon heard of Sigel's battle at Carthage, and determined to change his course and march to his relief. Notwithstanding the intensely hot weather, and the fatigue of his infantry, early on the morning of July 10 Lyon's army moved from their encampment and forced their way among the hills, gorges and forests that lay in their path. After they had proceeded fifty miles a messenger from Sigel brought definite information of the desperate encounter at Carthage, and that Sigel's little army was now at Springfield. Therefore Lyon, marching more leisurely, accomplished the remaining thirty miles of the journey in two days.

Encamped near Springfield, he now prepared to meet the enemy, who were his superior in numbers and constantly increasing. It was now that he repeatedly called upon Gen. Fremont for those reinforcements which the latter failed to supply.

Near the close of July, Gen. Lyon was informed of the concentration of the Confederate forces at Cassville, and of their design of attacking his camp. Therefore, although their numbers were much greater than those of his army, he determined to anticipate their attack by an advance of his own troops. Late on the afternoon of August 1, his entire army, consisting of 5,500 foot, 400 horse and 18 guns, moved toward Cassville, and bivouacked that night on Cave Creek, ten miles south of Springfield. The next morning they marched to Dug Springs, in Stone County, nineteen miles southwest of Springfield. Here they encountered and defeated a body of Confederates under Gen. Rains.

Wilson's Creek.—On August 6, Gen. Lyon returned with his army to Springfield. The entire Confederate force was now concentrated near Crane Creek, in the northern part of Stone County. Believing that Lyon's army was much larger than their own, a disagreement arose between Price and McCulloch as to the expediency of an advance toward Springfield, the former counseling a forward, and the later a retrograde movement. Finally an order was received from Maj.-Gen. Polk, ordering an advance upon Lyon. A council was at once held, in which McCulloch expressed his willingness to march upon Springfield, provided he were granted the chief command. Price, to whom that distinction, perhaps, rightfully belonged, consented to the terms of McCulloch, hoping that Lyon might be defeated and driven from the State. A little after midnight on Sunday, August 4, they took up the line of march, and reached Wilson's Creek, ten miles southwest of Springfield, on the 9th. Here they encamped, determining at 9 o'clock that night to march in four separate columns against Springfield, surround the place, and begin a simultaneous attack at daybreak. A threatened storm caused Gen. McCulloch to countermand his order, and morning found his entire army, consisting of 5,300 infantry, fifteen guns, and 6,000 cavalry, besides a large number of unarmed horsemen, encamped upon the field. But the night was neither too dark nor stormy for Gen. Lyon. At 5 o'clock P. M., of August 9, he marched in two columns from Springfield, making a detour to the right, and, notwithstanding the darkness and storm, at 1 o'clock found himself within sight of the Confederate guard fires. Here he called a halt, and his soldiers lay on their arms until dawn, when they formed in battle line and advanced. Lyon's effective force was 5,200 men, including infantry and cavalry, and three batteries of sixteen guns. The two columns of the Federal army were commanded by Lyon and Sigel, and their early attack was a complete surprise to the Confederates, McCulloch, trusting for security to the darkness and storm, having withdrawn his advanced pickets.

The Federal forces in command of Lyon formed a line of battle at daybreak, closely followed by Totten's battery, supported by a strong reserve, and with skirmishers thrown out in front. After driving in the enemy's outposts, a ravine was crossed and a high ridge gained, when a large force of Confederate skirmishers came in view. Very severe fighting ensued, and it became evident that Lyon's column would soon reach the stronghold, where the main battle would take place. A few shells cleared the front, and the First Missouri and First Kansas moved forward, supported by the First Iowa and Totten's battery. The Second Kansas, Capt. Steele's battalion and Lieut. Dubois' battery, were held in reserve, so as to bear upon a powerful battery of the enemy, which was stationed in front, on the opposite side of Wilson's Creek. The Confederates now rallied in large force near the foot of the slope, opposite Lyon's left wing, and along the slope in his front and to his right. During this time, Capt. Plummer, with four companies of infantry, had moved down a ridge a few hundred yards to Lyon's left, and found at its terminus a large body of the enemy's infantry, which arrested further progress in that direction. Directly artillery firing was begun at the point, about two miles distant, where it was expected that Sigel's column would encounter the enemy.

Lyon's whole line now moved with great impetuosity toward the Confederate position; and the roar of musketry increased and became continuous. Totten's battery came into action, as rapidly as the nature of the ground would permit, and made great havoc in the opposing ranks. After half an hour's fierce fighting the Confederates retired in great confusion, leaving Gen. Lyon in possession of the field. Meanwhile, Capt. Plummer had been compelled to fall back, but Lieut. Dubois' battery, supported by Capt. Steele's battalion, opened upon the enemy in that direction, and soon drove them from the cornfield, where they had intrenched themselves. There was now a momentary cessation of firing along the whole line, except on the right, where the First Missouri was still engaged against superior numbers. The Second Kansas was ordered to the support of this regiment, which must otherwise have been destroyed while unflinchingly holding its position. During this time Capt. Steele's battalion, which had been detailed to the support of Dubois' battery, was brought forward to the support of Totten's, and soon the Confederate force reappeared along Lyon's entire front, marching toward each flank. The battle again began with great fury, and became general along the whole line. The ranks of the opposing sides were sometimes within thirty or forty yards of each other, when charges upon Totten's battery were made. For more than an hour the conflict was carried on with great slaughter on both sides, and so equally balanced were the opposing forces that neither was gaining any decisive advantage.

Early in this desperate engagement, Gen. Lyon's horse was killed, and he himself received a wound in the leg and one in the head. He then mounted another horse, and, swinging his hat, called upon the nearest troops to follow him. The second Kansas gallantly responded, but their commander, Col. Mitchell, soon fell severely wounded, and, at about the same time, Gen. Lyon received a mortal wound in or near the heart. Maj. Sturgis then succeeded to the command. The Confederates had been driven back, and for twenty minutes there was a lull in the battle, during which Sturgis summoned his officers for a consultation. Lyon's column had been dreadfully shattered, and the leader killed. For nearly thirty hours the men had been without water, and a supply could not be had short of Springfield, which was ten or twelve miles away. Their ammunition was nearly gone, and should they, by slackening fire, reveal this fact to the enemy, annihilation seemed inevitable.

Sigel, meanwhile, had not been heard from; but the consultation of officers was soon brought to a close by the advance of a heavy column from the direction whence Sigel's guns had been at first heard. These troops carried a banner resembling the American flag, and their dress resembled that of Sigel's brigade. Hoping to effect a junction with that officer, Sturgis formed his line for an advance. Suddenly from a hill in Sturgis' front a battery began to pour into his line shrapnel and canister, and at this moment the on-coming Confederate forces, for such they were, displayed their true colors, and the fiercest engagement of the day immediately commenced along the entire Union lines. Totten's battery, in the center, supported by the Iowa and regular troops, was the main object of attack. The Confederates were often within twenty feet of the battery, and the smoke of the opposing lines was so intermingled as to appear made by the same guns. Notwithstanding the complete rout of the Confederate front, they continued to hold the field. Finally, therefore, the Federal forces were ordered to retreat. They moved slowly to the open prairie, about two miles from the battlefield, and thence to Springfield, which they reached at 5 o'clock that afternoon. Their total loss was 223 killed, 721 wounded, and 292 missing.

Sigel's column, in the meantime, had marched within a mile of McCulloch's camp at daybreak, and planted four pieces of artillery on the left, the infantry advancing toward the point where the Fayetteville road crosses Wilson's Creek, and the two cavalry companies guarding his right and left. His artillery fire was so destructive that the enemy were soon driven from their tents, and retired toward the northeast part of the valley. The Third and Fifth Missouri Infantry (Union) had passed the creek, and formed almost in the center of the camp. As the enemy were now rallying in front, Sigel ordered the artillery to be brought forward and formed in battery across the valley, with the Third and Fifth to the left and the cavalry to the right. At the end of half an hour the enemy retreated into the woods and up the adjoining hills. By the firing in the direction of Gen. Lyon's column, it now became evident that he had engaged the enemy along the whole line; therefore, to give him the greatest possible assistance, Sigel left his position in the camp and advanced to attack the enemy's line of battle in the rear. In pursuance of this design, Sigel's column struck the Fayetteville road, and, following it to Sharpe's farm, planted his artillery on the plateau, and the two infantry regiments on the right and left, across the road, while the cavalry was stationed on its flanks. The firing in the direction of Lyon's column had then almost entirely ceased. Supposing that Lyon had repulsed the Confederates, and that his forces were coming up the road, the commanders of the Third and Fifth Regiments gave orders not to fire upon troops advancing from that direction. Very unexpectedly two Confederate batteries opened fire upon them, one in front on the Fayetteville road, and the other from the hill, where it was supposed Lyon's forces were victorious, while a strong column of infantry, mistaken for the Iowa regiment, advanced from the Fayetteville road and attacked Sigel's right. Consternation and frightful confusion at once ensued. Sigel's men, thinking that by some mistake Lyon's troops were firing upon them, could hardly be induced to serve their guns until it was too late. The Confederates arrived within a few paces of Sigel's cannon, killed the horses, turned the flanks of the infantry, and forced them to fly. In this retreat Sigel lost five cannon, of which three were spiked, and the colors of the Third Regiment.

The total Federal loss was 258 killed, 873 wounded, and 186 missing; in all, 1,317. The Confederate loss was 279 killed, 951 wounded, and 68 prisoners; total, 1,298. Upon the arrival of the shattered Federal forces at Springfield, the command of the whole was entrusted to Col. Sigel, who ordered a retreat to Rolla, Phelps County, 125 miles distant. The retreating army reached this place August 19, having safely conducted a Government train five miles in length, and valued at $1,500,000.

After the Federal defeat at Wilson's Creek, Gov. Gamble issued a proclamation calling into service 42,000 of the State militia to serve for six months, unless peace in the State should be sooner restored.

Martial Law Declared.—Gen. Fremont, on the 30th of August, inaugurated a new remedy for the lawlessness which prevailed, and the almost absolute impotence of the civil authority. He declared martial law and appointed J. McKinstry, major United States army, provost marshal-general of the State.

Capture of Lexington.—Contrary to the expectations of both armies, McCulloch and Price failed to pursue their victory at Wilson's Creek by following Sigel in his retreat to Rolla, and McCulloch soon left Missouri with all his forces. Taking advantage of the favorable impression made upon the people by his success, Gen. Price issued a proclamation in which he declared that his army had been organized for the maintenance of the rights, dignity and honor of Missouri, and was kept in the field for these purposes alone. The citizens of the State now flocked to his standard in considerable numbers, and in a few weeks he had collected a large force. He now pressed northward across the State to Lexington, on the Missouri River. This place was defended by a force of Federals, 2,600 strong, commanded by Col. Mulligan. In anticipation of an attack, intrenchments had been thrown upon Masonic College Hill, an eminence overlooking the Missouri River. Mulligan's fortifications were most skillfully planned, but his men had only about forty rounds of ammunition each, six small brass cannon and two howitzers, the latter of which were useless because of the lack of shells. At dawn of September 12, Gen. Price drove in the Union pickets, and, from a position within easy range of Mulligan's intrenchments, opened a cannonade from four different points. The assault and defense were kept up during the entire day, when Price withdrew to await the arrival of his wagon train and reinforcements. Mulligan's men worked night and day to strengthen their fortifications, and anxiously expected reinforcements, for which a courier had been dispatched to Jefferson City. This messenger was captured on the way, and, of course, no relief came.

On the morning of the 18th, Gen. Price, who had been reinforced, and now had from 15,000 to 25,000 men, began a final attack upon Mulligan's works, cutting off the communication of the beleaguered garrison with the city, stopping their supply of water, seizing a steamboat laden with stores, and occupying a building which commanded the position of the Union forces. A most stubborn defense was made, which continued for fifty-two hours. During the afternoon of the 20th, Gen. Price procured numerous bales of hemp, and with these, wetted to resist hot shot, he caused movable breastworks to be constructed, behind which a large body of the Confederates advanced within ten rods of Mulligan's works. The latter officer saw that further resistance was madness. To retreat was impossible. His men had no water except that which had been caught in blankets during a passing shower, and afterward wrung out; and the stench from the carcasses of horses and mules killed within the intrenchments was insufferable. Accordingly the white flag was raised, and the siege of Lexington was ended. The men laid down their arms and became prisoners of war. As the fruits of this victory there fell into the hands of Gen. Price six cannon, two mortars, over 3,000 stand of infantry arms, a large number of sabers, about 750 horses, wagons, teams, ammunition, and $100,000 worth of commissary stores. On the Union side 40 men were killed and 120 wounded. The Confederate loss was 20 killed and 65 wounded.

Fremont in the Field.—Gen. Fremont, deeply chagrined at the Federal reverses, and fearing that Gen. Price would advance upon the State capital, or intrench himself at some central point upon the Missouri River, determined to take the field in person, with the hope of defeating Price before McCulloch, who had been recruiting troops in Arkansas, could return to his aid.

With this intention he directed toward Southwestern Missouri an army of more than 20,000 men, arranged in five divisions, under command of Gens. Hunter, Pope, Sigel, McKinstry and Asboth. These troops were accompanied by eighty-six pieces of artillery, many of which were rifle cannon. On the 28th of September Fremont, with his famous body-guard, commanded by Maj. Zagonyi, a Hungarian, reached Jefferson City, and commenced vigorous measures to overturn the plans of Gen. Price, and drive him from the State. On the 30th of the month Price abandoned Lexington, leaving a small force of 500 men to guard such prisoners as had not been paroled. On the 16th of October Maj. White, with his "Prairie Scouts," consisting of 185 cavalrymen, surprised this garrison, releasing the Union prisoners, capturing seventy of the Confederates, and dispersing the rest. He then rejoined Fremont's army.

Springfield.—Maj. White was now ordered by Gen. Sigel to reconnoiter near Springfield, and if advisable to attack the Confederate force in camp there. The major was seriously ill at the time, but immediately set his command in motion, accompanying them in a carriage.

On the evening of the same day, October 24, he was overtaken by Maj. Zagonyi, with the "body guard," and he, under orders from Fremont, took command of the combined force. The Confederates, mostly cavalry, and numbering something more than 1,000, were encamped about a mile west of Springfield, on the Mount Vernon road, and were under command of Lieut.-Col. Cloud. The attack of Zagonyi proved a complete surprise. His men dashed down a lane under fire of the enemy, who had hastily formed a line along its north side. At this first onset a large number of the Confederates ran in every direction, but the remainder stood their ground. The Union soldiers swept past the Confederate camp, demolished a rail fence, entered the field where the enemy then were, and formed in line in a ravine about 200 yards away. They again charged with drawn sabres, but were repulsed with considerable loss. Falling back to the ravine they repeated the charge a second and third time with a like result. The Union loss in the engagement was: Zagonyi's "body guard," 15 killed, 27 wounded and 10 taken prisoners—52; White's "Prairie Scouts" killed, wounded and prisoners, 33; total 85.

After the engagement the Confederates withdrew to Price's headquarters at Neosho, and Zagonyi also fell back until he met Sigel's advance.

Gen. Fremont was just upon the eve of an attack upon Price, who, it was reported, reinforced by McCulloch, was moving on Springfield with 40,000 men, when he was superseded by Gen. Hunter. The latter, after retreating to St. Louis, was in turn superseded by Gen. Halleck, on the 18th of November.

Belmont.—The only remaining movement of importance was at Belmont, on the Mississippi. The Confederate general, Polk, acting under orders of his government, had, notwithstanding that State's neutrality, entered Kentucky with an army, and had captured the town of Columbus. Batteries planted here commanded the Mississippi. The Confederates gathered in force at Belmont, on the opposite bank. In order to dislodge them, Gen. Fremont sent Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, with a brigade of 3,000 Illinois and Iowa troops, into Missouri, by way of Cairo. On the 7th of November, Grant made a vigorous and successful attack on the Confederate camp, but Gen. Polk sent reinforcements across the river, the guns of Columbus were brought to bear on the Union position, and Grant was obliged to retreat. The total loss on the Federal side was 108 killed, 353 wounded and 121 missing; total, 582. The Confederate loss was 104 killed, 419 wounded and 117 missing; total, 641.

In addition to the engagements already described, quite a large number of raids, surprises and skirmishes—some of them important enough to be accounted battles—occurred in Missouri during 1861. They will be found mentioned in chronological order in the list of battles on another page.

The Campaign of 1862.—The beginning of the year found Missouri comparatively quiet. Gen. Price had concentrated about 12,000 men at Springfield, intending to remain there all winter, but Gen. Halleck massed his forces, comprising the troops of Asboth, Sigel, Davis and Prentiss, at Lebanon, under command of Gen. Curtis. On February 11, this army moved against Springfield, and on the following night Gen. Price retreated to Cassville. Curtis pursuing him, he withdrew still further across the Arkansas line to Cross Hollows, thence to Sugar Creek, where, reinforced by McCulloch, he gave battle and was defeated February 20. Price again retreated to Cove Creek, and then halted, leaving Missouri with no large organized Confederate force within her borders. Nevertheless, it was evident that the rebel general, sheltered in the defiles of the "Boston Mountains," was only gathering strength for more vigorous operations; therefore, Curtis retraced his steps, and fell back to Pea Ridge, among the mountains in the northwestern part of Arkansas. Here he received intelligence that Price and McCulloch had been reinforced by Gen. Van Dorn, and that their combined force under command of the latter officer would soon attack his position.

Battle of Pea Ridge—An Elkhorn Tavern.—This engagement commenced on the morning of the 6th of March, 1862. The Confederate force aggregated about 25,000 men as follows: McCulloch's troops, from Arkansas, Louisiana and Texas, 13,000; Gen. Pike's command, consisting of Choctaw, Cherokee, Chickasaw and other Indians, and some white troops, 4,000; Price's Missouri troops, 8,000. The Federal force consisted of 10,500 men, including cavalry and infantry, forty-nine pieces of artillery and one mountain howitzer.

After a hard-fought battle, which lasted for two days, the Federals were victorious. The Confederate generals, McCulloch and McIntosh, were both killed. Van Dorn withdrew to the interior of Arkansas, and Curtis marched slowly southward. The Federal loss in the battle of Pea Ridge was 203 killed, 972 wounded, and 176 taken prisoners; total, 1,351; Confederate loss about the same.

Various War Measures.—Meanwhile, in Missouri, Provost-Marshal General Farrar issued an order requiring the publishers of newspapers in the State, with the exception of St. Louis city papers, to furnish a copy of each issue, for inspection at the marshal's office.

Gen. Halleck issued an order requiring the officers of the Mercantile Library Association and of the Chamber of Commerce to subscribe to the oath prescribed by the convention ordinance of October 6, 1861, under peril of arrest and imprisonment. The same order also forbade the display of secession flags in the hands of women or on carriages—the carriages to be confiscated and the women arrested. A similar order was issued to the presidents and directors of all railroads in the State, and to the president, professors, curators and other officers of the State University at Columbia. This order required all clerks, agents and civil employes in the service of the United States to take the oath prescribed by act of Congress, and recommended that all clergymen, teachers, officers of benevolent institutions, and all engaged in business and trade, who were loyal to the Union, should voluntarily take the convention oath, in order that their patriotism might be known.

At different times men were tried and condemned to be shot upon charges of railroad wrecking and bridge burning, but these sentences were commuted to imprisonment, or, in some cases, the culprits were released upon their taking the oath of allegiance, and giving bond in the sum of $2,000 each for future loyalty to the Government.

Edmund J. Ellis, of Columbia, editor and proprietor of The Boone County Standard, was found guilty, and sentenced to banishment from the State during the war, on the several charges of giving information to the enemy, encouraging resistance to the Federal Government, and inciting persons to rebellion against the same. His printing materials were confiscated and sold.

Early in April, Gen. Halleck went to Corinth, Miss., and left Maj-Gen. Schofield in command at St. Louis.

Operations Against Guerrillas—Col. Jo. C. Porter.—Gov. Gamble, desiring to repress the numerous guerrilla organizations in the State, authorized Gen. Schofield to organize the State militia into companies, regiments and brigades, and to call a force into the field sufficient to quell the marauders and secure the people of the State in their persons and property. In the series of skirmishes and fights which occurred between the State militia and the Confederate guerrillas, the most brilliant and important were those connected with the pursuit and final overthrow of Col. Jo. C. Porter.

His force was first engaged July 1, at Cherry Grove, Schuyler County, by Col. Lipscomb, with about 450 of the State Militia. After a small fight the Confederates retreated, and were pursued as far as Newark, Knox County. The next important encounter with Porter's forces was at Pearce's Mills, on the Middle Fabius, Scotland County, where, on the 19th of July, a pursuing force, under Maj. John Y. Clopper, of the Merrill Horse, and Maj. John F. Benjamin, of the Eleventh Missouri State Militia, was ambuscaded, and sustained a loss of eighty-three men, while the Confederates lost but half a dozen. Porter, however, retreated toward the west and south, and in less than twenty-four hours was at Novelty, Knox County, sixty-four miles distant. Still going southward, they passed through Marion County to Florida, in Monroe, where they attacked and defeated a small detachment of the Third Iowa Cavalry, under Maj. H. C. Caldwell, and then hurried on to the heavily-wooded country near Brown's Spring, ten miles north of Fulton, in Callaway County. Ascertaining their position, Col. Guitar, of the Ninth Missouri State Militia, started in pursuit, July 27, with about 200 men and two pieces of artillery. On the preceding day Lieut.-Col. Shaffer, of Merrill's Horse, left Columbia upon the same errand, with 100 men, and was joined at Sturgeon by Maj. Clopper, with as many more. Maj. Caldwell, with a detachment of the Third Iowa, also started from Mexico. These two latter columns marched toward Mount Zion Church, in the northeast part of Boone County, believing that Porter was encamped there. Not finding the object of their search, they pursued their way into Callaway County, and, on the afternoon of the 28th, heard Guitar's cannon four or five miles distant. Shaffer and Caldwell hastened forward, and arrived in time to assist in the hard-fought battle of Moore's Mill, July 28, wherein Porter was defeated with a loss of 32 killed and 135 wounded, while Guitar lost 13 killed and 55 wounded.

Battle of Kirksville.—Porter now retreated northward, through Monroe into Marion County. Here he received a large number of recruits. On the 1st of August he attacked and captured Newark, Knox County, with its garrison of seventy-five men, under Capt. Wesley Lair, of the Eleventh Missouri State Militia, and pushed northward to Short's Well, in the Southern part of Scotland, where he was joined by a considerable detachment under Col. Cyrus Franklin and Lieut.-Col. Frisby H. McCullough. The rebel forces were closely pursued by Col. John McNeil. Porter and Franklin turned west from Short's Well, and reached Kirksville on the morning of August 6, a few hours in advance of their pursuers, and, ordering the citizens to evacuate the town, posted their troops in the courthouse, seminary, stores and private residences, and, thus entrenched, awaited the coming Unionists. Porter had about 2,800 men, all mounted, but many were without arms, and nearly all without experience.

Col. McNeil, approaching from the eastern side of the town, drew up his forces before it. Not knowing the exact position of the enemy, he ordered ten men, under Lieut. John N. Cowdry, of Merrill's Horse, to ride through the town and discover their places of concealment. They obeyed the order, and the rebels in their eagerness fired upon them from houses, stables and other places affording them protection from the missiles which were shortly to be poured upon the town. McNeil now opened the battle with his cannon, and, under cover of his artillery fire, advanced his dismounted men, and soon the Confederates began to give way.

In three hours the town was in possession of McNeil, and the forces of Porter and Franklin were in full retreat toward the Chariton River. The Confederate loss in this engagement was between 200 and 300 killed, wounded and captured; the Federal loss was 6 killed and 33 wounded.

Compton's Ferry—Yellow Creek.—On the following day Col. Guitar, who had been ill at Jefferson City, entered upon preparations for the pursuit of a considerable rebel force in Chariton County, under Col. J. A. Poindexter, and, on the 8th of August, landed from a steamer a considerable force at Glasgow. He overtook Poindexter at 9 o'clock on the night of the 11th, at Compton's Ferry, on Grand River, in Carroll County. Part of Poindexter's men had crossed the river before his arrival, but a large number, with all their baggage, horses, wagons, etc., had yet to cross. Guitar ordered a charge, and at the same time opened upon the fleeing rebels with two pieces of artillery. The result was a great panic and considerable destruction. Many of the Confederates, in their eagerness to escape, threw away their guns, and forced their horses into the river, but the animals in many instances, became unmanageable, and returned to the same shore whence they started. Some were drowned. A large number of prisoners, and all the baggage, together with horses, mules, guns and wagons, were captured.

Poindexter marched as swiftly as possible to the northward, reaching the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad at Utica on Tuesday morning, the 12th. Near here he was intercepted and driven back by Gen. Lyon. Retreating south he was met by Guitar on the 13th, at Yellow Creek, in Chariton County, and again routed, his band being scattered and broken up. Guitar then returned to Jefferson City and was promoted by Gov. Gamble to be brigadier-general of Enrolled Missouri Militia.

Battle at Independence.—The next important engagement in the State occurred at Independence very early in the morning of August 11. The town was garrisoned by about 450 Federal troops, comprising infantry and cavalry, under Lieut.-Col. J. T. Buell. The Confederates, commanded by Col. John T. Hughes, of Clinton County, and G. W. Thompson, numbered from 600 to 800. They were fairly inside the town, and had commenced a vigorous attack before their approach was suspected. Col. Buell was at once surrounded at his headquarters, thus preventing all communication between himself and his men; nevertheless his soldiers fought bravely; but so completely were they surprised that the best they could do was to retreat into the fields, where they formed for defense behind a stone wall. While the rebels were charging upon this position Col. Hughes was killed. Col. Buell, finding that his camp was in the hands of the enemy, and that extrication was hopeless, raised the white flag and surrendered the post. Both sides suffered heavy losses.

Battles of Lone Jack and Newtonia.—At Lone Jack, a village in Jackson County, a rebel force (3,000 strong) under Cols. John T. Coffee, Vard. Cockerill, S. D. Jackman and D. C. Hunter, attacked 800 State militia under Maj. Emory Foster, of the Seventeenth Missouri State Militia on August 16. The Federal loss was 43 killed, 154 wounded and 75 missing; the Confederate casualties were about the same. The Federals were defeated and lost two pieces of artillery. The rebels, hearing their adversaries were to be reinforced, retreated southward.

On September 13, 1862, an engagement took place at Newtonia, Newton County, between about 5,000 Kansas, Wisconsin, Missouri and Indian troops, under Gen. Salomon, and a Confederate force of 8,000 or 10,000 under Col. D. H. Cooper. Numbers were killed and wounded on both sides, and the Federals were compelled to retreat as far as Sarcoux, fifteen miles distant.

Execution of Rebel Prisoners.—At Macon, Mo., on the 25th of September, ten rebel prisoners were executed on the charge of repeated violations of their paroles, and on October 18 a similar number was shot at Palmyra, in retaliation for the abduction and murder of Andrew Allsman, a Unionist of Marion County. After the battle of Kirksville, sixteen were executed for violating their paroles, and Col. F. H. McCullough was shot for recruiting within the lines.

Battle of Cane Hill, Arkansas—The last great battle of the year in which Missourians had a part was fought at Cane Hill, near Fayetteville, Ark., on Sunday, December 6, 1862. The Confederate forces under Gen. Hindman, of Arkansas, and Marmaduke, of Missouri, were defeated by the Unionists under Gen. Blunt, of Kansas. The following is the official report of the engagement, sent by Gen. Blunt to Maj.-Gen. Curtis, commandant of the department of Missouri:

PRAIRIE GROVE, December 10, 1862.

Maj.-Gen. S. R. Curtis.

The enemy did not stop in their flight until they had crossed the Boston Mountains, and are probably ere this across the Arkansas River. The enemy's killed and wounded is between 1,500 and 2,000—a large proportion of them killed. One hundred of their wounded have died since the battle, and a large proportion of the others are wounded mortally, showing the terrible effects of my artillery. My casualties will be about 200 wounded. Most of the wounded will recover. The enemy have left their wounded on my hands, and most of their dead, uncared for. They are being buried by my command. Hindman admitted his force to be 28,000. Maj. Hubbard, who was a prisoner with them all day of the fight, counted twenty regiments of infantry and twenty pieces of artillery. They had no train with them, and muffled the wheels of their artillery in making their retreat. Four caissons filled with ammunition were taken from the enemy. The Twentieth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers, in addition to those mentioned yesterday, suffered severely in charging one of the enemy's batteries, which they took, but were unable to hold.

JAMES G. BLUNT,
Brigadier-General.

The Campaign of 1863.—Battles of Springfield, Hartsville and Cape Girardeau.—In the early part of this year, the Confederates, led by Gens. Marmaduke and Price, resumed activity in Arkansas and Southern Missouri. On the 8th of January, with a force of 2,500 or 3,000 men and three pieces of artillery, Gen. J. S. Marmaduke attacked Springfield, which was occupied by Federal troops under Gen. E. B. Brown, commander of the Southwestern Department of Missouri. The fighting continued from 1 o'clock P. M. until after dark. Gen. Brown having been severely wounded, the command devolved upon Col. B. Crabb. The Confederates retreated the following morning, going to Marshfield and Hartsville. Their loss was 42 killed and 60 wounded, who were left on the field. The Federal loss was 18 killed and 110 wounded.

Three days afterward, at the town of Hartsville, Gen. Marmaduke, having united near Marshfield with a force under Col. Jo. C. Porter, and moving thence southward, attacked a Federal force under Col. Samuel Merrill, of the Twenty-first Iowa, and after a bloody little engagement drove them from the field.

On April 26, Gen. Marmaduke attacked the post at Cape Girardeau, on the Mississippi, but the garrison, under Gen. John McNeil, succeeded in driving the Confederates away.

During the last week in August, Col. Woodson, of the Third Cavalry Missouri State Militia, surprised and captured Gen. Jeff. Thompson, known as the "Swamp Fox," together with his staff officers, at Pocahontas, Ark. The prisoners were sent to St. Louis, and committed to Gratiot prison.

Order No. 11.—On the 25th of August, Gen. Thomas Ewing, of the Eleventh Kansas Infantry Volunteers, afterward a Democratic member of Congress from Ohio, issued the following order, which, as it was productive of much suffering at the time in the counties indicated, and has been commemorated by George C. Bingham in the celebrated painting entitled: "Order No. 11," we copy in full:

General Orders No. 11:

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF THE BORDER.
KANSAS CITY, MO., August 25, 1863. }

First. All persons living in Cass, Jackson and Bates Counties, Mo., and in that part of Vernon included in this district, except those living within one mile of the limits of Independence, Hickman's Mills, Pleasant Hill and Harrisonville, and except those in that part of Kaw Township, Jackson County, north of Brush Creek and west of the Big Blue, embracing Kansas City and Westport, are hereby ordered to remove from their present residences within fifteen days from the date thereof.

Those who, within that time, establish their loyalty to the satisfaction of the commanding officer of the military station nearest their present places of residence will receive from him certificates stating the fact of their loyalty, and the names of the witnesses by whom it can be shown. All who receive such certificate will be permitted to remove to any military station in this district, or to any part of the State of Kansas, except the counties on the eastern border of the State. All others shall remove out of this district.

Officers commanding companies and detachments, serving in the counties named, will see that this paragraph is promptly obeyed.

Second. All grain and hay in the field, or under shelter, in the district from which the inhabitants are required to remove, within reach of military stations, after the 9th day of September next, will be taken to such stations and turned over to the proper officers there, and report of the amount so turned over made to district headquarters, specifying the names of all loyal owners and the amount of such produce taken from them. All grain and hay found in such district after the 9th of September next, not convenient to such stations, will be destroyed.

Third. The provisions of General Orders No. 10, from these headquarters, will be at once vigorously executed by officers commanding in the parts of the district, and at the stations not subject to paragraph first of this order, and especially in the towns of Independence, Westport and Kansas City.

Fourth. Paragraph three, General Orders No. 10, is revoked as to all who have borne arms against the Government in this district since August 20, 1863.

By order of Brig.-Gen. Ewing.

H. HANNAHS, Adj't.

Gen. Schofield, at that time commandant of the Department of Missouri, has since the war approved and defended this order, on the ground that a savage guerrilla warfare had raged on the border for two years, nearly depopulating the farming districts on the Missouri side, and that all the inhabitants who remained were obliged, whether rebel sympathizers or not, to furnish shelter and supplies for bands of marauding outlaws. He said that it was imperative that this border war should be suppressed, and that the fiendish massacre of 140 persons at Lawrence, Kas., on August 13, by the guerrilla Quantrell and his band, rendered immediate and decisive action necessary in order to prevent a succession of such horrors.

To increase the military force in the district was impracticable, and the only alternative was to remove the means by which these guerrillas were sustained. He stated, further, that no serious inconvenience was inflicted upon any one by the execution of the order, but that the necessities of the poor people were provided for, and none were permitted to suffer.

In reply to this statement of Gen. Schofield, which appeared in the St. Louis daily Republican of February 21, 1877, Hon. George C. Bingham, an old citizen of Jackson County, and a strong Union man during the war, prepared a counter statement, which was published in the same paper on the 26th of the month. He denounced the order as an act of purely arbitrary power, directed against a disarmed and defenseless population. He declared that it put an end to the predatory raids of Kansas "red-legs and jay-hawkers," by simply giving them all that they desired at once, that it gave up the country to Confederate bushwhackers, who, until the close of the war, stopped stages, robbed mails and prevented any one wearing a Federal uniform from entering the district. Mr. Bingham says he was in Kansas City when the order was enforced, and that he knew personally of the sufferings of the unfortunate victims. Men were shot down while obeying the order, and their effects seized by their murderers; dense columns of smoke rising in every direction marked the conflagration of dwellings; large trains of wagons, extending over the prairies for miles, moved toward Kansas, freighted with every description of household furniture and clothing belonging to the exiles; women and little children, barefooted and bare-headed, exposed to burning heat and choking dust, tramped wearily along, to whom neither aid nor protection were afforded by the authorities who had driven them from their homes, and who were indebted to the charity of steamboat conductors who took them to places of safety.

Mr. Bingham admitted that guerrilla warfare had been waged for two years in the counties embraced by the order, but denied that this region was by any means depopulated, or that the remaining farmers were supporting these outlaws. He said that the larger portion of the marauders were Kansas "jay-hawkers and red-legs," with no authority of law either military or civil, yet countenanced and protected by Gen. Ewing and his predecessors from the State of Kansas; that the others, constituting the more desperate class, were chiefly Missouri bushwhackers, acting under Confederate authority; that the inhabitants of the counties had been disarmed, as Gen. Schofield admitted, and were unable to resist the demands made upon them, but that the bushwhackers were insignificant in numbers compared with the Federal troops who were stationed there, and that twenty if not fifty times as much produce was furnished to the latter as to the former.

To this reply of Mr. Bingham neither Gen. Schofield nor Gen. Ewing made any response.

Order No. 11 belongs to that extensive list of war measures which, wise or unwise, necessary or unnecessary, was viewed in a very different light by those who were, on one hand, personally aggrieved and injured, and by those who, on the other hand, were looking from afar at the great end in view, namely, the overthrow of the Rebellion. In the border States, where Unionists and Disunionists lived side by side, numerous complexities arose, heightened by personal animosities and old family feuds; and in many cases loss of life, and especially loss of property, fell upon partisans indiscriminately, verifying the old, sad maxim that where transgression enters, the innocent must often suffer with the guilty.

Shelby's Raid.—In September Gen. Blunt drove the Confederate forces under Gen. Cabell and the Creek chief, Stand Watie, into the Choctaw reservation, and took possession of Fort Smith. As the autumn advanced and Cabell's supplies began to run low, a part of his command under Col. Jo. O. Shelby undertook a raid into Missouri. They crossed the Arkansas River, a little east of Fort Smith, and pushed rapidly northward as far as Crooked Prairie, in the southwestern part of this State, when they were joined by Col. Coffee. At Boonville, where Shelby expected to meet a large number of recruits, but was disappointed, his men secured from stores and dwelling houses $100,000 worth of property, after which they moved westward. On October 12 and 13, however, Gen. Brown encountered these forces at Marshall and defeated them, with a loss of fifty men killed, wounded and prisoners. Shelby hastily returned to Arkansas.

The Campaign of 1864.—Several sanguinary engagements were fought in Missouri during this, the closing year of the war. The Union troops, chiefly Missouri State Militia and Enrolled Missouri Militia, were engaged in the effort, at many times unsuccessful, to defend the lives and property of the people from the roving bands of bushwhackers and guerrillas that infested all parts of the State, but particularly the western and river counties.

Late in January Gen. Rosecrans arrived at St. Louis, succeeding Gen. Schofield as commander of the Department of Missouri. No event of importance occurred until the following autumn, when Gen. Price made his last grand raid into the State with the intention of capturing St. Louis, and other important points.

Having been informed early in September of Price's meditated invasion, Rosecrans forwarded the information to headquarters, and Gen. A. J. Smith, then ascending the Mississippi with about 6,000 troops, was ordered to proceed to St. Louis. Gen. Rosecrans had previous to this only about 6,500 mounted men in his whole department, and these were scattered at various points—at Springfield, Pilot Knob, Jefferson City, Rolla and St. Louis, guarding military depots and railway bridges against the hordes of guerrillas who swarmed through the country. These troops were concentrated as quickly as possible when Price's intended route was ascertained, but he had already entered South-eastern Missouri, and reached Pilot Knob, before he was met by any considerable opposition. At that place a single brigade was stationed under command of Gen. Thomas Ewing. This force was intrenched in a little fort with some rude earthworks, but it made a gallant resistance, and repulsed two assaults of the Confederates, inflicting upon them a loss of 1,000 men. Gen. Price's men now took positions which commanded the entire fort, and Gen. Ewing, seeing that further resistance was hopeless, spiked his guns, blew up his magazine, and retreated, by night, toward Rolla, where Gen. McNeil was stationed. After accomplishing a march of sixty miles in thirty-nine hours, the exhausted troops were overtaken at Harrison by a large force under Shelby. Although short of ammunition, Gen. Ewing held his ground for thirty hours, when he was reinforced by troops sent from Rolla, after which he drove Shelby away, and continued his retreat in safety.

At St. Louis, Gen. Smith's infantry, 4,000 or 5,000 strong, was joined by eight regiments of the Enrolled Militia of the State, and six regiments of Illinois Militia. At Jefferson City Gen. E. B. Brown had been reinforced by Gen. C. B. Fisk with all available troops north of the Missouri River, and the citizens of that region promptly aiding the military, the capital was soon well fortified.

Gen. Price advanced by way of Potosi to the Meramec River; crossed it, and took position at Richwoods, within forty miles of St. Louis. Evidently fearing to attack that city, he burned the bridge at Moselle, and then pushed rapidly toward the capital of the State, followed by Gen. Smith and his entire command. Gen. Price, after having burned bridges behind him, and done all in his power to hinder his pursuers, arrived before Jefferson City on the 7th of October. Gen. McNeil and J. B. Sanborn, with a force of mounted men, chiefly Missouri State Militia, had just reached there by a forced march from Rolla. Squads of cavalry had been sent out to guard the fords and ferries on the Osage River, and, if not able to prevent the Confederates from crossing, to give timely warning of their approach. The railroad bridge across the river nine miles east of the city had been burned.

Several small engagements and skirmishes took place, and the Confederates partly surrounded the city with a semi-circular line nearly four miles in length, the wings resting on the Missouri River. Finding the place well prepared for an attack, Price sent his trains westward and followed with his army. A large force now started in pursuit of the Confederates, led by Federal cavalry under immediate command of Gen. Alfred Pleasanton, who arrived at Jefferson City on the day of Price's departure.

The latter general, growing bold as he marched westward, sent Gens. Jo. Shelby and John B. Clark, Jr., to attack Glasgow on the Missouri River, in Howard County. The town was garrisoned by a part of the Forty-third Missouri, and small detachments of the Ninth Missouri State Militia and Seventeenth Illinois Cavalry, under command of Col. Chester Harding. After a spirited resistance Col. Harding was obliged to surrender.

His assailants then marched back and joined their main army, which was still hastening westward. Gen. Price left Lexington just as Pleasanton's advance reached that place, October 20. At Little Blue Creek he met Blunt's Kansas troops, under command of Gen. Curtis, who, after a sharp fight which lasted for several hours, fell back to the Big Blue Creek and there awaited another attack. Meanwhile, Pleasanton reached the Little Blue, and found the bridge destroyed and the Confederate rear-guard prepared for battle. They were soon driven away, and Pleasanton continued his course to Westport, then occupied by the enemy. He captured the place by a brilliant charge in which he routed the Confederates, and took two of their guns.

Gen. Price had expected to receive at least 20,000 recruits during the progress of this raid, and perhaps to permanently occupy the State; instead, only about 6,000 Missourians came to his assistance, and he fled into Arkansas as rapidly as possible, having accomplished nothing of importance.

The Affair near Rocheport.—September 23, 1864, a train of Government wagons started from Sturgeon, Boone County, for Rocheport, in charge of seventy men of the Third Missouri State Militia, under Capt. McFadin. The train stopped near sunset at a pond about seven miles northeast of Rocheport, in order that the horses might be watered. Here it was suddenly attacked by 150 guerrillas under George Todd, who put the escort to flight, robbed the wagons of everything that they could conveniently carry away, and burned what remained. Eleven Federal soldiers were killed, and three negroes.

The Centralia Massacre.—Among the revolting and horrible crimes of the war the Centralia massacre stands prominent for its dastardly and cold-blooded atrocity. Monday night, September 26, Anderson's guerrillas, in numbers estimated from 200 to 400, encamped about three miles southeast of Centralia, which is situated on the North Missouri Railroad, in Boone County. About 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, 75 or 100 of this band went into the town, and commenced plundering the stores and depot, breaking open boxes and trunks, and appropriating whatever suited them. At 11 o'clock the stage-coach arrived from Columbia with eight or nine passengers. These gentlemen being unarmed were quickly relieved of their money and valuables, but were allowed to go to the hotel. At 11:30 the passenger train from St. Louis came in sight. Immediately the guerrillas formed into line, and as the train neared the depot, commenced throwing obstructions on the track and firing at the engineer. The cars having been stopped, the robbers rushed upon the passengers, men, women and children, taking money, watches and jewelry, together with the contents of trunks, and valuables from the express car. Twenty-three Federal soldiers who were on board the train were marched into town, placed in lines, and shot down. The guerrillas burned the railroad depot and six cars standing near. After murdering the soldiers and robbing the passengers and the citizens of the town generally, they set fire to the rifled train, and started it on the road toward Sturgeon. It ran about three miles, and then stopping was entirely consumed. Meanwhile the frightened passengers, glad to escape with their lives, went on their way as best they could, in wagons, on horseback, and on foot.

About 3 o'clock of the same afternoon Maj. A. V. E. Johnson, of Col. Kutzner's regiment of Missouri Volunteers (the Thirty-ninth), arrived at Centralia with 155 mounted infantry. An engagement took place in an open field southeast of the town. Maj. Johnson's men, being armed with long guns, were ordered to dismount. Their horses became unmanageable, and many of them ran away, leaving the soldiers on foot in the middle of the prairie. They had fired but one volley when the guerrillas dashed among them, splendidly mounted, and carrying three or four revolvers apiece. Part of Johnson's men who were still on horseback attempted to escape, but were overtaken and shot down. Maj. Johnson himself was killed, together with 122 men of his small command. Four or five of the remaining few were wounded. The guerrillas had but three killed and seven wounded.

After the murderers had left town the citizens of Centralia gathered the dead bodies together, and placed them near the railroad. Many of them were taken to Mexico for burial that very evening, and seventy-nine were interred in a trench in the eastern part of town. Afterward this trench was enclosed by a fence, and at the head of it was placed a limestone monument, fifteen feet high, with the following inscription:

"The remains of Companies A, G and H, Thirty-ninth Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, who were killed in action at Centralia, Mo., on the 27th day of September, 1864, are interred here." Since the close of the war the remains have been disinterred and re-buried in one common grave in the National Cemetery at Jefferson City.

Death of Bill Anderson.—After the horrible massacre at Centralia, the subsequent burning of Danville and the depots at New Florence, High Hill and Renick, Bill Anderson and the most of his men went into Ray County. On the 26th of October, Lieut.-Col. S. P. Cox, of the Thirty-third Enrolled Missouri Militia, learning Anderson's whereabouts, made a forced march to meet him. On the following day, just one month after the Centralia massacre, Col. Cox came in contact with the guerrilla pickets, and drove them before him into the woods. He then dismounted his men, threw an infantry force into the forest, and sent forward a cavalry advance which soon engaged Anderson's main body and fell back. The guerrillas now charged, and Anderson was killed, while his men were forced to retreat at full speed, hotly pursued by the Union cavalry. Upon the body of Anderson was found $300 in gold, $150 in treasury notes, six revolvers, and several orders from Gen. Price.

Early in December, 1864, Gen. Rosecrans was relieved of the command of the Department of Missouri, and Gen. Granville M. Dodge, of Iowa, succeeded him.

List of Battles in Missouri.—Necessarily there has been omitted from this brief review even a mention of many of the minor battles of the Civil War, which were fought upon the soil of Missouri. POLITICAL REVIEW SINCE 1865.

The delegates chosen to the State Constitutional Convention assembled in Mercantile Library Hall, St. Louis, Friday, January 6, 1865. The objects of the convention were: First, "to consider such amendments to the constitution of the State as might be deemed necessary for the emancipation of slaves;" and second, "such amendments to the constitution of the State as might be deemed necessary to preserve in purity the elective franchise to loyal citizens, and such other amendments as might be deemed essential to the promotion of the public good."

On January 11, the following ordinance was passed by the Convention:

AN ORDINANCE ABOLISHING SLAVERY IN MISSOURI.

Be it ordained by the People of the State of Missouri, in Convention Assembled, That hereafter, in this State, there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except in punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted; and all persons held to service or labor as slaves are hereby declared free.

Emancipation in Missouri was thus established by law, although it had practically existed for some time previous.

The Drake Constitution.—It soon became apparent that mere amendments to the constitution would not satisfy the leading members of the convention, prominent among whom was Mr. Drake, of St. Louis, who had been chosen vice-president. A complete remodeling of the organic laws of the State seemed to many not to fall within the authority of the convention; moreover, they believed that the time had not come for that dispassionate and statesmanlike legislation which so important a measure demanded. However, the convention proceeded with its sweeping work of reform, until it had made new provisions in every article of the fundamental law. Section 3 of Article XI, on the "Right of Suffrage," which was the object of the most angry and exciting debate in the convention, and a prolific source of strife and division afterward, is here transcribed.

SEC. 3. At any election held by the people under this constitution, or in pursuance of any law of this State, or under any ordinance or by-law of any municipal corporation, no person shall be deemed a qualified voter who has ever been in armed hostility to the United States, or to the lawful authorities thereof, or to the Government of this State; or has ever given aid, comfort, countenance or support to persons engaged in any such hostility; or has ever in any manner adhered to the enemies, foreign or domestic, of the United States, either by contributing to them, or by unlawfully sending within their lines, money, goods, letters, or information; or has ever disloyally held communication with such enemies; or has ever advised or aided any person to enter the service of such enemies; or has ever by act or word manifested his adherence to the cause of such enemies, or his desire for their triumph over the armies of the United States; or his sympathy with those engaged in exciting or carrying on rebellion against the United States; or has ever, except under overpowering compulsion, submitted to the authority, or been in the service of these so-called "Confederate States of America;" or has ever left this State, and gone within the lines of the armies of the so-called "Confederate States of America," with the purpose of adhering to said States or armies; or has ever been a member of, or connected with any order, society or organization inimical to the Government of the United States, or to the Government of this State; or has ever been engaged in guerrilla warfare against loyal inhabitants of the United States, or in that description of marauding commonly known as "bushwhacking;" or has ever knowingly and willingly harbored, aided or countenanced any person so engaged; or has ever come into or left this State for the purpose of avoiding enrollment for or draft into the military service of the United States; or has ever, with a view to avoid enrollment in the militia of this State, or to escape the performance of duty therein, or for any other purpose, enrolled himself, or authorized himself to be enrolled, by or before any officer, as disloyal or as a Southern sympathizer, or in any other terms indicating his disaffection to the Government of the United States in its contest with rebellion, or his sympathy with those engaged in such rebellion; or having ever voted at any election by the people in this State, or in any other of the United States, or in any of their Territories, or under the United States, shall thereafter have sought or received, under claim of alienage, the protection of any foreign government, through any consul or other officer thereof, in order to secure exemption from military duty, in the militia of this State, or in the army of the United States; nor shall any such person be capable of holding, in this State, any office of honor, trust or profit under its authority; or of being an officer, councilman, director, trustee, or other manager of any corporation, public or private, now existing, or hereafter established by its authority; or of acting as a professor or teacher in any educational institution, or in any common or other school; or of holding any real estate or other property in trust for the use of any church, religious society or congregation. But the foregoing provisions in relation to acts done against the United States shall not apply to any person not a citizen thereof, who shall have committed such acts while in the service of some foreign country at war with the United States, and who has, since such acts, been naturalized, or may hereafter be naturalized, under the laws of the United States, and the oath of loyalty hereinafter prescribed, when taken by any such persons, shall be considered as taken in such sense.

Section 4 provided for a registration of the names of qualified voters, and Section 5 required that the oath indicated in the third section should be taken by every voter at the time of his registration. Taking the oath should not, however, be deemed conclusive evidence of the right of a person to vote, supposing such right could be otherwise disproved. This section also provided that evidence for or against the right of any person to vote should be heard and passed upon by the registering officers and not by the judges of election.

These officers should keep a list of the names of rejected voters, and the same were to be certified to the judges of elections who were to receive the ballot of any such rejected voter, marking the same as a rejected vote; but even with these precautions the vote was not to be received unless the party casting it should, at the time, take the oath of loyalty.

Under the ninth section no person was permitted to practice law, "or be competent as a bishop, priest, deacon, minister, elder or other clergyman of any religious persuasion, sect or denomination, to teach or preach, unless such person shall have first taken, subscribed and filed said oath."

While the article upon the "Executive Department" was pending, an effort was made to introduce an amendment, by which any citizen of the State, white or colored, male or female, would be eligible to the office of governor, but the amendment was rejected by a tie vote, as also a similar proposition in reference to the "Legislative Department."

It is but just to say, in this connection, that the new constitution, objectionable and stringent as it was in many particulars, was admirable in respect to its provisions for public instruction, and was conceded to be so by its bitterest enemies.

The constitution was adopted April 8, and two days afterward the convention adjourned sine die.

An election had been appointed for the 6th of June, 1865, to submit the new constitution to the people for their indorsement or rejection, but it had also been provided that no person should vote at that election except those who would be qualified as voters under the second article thereof. The canvass which followed was naturally one of the greatest bitterness.

Although the war was nominally over, and all the strongholds of the Rebellion were in the hands of the United States authorities, yet there were fragmentary guerrilla bands still roaming through various sections of the country, and the war spirit continued in undiminished force. Multitudes of taxpayers in the State, not a few of whom were honored and influential citizens, and had been non-combatants during the war, were disfranchised by the third section, and denied the privilege of voting upon the adoption or rejection of the code of laws which was to govern them and their children. On the other hand, it was maintained with vigor that citizens who had attempted to destroy their government, who had committed treason either by open deeds of rebellion, or by encouragement, sympathy and aid given to those in rebellion, had forfeited all right to assist in conducting the affairs of State. The election resulted in a majority of 1,862 for the constitution, which accordingly went into effect July 4, 1865.

The next General Assembly, which convened at Jefferson City on November 1, proceeded to enact a registry law, which, on account of its stringency, occasioned much violence and disorder in its enforcement. The "Ousting Ordinance," for vacating certain civil offices, was also attended with unpleasant results.

That portion of the ninth section in regard to ministers, lawyers and teachers, excited so much trouble in the State that B. Gratz Brown, Carl Schurz, and other leading Republicans, set on foot December, 1866, a movement which had for its object universal amnesty and enfranchisement. The movement soon became popular throughout the State, and, in his message to the Twenty-Fourth General Assembly, January, 1867, Gov. Fletcher recommended an amendment to the constitution, striking out the ninth section of the second article. At this session of the Legislature a constitutional amendment was submitted to the people proposing to strike the word "white" from the eighteenth section of the second article, and thus inaugurate negro suffrage in Missouri. While this amendment was under consideration in the House, Mr. Orrick of St. Charles proposed to strike out not only the word "white" but also the word "male." This effort in behalf of female suffrage was rejected; and at the election of the people in November, 1868, negro suffrage was also defeated by a majority of 18,817 votes.

The adjourned session of the Twenty-fifth General Assembly, which met on January 5, 1870, accomplished important work in several directions.

Gov. Joseph W. McClurg recommended in his message the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment to the constitution of the United States, passed by Congress on February 27, 1869, and transmitted to the General Assembly at the same time a copy of the amendment, as follows:

Article XV.—SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Immediately upon the reading of the amendment, a joint resolution ratifying it was introduced into the Senate, and was speedily adopted by both Houses of the Legislature.

Divisions in the Republican Party.—The differences of opinion regarding universal amnesty and enfranchisement were rapidly assuming the proportions of discord and disintegration; and the Republican party in the State became divided in sentiment as well as in name, being known respectively as Radicals and Liberals; the former maintaining a severe, and the latter a more magnanimous policy towards those who had complicity with the Rebellion. The Democrats, owing to the stringent registry laws, were in a hopeless minority, and so attached themselves to the Liberal Republicans, believing that by this course they might best aid their disfranchised brethren, and eventually gain control of State politics. The State Nominating Convention, which met at Jefferson City on August 31, 1870, witnessed the final division of the Republicans. The platforms of the two branches of the party differed chiefly in regard to enfranchisement, and the articles embodying their respective sentiments were as follows:

MAJORITY OR LIBERAL PLATFORM.

Fourth. That the time has come when the requirements of public safety, upon which alone the disfranchisement of a large number of citizens could be justified, has clearly ceased to exist, and this convention, therefore, true to the solemn pledges recorded in our National and State platforms, declares itself unequivocally in favor of the adoption of the constitutional amendments, commonly called the suffrage and office-holding amendments, believing that under existing circumstances the removal of political disabilities, as well as the extension of equal political rights and privileges to all classes of citizens, without distinction, is demanded by every consideration of good faith, patriotism and sound policy, and essential to the integrity of republican institutions, to the welfare of the State, and to the honor and preservation of the Republican party.

MINORITY OR RADICAL PLATFORM.

Third. That we are in favor of re-enfranchising those justly disfranchised for participation in the late Rebellion, as soon as it can be done with safety to the State, and that we concur in the propriety of the Legislature having submitted to the whole people of the State the question whether such time has now arrived; upon which question we recognize the right of any member of the party to vote his honest convictions.

The two reports being before the convention, the report of the minority was adopted, whereupon about 250 delegates, friends of the majority report, led by Mr. Schurz, withdrew, organized a separate convention, and nominated a full State ticket, with B. Gratz Brown as a candidate for governor. The other convention also nominated a full ticket, headed by Joseph W. McClurg for governor, at that time incumbent of the office.

The election of November, 1870, resulted in the choice of the B. Gratz Brown ticket by a majority of over 40,000 Liberal and Democratic votes. This election marks the period at which the Republicans, who had been for eight years in the ascendency, surrendered the power which they have since been unable to regain.

Amendments to the State Constitution.—At an adjourned session of the Twenty-sixth General Assembly, which convened December 6, 1871, two constitutional amendments had been submitted to the votes of the people.

These were ratified at the November election in 1872. The first increased the number of supreme court judges from three to five, fixing their term of office at ten years, and providing that two additional judges should be elected at the general election in 1872, and one judge at each general election, every two years thereafter.

The second provided that no part of the public school fund should ever be invested in the stock or bonds or other obligations of any other State, or of any county, city, town or corporation; that the stock of the bank of the State of Missouri, held for school purposes, and all other stocks belonging to any school or university fund, should be sold in such manner and at such time as the General Assembly should prescribe; and the proceeds thereof, and the proceeds of the sales of any lands or other property which belonged or might hereafter belong to said school fund, should be invested in the bonds of the State of Missouri, or of the United States, and that all county school funds should be loaned upon good and sufficient and unincumbered real estate security, with personal security in addition thereto.

Revision of the State Constitution.—During an adjourned session of the Legislature, which met on January 7, 1874, a law had been passed authorizing a vote of the people to be taken at the general election in November, 1874, for and against calling a convention to revise and amend the constitution of the State. This convention was agreed to by a majority of only 283. An election for delegates took place on January 26, 1875. On May 5, of the same year, the convention assembled at the capital. It consisted of sixty-eight members, sixty of whom were Democrats, six Republicans, and two Liberals. A thorough revision of the entire organic law was made, both in committee and in convention. Every department of the State Government passed under review, and many important changes were made, which can not be discussed here, but they are familiar to every well-informed citizen of the State.

The bill of rights occasioned much discussion. County representation, which has been a feature of every State constitution, including the first, was still maintained in spite of opposition. Carefully prepared and stringent limitations on the powers of the General Assembly were engrafted on the new instrument. Sessions of the Legislature were made biennial, and the gubernatorial term changed from two or four years. The formation of new counties was made extremely difficult or impossible. The power of the Legislature, and of counties, cities, towns and all other municipalities, to levy taxes and contract debts, was hedged about with limitations and safeguards. Extra mileage and perquisites to officials were laid under embargo. The system of free public schools, embracing a liberal policy for the maintenance of the State University, received recognition in the article on education. The final vote on the adoption of the constitution as a whole stood—ayes, 60; noes, 0; absent, 8. October 30, 1875, the people ratified the constitution by a majority of 76,688, and on the 30th of November, 1875, it became the supreme law.

Gov. Crittenden's Administration.—In 1880, Thomas T. Crittenden, of Johnson County, received the Democratic nomination for governor of Missouri, and was elected in November of that year. Gov. Crittenden's competitors for the nomination were Gen. John S. Marmaduke, of St. Louis, and John A. Hockaday, of Callaway County. In his inaugural address, he recommended refunding at a lower rate of interest all that part of the State debt which could be thus refunded; some measures for the relief of the docket of the supreme court of the State, and a compromise of the indebtedness of several counties. He also condemned in the strongest terms the doctrine of repudiation.

Gov. Crittenden is by birth a Kentuckian—a direct descendant of the old Crittenden stock so long and deservedly prominent and popular in the State of Kentucky. Though himself a slave-holder, at the outbreak of the Civil War he espoused the cause of the Union, and no braver officer than he ever faced an enemy. At the close of the war he was found in the front rank of the conservative portion of the people, who contended that peace should prevail, and the bitter animosities of the past be forgotten.

He was sent to Congress, where, in more than one instance he proved his integrity. Throughout his entire career, no stain of venality adhered to his fair name, and no act of violence characterized his discharge of any duty.

Under his guiding hand the credit of the State advanced to a par with that of the Federal Government; the debt of the State gradually diminished, and all of her educational interests fostered and nourished.

When Gov. Crittenden took charge of the helm of State, a portion of the border was infested with a lawless band of thieves and murderers, known as the "James Gang," who murdered without pity, and robbed without regard to person. He resolved to disband them. Soon some of the most desperate of the gang were in the hands of the officers, and, in one instance, when resistance and rescue were threatened, Gov. Crittenden attended the trial in person, with a few chosen friends, determined to defend the supremacy of the law with his life if necessary.

One by one, the members of this gang were hunted down and sent to the penitentiary, and finally Jesse James was shot at St. Joseph by the "Ford Boys," former comrades, who had been employed to capture him.

The Election of 1884.—The campaign of 1884, both Nationally and in the State, was the most hotly contested of any this country has ever seen. In Missouri an alliance was effected between the Republican and Greenback parties, and a ticket headed by the name of Nicholas Ford, of St. Joseph, and called the "Anti-Bourbon ticket," was put into the field against the Democracy, headed by Gen. John S. Marmaduke, of St. Louis. A third party known as the Prohibitionists, exercised considerable influence in the canvass. The "Anti-Bourbon" party made their fight against the record of the Democrats, who had been in uninterrupted power for twelve years, and especially against the tendency of the Democracy to recognize and reward men who had been in rebellion during the Civil War. This plea, owing to the nomination of Marmaduke, who had been a Confederate general, was of considerable service to the opponents of Democracy, and came near securing the defeat of the party. The campaign on the part of the Democrats was mainly a defensive one; while John A. Brooks, the Prohibition candidate, urged that neither Ford nor Marmaduke should be elected, pledging himself in favor of submitting a constitutional amendment to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. Mr. Brooks made a strong fight, and polled nearly 10,000 votes. Marmaduke was elected by a majority of less than 2,000, although the Cleveland electors carried the State by about 30,000. All of the Democratic State ticket was elected by varying majorities, and also twelve out of fourteen congressmen were chosen by the same party.

Notwithstanding the opposition manifested toward him Gov. Marmaduke made an excellent career as an Executive, discharging his duties in an impartial, conservative manner. On Tuesday, December 27, 1887, news of the sudden and serious illness of the governor was spread over the country. This was soon followed, on the evening of December 28, by tidings of his death.

Lieut.-Gov. Morehouse subsequently qualified as governor of the State, and is the present incumbent of the position.

The Early Courts.—As the District of Louisiana was for many years under the dominion of Spain, it became necessary for the early lawyers to acquaint themselves with Spanish civil and criminal laws. This they uniformly did, and even after the district came into the possession of the United States the rules which obtained in the Spanish and French courts were still clung to. Until the district was purchased by the United States, the administration or execution of the laws was in the hands of the civil and military commandants, who in most instances were both ill-informed and arbitrary. In 1804 Congress extended the executive power of the Territory of Indiana over that of Louisiana, and the execution of the laws of what is now Missouri fell to William Henry Harrison, governor, and Griffin, Vanderburg and Davis, judges. The first courts were held in the winter of 1804-05, in the old fort near the junction of Fifth and Walnut Streets, St. Louis, and were called courts of common pleas. In March, 1805, the District of Louisiana was changed to the Territory of Louisiana, and James Wilkinson became governor; Frederick Bates, secretary; and James Wilkinson, Return J. Meigs and J. B. C. Lucas, judges of the superior court of the Territory. At this time the executive officers were in the old government building called La Place d'Armes, St. Louis. The districts of the Territory were changed to counties, Territorial courts superseded the commandants, and the rules of the English common law soon banished those of France and Spain. Courts of common pleas were established by the Territorial Legislature in 1813. Since the formation of the State Government the constitution and the Legislature have provided the number and character of the State courts.

EDUCATION.

The history of popular education in Missouri, previous to the Rebellion, is similar to that of every other State upon which the shadow of slavery rested. That institution and free popular education were incompatible. It is true that almost every slave State established some sort of common school system, but its provisions were always so defective, the funds for its support always so small and inadequate as to render it practically useless. Free schools were called "pauper schools," and were not attended by the children of the upper classes of whites. The idea of a system of free education for rich and poor alike—a common school—was unthought of as to bringing it into practical use.

Many laws were passed by the Missouri Legislature for the establishment and regulation of free schools, but all were almost totally defective in not providing sufficient funds to put them into effective operation, and in not rendering them of sufficient importance to secure attendance and countenance from the upper classes. In the act of Congress, authorizing the people of Missouri Territory to form a constitution and State Government, the sixteenth section of each township or its equivalent was devoted to the purpose of supporting schools in each township. The first act of the Legislature on the subject of education was approved January 17, 1825. This law enacted that each congressional township should form a school district to be under the control of the county court in all matters pertaining to schools. It also declared that all rents of school lands and fines, penalties and forfeitures, occurring under the provisions of this act, should be set apart for a school fund. On January 26, 1833, the Legislature authorized the governor to appoint three suitable persons whose duty it should be to prepare a system of common primary school instruction, as nearly uniform as possible throughout the State, and to make a report to the next meeting of the Legislature. This committee made a report, but its suggestions were not acted upon by the Legislature. This body, however, at its next session, passed "an act to regulate the sale of the sixteenth sections, and to provide for the organization and regulation of common schools." The Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor, Treasurer and Attorney-General were constituted a board of commissioners for literary purposes. Its provisions required a school to be taught in each incorporated district, for six months during the year. It was similar in its details to the law of 1825, but so imperfect and impracticable as to render its repeal necessary.

February 6, 1836, the first movement was made for the endowment of a common school fund. An act was passed directing the governor to invest the principal and interest of the saline fund, and all additions thereafter made to it, and all the money received by the State from the United States, by virtue of the provisions of the act of Congress passed June 23, 1836, in some safe and productive stock, to continue, remain, and be known as "The Common School Fund," and when said fund should amount to $500,000 or more, the interests and profits accruing thereon should be applied to pay teachers in the common schools in such manner as the General Assembly should direct. No system of school laws was enacted until the next session, February 9, 1839, about two years later. Its provisions were substantially as follows: The school fund was to consist of all the moneys heretofore deposited under the act of Congress of January 23, 1836, the proceeds of the saline funds, the proceeds of all lands then or thereafter vested in the State by escheat, by purchase or by forfeiture for taxes; and the interest and proceeds of such moneys until a distribution should be ordered. The office of State superintendent of common schools was created and its duties defined. The superintendent was given a general oversight of the schools of the State, and was required to make a distribution of school moneys among the several counties in which there were any schools, in proportion to the number of white children between the ages of six and eighteen years.

This law received several amendments, and on February 24 a new system was adopted, of which the following is a synopsis: At its head was the State superintendent, elected biennially by the people. Each county had a commissioner of common schools, whose duty it was to grant certificates of qualifications to teachers, apportion school moneys and visit schools. Each congressional township was constituted a school township which could be divided into as many school districts, not exceeding four, as the inhabitants might desire. Each district was placed under the control of three trustees who employed teachers, levied taxes, voted bills, etc. Twenty-five per cent of the State revenue, and the dividends arising from the funds invested in the Bank of the State of Missouri, were apportioned to the counties in proportion to the number of children between the ages of five and twenty years. This, with the county funds coming from the interest on the moneys arising from the sale of the sixteenth sections, from fines and penalties, etc., and the income from the proceeds of the sale of swamp and overflowed lands, constituted the fund annually appropriated for the payment of teachers.

In 1858 the capital of the State school fund amounted to about $681,000, of which $20,000 was invested in Missouri State bonds and the remainder in stock of the Bank of Missouri. The first distribution of school money was made in 1842, when only thirteen counties received any portion of it, they being the only ones in which schools had been organized. They were Benton, Boone, Clark, Cole, Cooper, Greene, La Fayette, Livingston, Marion, Monroe, Ralls, Saline and Shelby. The amount apportioned at that time was only $1,999.60. In 1845 it had increased to $16,481.80; in 1850 to $27,751.52; in 1855, under the new law, which was much better than the preceding ones, it was $178,082.79.

The constitution of no State of the Union contains more liberal and enlightened provisions relative to popular education than that of Missouri, adopted in 1875. During the past sixty years not a line can be found upon her statute books inimical to the cause; and in nearly every gubernatorial message from 1824 to the present time have been earnest and effective arguments in favor of a broad and liberal system of public instruction. The people of the State have taxed themselves freely for the support of the system; and the amount of her available and productive permanent school fund at this time surpasses that of nearly every other State in the Union. In 1886 it was as follows:

Certificates of indebtedness at 6 per cent.....	$2,909,000 00
Certificates of indebtedness at 5 per cent.....	225,000 00
In treasury to credit of State School Fund.....	414 80
Total amount to credit of State School Fund....	3,134,414 80
University or Seminary Fund..	519,095 08
County Public School Fund.....	3,300,668 39
Township Public School Fund.....	3,441,048 16
Special School Fund.....	71,455 44
Fines, penalties, forfeitures, etc.....	121,279 94
Total.....	$10,587,961 81

Before the establishment of the free-school system, education throughout the State was obtained wholly from private institutions of learning. The University of Missouri was founded about the time the State was admitted to the Federal Union, when two townships of land were granted for the support of a seminary of learning. In 1832 this land was sold for less than $75,000, but by 1839 this amount had grown to over $100,000. In the latter year the site was selected for the university at Columbia, which offered a bonus of $117,500 to secure the location—a remarkable offering for that day. The corner-stone was laid in 1840, and John H. Lathrop, D. D., became the first president. To this institution the following departments have since been added: Normal department, 1868; agricultural and mechanical college, 1870; schools of mines and metallurgy, 1871, at Rolla; college of law, 1872; medical college, 1873; department of analytical and applied chemistry, 1873; architecture, engineering, mechanical and fine arts, etc. The State may well be proud of this institution.

St. Louis University was established in 1829, and has become one of the best educational institutions of the country. Since the war the State has founded an educational institution for colored people—Lincoln Institute, at Jefferson City—which is supported by an annual appropriation. Several normal colleges have also been established by the Legislature, which contribute materially toward the elevation of the standard of education in the State. In nearly every county is a seminary, academy, college or university, supported by tuition or endowments, and controlled by some sectarian organization, or by a non-sectarian association.

In 1817 the Legislature incorporated the board of trustees of the St. Louis public schools, and this was the commencement of the present system. The first board was Gen. William Clarke, William C. Carr, Thomas H. Benton, Bernard Pratt, Auguste Chouteau, Alexander McNair and John P. Cabanne. Much should have been, and was, expected of this board, owing to their prominence and ability; but they did little or nothing, and it was not until twenty years later that the system sprang into life.

RELIGION.

Churches—Baptist.—The First Baptist Church organized in what is now the State of Missouri was founded near the present site of Jackson, Cape Girardeau County, in 1806, under the labors of Rev. D. Green. The growth of the denomination has been marked. It has gone steadily on in its increase, until now it marshals a great host, and it is still rapidly enlarging in numbers, and advancing in intelligence and general thrift. The annual report of the Baptist General Association of Missouri, for 1875, gives the following statistics: 61 district associations; 1,400 churches; 824 ordained ministers; 89,650 members. The Bible and Publication Society, with headquarters at Philadelphia, has a branch house at St. Louis, which has become one of the chief book establishments of the State. The Baptist periodicals of the State are the Central Baptist and Ford's Repository, both published in St. Louis. The Baptist seats of learning in Missouri are William Jewell College, Liberty; Stephens' College, Columbia; Mount Pleasant College, Huntsville; Baptist Female College, Lexington; La Grange College, La Grange; Baptist College, Louisiana; Liberty Female College, Liberty; St. Louis Seminary for Young Ladies, Jennings's Station; Fairview Female Seminary, Jackson; Boonville Seminary for Young Ladies; North Grand River College, Edinburgh; Ingleside Academy, Palmyra.

Christian.—This is one of the largest denominations in Missouri; it has more than 500 churches, and nearly 100,000 members. The literary institutions of the denomination are Christian College, Columbia; Christian University, Canton; Woodland College, Independence; Christian Orphan Asylum, Camden Point. The publications of this denomination in Missouri are The Christian, The Little Watchman, The Little Sower, and The Morning Watch, all published at St. Louis.

Congregational.—The first Trinitarian Congregational Church was organized in St. Louis, in 1852, Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., pastor. The church in Hannibal was organized in 1859. In 1864-65 fifteen churches were organized in towns on the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad. In 1875 the denomination had 5 district associations, 70 churches, 41 ministers and 3,363 members. There are two Congregational colleges in the State—Thayer College, at Kidder, and Drury College, at Springfield.

Episcopal.—The first service of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Missouri was held October 24, 1819, and Christ Church, St. Louis, was organized as a parish November 1, of the same year. The Rev. John Ward, previously of Lexington, Ky., was the first rector. Six persons united in the first service. In 1875 there were in the city of St. Louis 12 parishes and missions, and as many clergymen; while, taking all parts of the State, there were about 5,000 communicants, 51 ministers, 48 church buildings, 57 Sunday-schools with 4,000 scholars, and 475 teachers. The denomination controlled 4 secular schools. The Diocese of Missouri is conterminous with the State of Missouri.

Friends.—The following are the approximate statistics of this denomination in Missouri: Number of organizations and edifices, 4; sittings, 1,100; value of property, $4,800.

Israelite.—There is scarcely a county in the State of Missouri where at least one dozen Jewish families are not settled. Jefferson City, Sedalia, Springfield, Rolla, Washington, Macon City, Louisiana, Hannibal, and several other places, have wealthy, influential Jewish citizens, but too few in number to form independent religious communities. In St. Louis, St. Joseph and Kansas City they have established congregations, Sabbath-schools, houses of worship and institutions of charity. The oldest Hebrew congregation in Missouri was organized in 1838, at St. Louis. The following summary gives an approximate statement of the Israelite congregations in Missouri: Congregations, 8; members, 557; ministers, 8; houses of worship, 7; Sabbath-schools, 7; with 12 teachers and 574 scholars.

Lutheran.—The first Lutheran Church organized in Missouri was founded in St. Louis in 1839. The number of churches is now about 92. The Lutheran educational institutions of the State are Concordia College and a high school, both at St. Louis. The charitable institutions are the Lutheran Hospital and Asylum at St. Louis, and the Lutheran Orphans' Home in St. Louis County. At St. Louis are also located the Lutheran Central Bible Society, and the Lutheran Book Concern of the German Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio and other States. The following Lutheran periodicals are published in St. Louis: Der Lutheraner, Die Abendschule, Lehreund Wehre, and the Evangel Lutheran Schublatt German Evangelical. There are, in Missouri, perhaps 45 churches of this denomination, comprising 7,500 members. The Friedensbote is the name of a newspaper published under its patronage. Evangelical Missouri College is the theological seat of learning in this synod, and is located in Warren County.

Methodist Episcopal.—The Methodist Episcopal Church in Missouri dates from an early period in the history of the State. Indeed, several societies were formed before it became a State, and these were a part of the old Illinois Conference. When the separation of 1844-45 took place, and the Methodist Episcopal Church South was formed, the societies in Missouri were broken up with few exceptions, and the members either joined that organization or remained unable to effect a reorganization of their own until 1848, when the Missouri Conference resumed its sessions. During the Civil War the preachers and members were driven from nearly all the stations and districts. There were probably less than 3,000 persons in actual fellowship in 1861 and 1862. In May, 1862, the general conference added Arkansas to the Missouri Conference, and it bore the name of "The Missouri and Arkansas Conference," until 1868, when it was divided, the societies north of the Missouri River retaining the old name, Missouri Conference; and the societies south of the river, and those in Arkansas, being formed into the "St. Louis Conference." In 1872 the societies in Missouri, south of the river, became the St. Louis Conference, those in Arkansas, the Arkansas Conference. The two conferences of Missouri now comprise about 375 churches and 30,000 members. They have several flourishing schools and colleges, the principal of which are Lewis College, Glasgow; Johnson College, Macon City, and Carleton Institute, in Southeast Missouri. The Western Book Depository is doing a large business in St. Louis, and its agents also publish the Central Christian Advocate.

Methodist Episcopal Church South.—The first preaching by a Protestant minister in this State was by a Methodist local preacher, John Clark by name, who resided where Alton now stands, and who occasionally crossed the river to a settlement of Americans near Florissant. The first regularly appointed Methodist preacher was Rev. John Travis, who received an appointment from Bishop Asbury in 1806. He formed two circuits, and at the end of the year returned 100 members. These circuits were called "Missouri" and "Meramec," and at the conference of 1807, Jesse Walker was sent to supply the former, and Edmund Wilcox the latter.

From this time preachers were regularly appointed, and in 1820 there were, in Missouri, 21 traveling preachers and 2,079 members. In 1821 Methodism proper was introduced into St. Louis by Rev. Jesse Walker, who secured the erection of a small house of worship on the corner of what is now Fourth and Myrtle Streets, and returned 127 members.

Boone—Organized November 16, 1820. Named for Daniel Boone. The first county seat, Smithton, was named for Gen. T. A. Smith; the present, Columbia, a mile east of the former site of Smithton, was presumably called for "the queen of the world and the child of the skies."

Lewis and Clark were of the opinion that the original name of the Chariton was "Theriaton," but others asserted that the word is old French, and signifies a chariot or little wagon, a corruption of charrette, probably. The first county seat was Chariton, sometimes called Old Chariton, long extinct. The present capital, Keytesville, was laid out in 1832, and named by its founder, James Keyte, for himself.

Sullivan—Fully organized February 16, 1843, and named by Hon. E. C. Morelock for his native county in Tennessee. In the preliminary organization in 1843, the county was named Highland. The first courts were held at the house of A. C. Hill, on the present site of Milan, which became the county seat in 1845.

Taney—Organized January 6, 1837, and named for Chief Justice Roger B. Taney. Forsyth, the county seat, located in 1838, was named for Hon. John Forsyth, of Georgia, who was Secretary of State of the United States from 1834 to 1841.

Texas—Organized February 14, 1845, and named for the Lone Star State. Houston, the county seat, was named for Gen. Sam Houston, the "hero of San Jacinto."

Vernon—Organized as at present February 27, 1855. Named for Hon. Miles Vernon, a member of the State Senate from Laclede County, who fought under Gen. Jackson at New Orleans, and who presided over the Senate branch of the "Claib Jackson Legislature," which passed the "Ordinance of Secession, at Nesho, October 28, 1861. Nevada, the county seat, was originally called Nevada City, and named by Col. D. C. Hunter for a town in California.

Warren—Organized January 5, 1833, and named for Gen. Joseph Warren, who fell at Bunker Hill. Warrenton became the county seat in 1835.

Washington—Organized August 21, 1813, and named for the "Father of His Country." It is claimed that Potosi, the county seat, was first settled in 1765.

Wayne—Organized December 11, 1818, when it comprised the greater part of the southern one-third of the State. It was formerly called by the sobriquet of "the State of Wayne," and latterly "the Mother of Counties." It was named in honor of Gen. Anthony Wayne, of the Revolution, the famous "Mad Anthony" of history and legend. Greenville, the county seat, was laid out in 1818, and named for the scene of Gen. Wayne's treaty.

Webster—Organized March 3, 1855, and named for Daniel Webster. The county seat, Marshfield, was named for Webster's country seat.

Worth—Organized February 8, 1861, and named in honor of Gen. William Worth, one of the prominent American commanders in the Mexican War. Grant City was laid off in 1864, and named for Gen. Grant.

Wright—Organized January 29, 1841, and named in honor of Hon. Silas Wright, of New York, a leading Democratic statesman of that period. Hartville was named for the owner of the site.

There have been attempts at the creation of other counties from time to time. Dodge County, named for Gen. Henry Dodge, was organized in 1851, with a county seat at St. John, but in 1853 it was disorganized and its territory included within the limits of Putnam, of which county it had formed the western part. The organization of Donaldson, Merrimac, and perhaps two or three other counties, was never perfected.

POPULATION.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

The Great Fire at St. Louis.—In May, 1849, occurred the great fire at St. Louis; a brief account of it from Switzler's History of Missouri is here copied:

On the evening of the 19th of that month a fire broke out on the steamer "White Cloud," lying at the wharf between Vine and Cherry Streets, and set at defiance every effort to arrest its progress. The flames very soon communicated to four other boats lying contiguous. By the action of the fire, the "White Cloud" became loosened from her fastenings, and drifted out into the stream and among the other steamers in port. In a short time the spectacle of twenty-three boats on fire presented itself. The immense conflagration was a mile in length. The levee being covered with combustible materials, bales, barrels, boxes, etc., the fire reached the city and whole blocks were swept away. The area of the burnt district will be understood by the statement that Front Street, from Locust to Market, was entirely destroyed, with the exception of two or three houses on Commercial Street. Between Commercial and the levee, there was not one left. In this immense conflagration there were twenty-three steamboats, three barges and one canal boat destroyed, whose total values with their cargoes were estimated at $439,000. The whole value of property destroyed amounted to over $3,000,000.

The Murders at Gun City.—During the administration of Gov. Brown, a bloody infraction of the public peace occurred at Gun City, a small station on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, in Cass County.

Judge J. C. Stevenson was one of the judges of the late county court of Cass County, that had made a fraudulent issue of bonds in the name of the county, thereby imposing heavy burdens upon the taxpayers. James C. Cline was county attorney, and was implicated in the swindle, and Thomas E. Detrow was one of Cline's bondsmen. Both Stevenson and Cline had been indicted, and were under heavy bonds to answer for the offense with which they were charged. All of these men, together with Gen. Jo. Shelby, were on the eastern-bound train which reached Gun City on Wednesday, April 24, 1872. At this place logs, rails and rocks were found piled upon the track, and seventy or eighty masked and armed men compelled the engineer and fireman to leave the locomotive, and then commenced a terrible fusilade into and around the captured train. Loud cries were made for Cline, who stepped out on the platform and was instantly riddled with bullets. The murderers then rushed through the train calling for the "bond robbers." They shot Judge Stevenson down in the car, and afterward dragged him out on the grass. Mr. Detro they found in the mail car, and, after severely wounding him, threw him on the roadside, where he was allowed to bleed to death. The gang then called for Gen. Jo. Shelby, but his intrepidity saved him, as he coolly kept his seat, replying, "Here I am; if you want me come and get me."

Gov. Brown at once took measures to bring the murderers to justice, but they were never discovered. No further disturbance occurred, however.

Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad Controversy.—By continued legislation, commencing with the act approved February 22, 1851, and ending with that of March 26, 1881, the State of Missouri granted liberal aid in the construction of railroads within her boundaries. The Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad was among the enterprises thus assisted, and, for its construction, bonds of the State amounting to $3,000,000, bearing interest at 6 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, were issued. One-half of these bonds were issued under the act of 1851, and the remainder under the act of 1855. The former were to run twenty years, and the latter thirty years. Some of these bonds have since been funded and renewed. Coupons for the interest of the entire $3,000,000 were executed and made payable in New York. The acts under which the bonds were issued contain various provisions designed to secure the State against loss and to make it certain that the railroad company would be bound to pay the principal and interest at maturity. It was especially made the duty of the railroad company to save the State from any and all loss on account of said bonds and coupons. The State treasurer was not to advance any money to meet either principal or interest. The State contracted with the railroad company for complete indemnity. Neither was she required to relinquish her statutory mortgage lien, except upon the payment into her treasury of a sum of money equal to the entire indebtedness incurred by the railroad company on account of the issue and loan of her bonds.

In June, 1881, the railroad company, through its attorney, George W. Easley, Esq., paid into the State treasury $3,000,000, and asked for a receipt in full of all dues to the State. The treasurer, Mr. Philip E. Chappell, refused to give such a receipt, but instead gave a receipt for the sum "on account." Although the debt was not due, the officers of the railroad wished to pay it at this time in order to save the interest. They first asked for the bonds of the road, but these the State refused to give up. They then demanded that the $3,000,000 be paid back, and this demand was also refused. The railroad company then brought suit in the United States Court for an equitable settlement of the matter in dispute. The $3,000,000 had been deposited in a bank by the State authorities, and was drawing interest at the rate of only one-fourth of one per cent. The railroad company asked that this money should be invested so as to yield a larger amount of interest, which interest should be allowed to its credit, in case anything should be found due from it to the State. Justice Miller, of the United States supreme court, who heard the case upon preliminary injunction in the spring of 1882, decided that the unpaid and unmatured coupons constituted a liability of the State, and a debt owing, though not due, and that until these were provided for, the State was not bound to assign her lien upon the road.

Another question which was raised, but not decided, was whether any, or if so what, account the State ought to render for the use of the money paid into the treasury by the complainants, June 20; and whether she could hold so large a sum of money, refusing to make any account of it, and yet insisting that the railroad company should make full payment of all the outstanding coupons.

Upon this subject Justice Miller, in the course of his opinion said; "I am of the opinion that the State, having accepted or got this money into her possession, is under a moral obligation (and I do not pretend to commit anybody as to how far its legal obligation goes) to so use that money as, so far as possible, to protect the parties who have paid it against the loss of the interest which it might accumulate, and which would go to extinguish the interest on the State's obligation."

February 25, 1881, Gov. Crittenden sent a special message to the Legislature in which he informed that body of the intention of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad Comany to discharge the full amount of what it considered its present indebtedness to the State, and advised that arrangements be made for the profitable disposal of the sum as soon as paid. In response to this message the Legislature passed an act March 26, the second section of which is as follows:

SEC. 2. Whenever there is sufficient money in the sinking fund to redeem or purchase one or more of the bonds of the State of Missouri, such sum is hereby appropriated for such purpose, and the Fund Commissioners shall immediately call in for payment a like amount of the option bonds of the State, known as the "5-20 bonds," provided, that if there are no option bonds which can be called in for payment they may invest such money in the purchase of any of the bonds of the State, or bonds of the United States, the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad bonds excepted.

On the 1st of January, 1882, the regular semi-annual payment of interest on the railroad bonds became due, but the company refused to pay, claiming that it had already discharged the principal, and consequently was not liable for the interest. Thereupon, according to the provisions of the aiding act of 1885, Gov. Crittenden advertised the road for sale in default of the payment of interest. The company then brought suit before United States Circuit Judge McCrary at Keokuk, Iowa, to enjoin the State from selling the road, and for such other and further relief as the Court might see fit and proper to grant. August 2, 1882, Judge McCrary delivered his opinion and judgment as follows:

"First. That the payment by complainants into the treasury of the State of the sum of $3,000,000 on the 26th of June, 1881, did not satisfy the claim of the State in full, nor entitle complainants to an assignment of the State's statutory mortgage.

"Second. That the State was bound to invest the principal sum of $3,000,000 so paid by the complainants without unnecessary delay in the securities named in the act of March 26, 1881, or some of them, so as to save the State as large a sum as possible, which sum so saved would have constituted as between the State and complainants a credit pro tanto upon the unmatured coupons now in controversy.

"Third. That the rights and equity of the parties are to be determined upon the foregoing principles, and the State must stand charged with what would have been realized if the act of March, 1881, had been complied with. It only remains to consider what the rights of the parties are upon the principles here stated.

"In order to save the State from loss on account of the default of the railroad company, a further sum must be paid. In order to determine what that further sum is, an accounting must be had. The question to be settled by the accounting is, how much would the State have lost if the provisions of the act of March, 1881, had been complied with? * * * *

I think a perfectly fair basis of settlement would be to hold the State liable for whatever could have been saved by the prompt execution of said act by taking up such 5-20 option bonds of the State as were subject to call when the money was paid to the State, and investing the remainder of the funds in the bonds of the United States at the market rates.

"Upon this basis a calculation can be made, and the exact sum still to be paid by the complainants in order to fully indemnify and protect the State can be ascertained. For the purpose of stating an account upon this basis, and of determining the sum to be paid by the complainants to the State, the cause will be referred to John K. Cravens, one of the masters of this court. In determining the time when the investment should have been made under the act of March, 1881, the master will allow a reasonable period for the time of the receipt of the said sum of $3,000,000 by the treasurer of the State—that is to say, such time as would have been required for that purpose had the officers charged with the duty of making said investment used reasonable diligence in its discharge.

"The Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad is advertised for sale for the amount of the installment of interest due January 1, 1882, which installment amounts to less than the sum which the company must pay in order to discharge its liabilities to the State upon the theory of this opinion. The order will therefore be that an injunction be granted to enjoin the sale of the road upon the payment of the said installment of interest due January 1, 1882, and if such payment is made, the master will take it into account in making the computation above mentioned."

Manufacturing.—Missouri presents every facility for extensive and successful manufacturing; abundant timber of the best quality, exhaustless deposits of coal, iron, lead, zinc, marble and granite, unmeasured water power, distributed over the State, a home market among an industrious and wealth-accumulating people, and a system of navigable rivers and railway trunk line and branches, that permeate, not only the State, but reach out in direct lines from gulf to lake, and from ocean to ocean.

Of the manufacturing in Missouri over three-quarters of the whole is done in St. Louis, which produced, in 1880, $114,333,375 worth of manufactured articles, thus placing her as the sixth manufacturing city in the Union, being surpassed only by New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Brooklyn and Boston.

The leading manufacturing counties of the State are St. Louis, Jackson, Buchanan, St. Charles, Marion, Franklin, Greene, Cape Girardeau, Platte, Boone, Lafayette, followed by Macon, Clay, Phelps, St. Francois, Washington and Lewis.

The subjoined table, arranged from the tenth United States census, will give the reader a comprehensive view of the present state of manufacturing in Missouri, and its variation during recent years:

Year.	No. Establishments.	Capital.	Average number of Hands Employed.			Total Amount Paid in Wages During the Year.	Value of Materials.	Value of Products.
			Males Above 16 years.	Females Above 16 years.	Children and Youths.

These, together with all other mechanical industries, aggregate $165,386,205.

Railroads.—Since 1852, when railroad building began in Missouri, between 4,000 and 5,000 miles of track have been laid. Additional roads are now in process of construction, and many others in contemplation. The State is well supplied with railroads which tread her surface in all directions, bringing her remotest districts into close connection with St. Louis, that great center of Western commerce. These roads have a capital stock aggregating more than $100,000,000, and a funded debt of about the same amount.

The lines of roads which are in operation in the State are as follows:

The Missouri Pacific, chartered May 10, 1850; the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad, which is a consolidation of the Arkansas branch; the Cairo, Arkansas & Texas Railroad; the Cairo & Fulton Railroad; the Wabash Western Railway; the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway; the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis Railroad; the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad; the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad; the Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs Railroad; the Keokuk & Kansas City Railway Company; the St. Louis, Salem & Little Rock Railroad Company; the Missouri & Western; the St. Louis, Keokuk & Northwestern Railroad; the St. Louis, Hannibal & Keokuk Railroad; the Missouri, Iowa & Nebraska Railway; the Quincy, Missouri & Pacific Railroad; the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway; the Burlington & Southwestern Railroad.

Steam Craft.—In 1880 there were 167 steam crafts owned in Missouri, including sixty passenger steamers, thirty-seven ferry-boats, thirteen freight steamers, forty-six tow boats and eleven yachts. Their combined tonnage was 60,873.50; their total value, $2,098,800; their crews numbered 2,733 persons, whose wages amounted to $1,423,375, or an average of $281.13 to each person during the season; the number of passengers carried was 642,303; the freight in tons 2,556,815; coal used for fuel, 399,659 tons; wood used for fuel, 25,085 cords; gross earnings of all the steam crafts, $5,560,949.

Wealth.—The total valuation of Missouri's real estate and personal property, according to the census of 1880, was $532,795,801; of which her real estate was valued at $381,985,112, and her personal property at $150,810,689. At that time the bonded debt of the State was $55,446,001; the floating debt, $2,722,941; the gross debt, $58,168,942; the sinking fund, $681,558, and the net debt, $57,487,384.

HISTORY OF SOUTHEAST MISSOURI.

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION, GEOLOGY, ETC.

SOUTHEAST Missouri is a somewhat indefinite term. In its most extended sense, it embraces all the territory south of the Missouri River and east of the Ozark Mountains. To the inhabitants of the alluvial bottoms, it includes only some six counties in that region. As treated in detail in the following pages, it embraces the counties of Ste. Genevieve, St. Francois, Madison, Iron, Perry, Cape Girardeau, Bollinger, Wayne, Butler, Stoddard, Scott, Mississippi, Pemiscot, New Madrid and Dunklin. This region is divided into two natural divisions, differing materially in their chief characteristics. The country south of what is known as the "Big Swamp," and east of the St. Francois River, forms an alluvial plain, sometimes denominated "the swamp country." This term, however, is a misnomer; although the surface in some places is flat, and subject to overflow from the Mississippi, it is in no sense an irreclaimable swamp. There are numerous bayous, and the upheavals of the earthquake of 1811-12 so obstructed the channels of the rivers that large areas are submerged during the greater part of the year; but the removal of the obstructions, and the cutting of the timber, readily restore the land.

Natural Features.—Originally this region was covered with a heavy growth of timber, broken here and there by small prairies. In Mississippi County there are Mathews' Prairie, Long Prairie and East Prairie; in New Madrid County, and extending into Scott County, is Big Prairie; in Dunklin County, West Prairie and Grand Prairie, and in Pemiscot County, Little Prairie.

Much timbered land still remains in these counties, and is constantly increasing in value. The predominant growth is oak, cottonwood, poplar, maple, locust, gum, paw-paw, and along the water courses, cypress.

The soil of this district is of four varieties. The most productive is a black sand, which is especially adapted to cotton, corn and garden vegetables. For small grain and fruit, it is too strong. A second variety is also sandy, but of a lighter character. This is the soil of the prairies. It is very fertile, but is sooner exhausted than the black land. It is peculiarly adapted to the production of grain, and of potatoes, water-melons, and vegetables, whose value depends upon early ripening. Another variety of soil is usually found near the foot hills, and is a rich, yellowish, sandy loam. It is heavier than the varieties above mentioned, and is not easily exhausted. It produces large crops of corn, and is well adapted to grass. The fourth variety of soil is a stiff, white clay. It is found only in narrow strips, and covers an inconsiderable area.

Of the counties of this district, Stoddard is the largest, being thirty-five miles long, and averaging over thirty miles in breadth. It occupies a position between Little River and St. Francois. The surface is very diversified, and includes but little of the so-called swamp land. The central portion of the county, from the northern to the southern boundary, is elevated, and the surface undulating, occasionally running into creek bottoms and rocky points. Along the rivers, on either side of the central ridge, are broad bottoms, which in the extreme southern part, are subject to overflow from the back waters of the Mississippi. The mineral resources of this county have never been developed, and it is probable that they are not of very great value. No outcrop of rock occurs, except in the northern part of the county, where iron ore, limestone and a soft free-stone appear on the surface. Lead in small quantities, and traces of silver and copper, have been found. Lignite exists in several localities, and recently, it is thought, a good quality of bituminous coal has been discovered.

Scott County lies between Little River and the Mississippi, and south of the "Big Swamp." It embraces an area of a little more than 262,000 acres. The surface is generally level, except in the northern part, where there is a chain of hills. The greater portion of the land is exceedingly fertile, but there are large tracts of light, sandy soil, covered with growth of scrubby oaks. Along the Mississippi is the famous Tywappity Bottom, of unsurpassed fertility, and in the south part is a portion of Big Prairie, which is denominated the "Garden Spot" of Missouri. Diehlstadt, in the southeastern part of the county, is in the center of the melon-producing region. No mineral, except yellow ochre, has been found in any considerable quantities.

Mississippi County, lying to the south and east of Scott County, has an area of about four hundred square miles. The surface is uniformly level. The soil is sandy loam, much of it of the black variety. Corn and wheat are the chief productions, but increasing attention is given to the growing of early vegetables. The county possesses no minerals, not even a rock of any kind, and its wealth lies solely in its agricultural resources and its timber.

New Madrid County is the parent county of this region. It contains an area nearly double that of Mississippi County, and has a river frontage of about fifty miles. The surface is very level, and large areas are overflowed. The soil is similar to that of Mississippi County. The principal productions are corn and cotton. The latter crop was raised extensively from 1800 to 1820. It was then abandoned until after the close of the civil war, since which it has again become a staple production. Large quantities of furs have annually been shipped from this county for a century, but the amount has decreased somewhat with the settling of the country.

Pemiscot County resembles New Madrid in its characteristics. It contains an area of about 327,000 acres, much of which is unimproved. The surface is level, and is dotted with lakes, the largest of which is Pemiscot Lake, in the south part of the county, covering an area of 1,800 acres. Among the others are Cushion Lake, Cooper's Lake, Big Lake, Tanner's Lake, Eastwood's Lake, and Cagle Lake.

Dunklin County occupies a narrow strip of country, lying between the counties of New Madrid and Pemiscot and the St. Francois River. It is nearly fifty miles in length, and embraces an area of about 450 square miles. Its surface is level, and its soil of the two varieties first mentioned. It is the greatest cotton growing county in the State, producing annually from 8,000 to 10,000 bales—as much as all the other counties combined.

The remaining counties of Southeast Missouri occupy a region of greater elevation than that described, and the surface is more diversified, ranging from gently undulating plains to precipitous hills and mountains. The greater portion of the land is tillable, but it varies widely in its fertility and the character of its soil. The red and yellow clay loam predominates, especially in those counties contiguous to the Mississippi. It contains a fair mixture of sand loam and clay, and iron in varying proportions, giving the different shades of color. The subsoil is a heavier clay, which, when mixed with the upper stratum, usually increases its fertility. This soil is well adapted to grasses and the cereals, especially wheat. The river bottoms are everywhere fertile, but the uplands in many localities are poor and unproductive.

Resources.—While this region is rich agriculturally, it is also rich in its mineral resources. Lead, iron, granite, marble, copper and kaolin are found in abundance, nearly every county containing all of them in varying quantities.

Of all the counties in this portion of the State, Cape Girardeau, from an agricultural standpoint, ranks first. No other county contains so large a proportion of fertile land, and nowhere is the land more carefully cultivated. The surface is generally rolling, but along the southern border is the Big Swamp, and in the northeastern portion there are some precipitous hills. The principal crops are wheat, corn and other grains. It is the first county in Southeast Missouri in the quantity of wheat produced, and in quality it is equal to any in the world. Flour manufactured at Cape Girardeau, from wheat grown here, received the highest award at the World's Fair at Vienna, in 1873, and at the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, in 1876.

The mineral resources of the county have been developed to a very limited extent. Kaolin is taken out in small quantities, and some lime is made, but neither enterprise is conducted on a large scale. Marble of excellent quality, and of great variety of color, is found, but it has not been utilized. There is also iron ore in the northwest part of the county.

There is an abundance of water and water-power. On the north is Apple Creek, a beautiful and swift-flowing stream, which empties into the Mississippi. Whitewater River flows through the western part of the county. Its largest tributaries are Byrd's Creek and Little Whitewater River. Hubble Creek rises in the central part of the county, and flowing south, receives Randol Creek as a tributary. Cape La Croix Creek, south of Cape Girardeau, empties its waters into the Mississippi, as does, also, Indian Creek, south of Neely's Landing.

Perry County presents the same general characteristics as Cape Girardeau. The western portion is very broken, much of it unfit for cultivation. The most fertile lands are found along the Mississippi, in what is known as Bois Brulé Bottom, which is about eighteen miles long and from four to six miles wide. The level tract of country in the vicinity of Perryville, originally known as the "Barrens," is also very productive.

The hills in the western half of the county contain iron and lead. Preparations have recently been made for mining the latter, but an iron mine, opened several years ago, is not now worked.

The principal streams in the county are Cinque Homme and Brazeau Creeks, which flow into the Mississippi; Bois Brulé Creek, a tributary of Cinque Homme; Indian Creek, a tributary of Apple Creek, and the South Fork of Saline.

Ste. Genevieve County lies on the Mississippi River, above Perry County, and includes an area of about 500 square miles. The surface is generally rolling or hilly. The land along the streams is fertile, but much of the hill country has a very poor soil. Wheat and corn are the principal crops. In 1879 there were produced 429,529 bushels of corn, 337,892 bushels of wheat and 52,432 bushels of oats.

The mineral resources are valuable. Lead, copper, iron, granite, marble, kaolin, salt, limestone and sandstone are in greater or less abundance. The salt works on Saline Creek were of great importance and value in the early history of the country, but they were abandoned when steamboat navigation made it possible to import salt from other States cheaply. Lime in large quantities is burned and shipped from Ste. Genevieve. Four miles south of Ste. Genevieve is a ledge of sandstone, which has no superior in the United States as a building stone. When first quarried it is soft and easily worked, but when exposed to the air it becomes as hard as flint. A quarry was opened here several years ago, and a large amount of rock taken out. The State capitol at Des Moines was built from it, as were several other buildings, public and private, but the uncertainty of river transportation rendered the quarry unprofitable, and it was abandoned. Elaborate machinery for dressing the stone was put in, and a considerable quantity of grindstones was made.

There is a deposit of fine marble of the variegated variety on the River Aux Vases, and a quarry is now worked there. The product is used chiefly for interior decoration.

On the River Establishment, above Ste. Genevieve, there is an immense bluff of pure white sand, unmixed with any foreign matter. It will, no doubt, at some time be utilized in the manufacture of glass.

In the south part of the county on the Mineral Fork of Saline Creek, there is a deposit of disseminated lead ore. It lies in thin sheets and near the surface. Early in the "seventies" a company was organized, and spent a large sum of money in erecting furnaces and a mill. The company lacked experience, and exhausted its capital before it was prepared for effective work. The result was failure and the suspension of operations.

The mining of copper was begun in Ste. Genevieve County in 1872, by a Chicago company, who shipped the ore to Baltimore. In 1877 a small furnace was erected but it was not a success. About the same time O. D. Harris began operating the mines, and in 1881 erected two furnaces; a few years later he failed financially. Work was then suspended until 1888, when it was successfully resumed by a company under a lease. They work about 200 men, and ship the ore.

The iron ores consist of brown hematites, and are found at various places in the county.

The principal streams of Ste. Genevieve County are Saline Creek, River Aux Vases and River Establishment, all of which empty their waters into the Mississippi. Of the small creeks, here are the North and South Gabouri Creeks, which enter the Mississippi at Ste. Genevieve, Fourche Polite, Fourche Duclos, Isle le Bois, and in the west part of the county, Terre Bleu.

St. Francois County lies south and west of Ste. Genevieve County. It is very irregular in shape, and embraces an area of 450 square miles. The surface is generally hilly, but there are several bodies of very fine farming land. One of the largest of these, and covering several square miles, has Farmington for a center. The extreme northern portion, along the Jefferson County line, consists of ridge lands and narrow valleys of dark mulatto soil. The soil of the uplands is of the red and yellow ferruginous clay variety, resting upon magnesian limestone. In the variety and amount of agricultural productions, the county compares favorably with other sections of Southeast Missouri. In 1880 there were produced 506,627 bushels of corn, 86,342 bushels of oats, 163,350 bushels of wheat, 39,125 bushels of Irish potatoes, 15,088 pounds of tobacco, 41,642 pounds of wool and 163,770 pounds of butter. There is much valuable timber, consisting of the various species of oak, hickory and walnut, maple, sycamore, elm, ash and less valuable varieties.

But as valuable as are her other resources, it is upon her mineral wealth that St. Francois bases her claim to the first place among the counties of Southeast Missouri, and an examination of the mines and mining lands within her borders is sufficient to convince the most skeptical that the claim is not an extravagant one.

While there are a variety of minerals found here, the three most valuable are lead, iron and granite, and of these, lead is by far the most important. Since the coming of Renault, in 1720, lead mining has been one of the industries of this region, but it is within the past twenty-five years that it has begun to attract capital and inventive genius to its support. The mining carried on by the early French settlers was of the rudest and most primitive character, and only a small per cent. of the metal was extracted from the ore. Some of the mines were granted to individuals, who permitted any one who wished to do so to work in them for a certain per cent. of the product, usually one tenth. Other mines were considered public property. The work was prosecuted with little regularity or system. Moses Austin, writing in 1804, informs us that it was customary for the poorer inhabitants of New Bourbon and Ste. Genevieve, after harvest, to resort to these mines, and of the rich to send their slaves, and that most of the mining was done from August to December. Austin was himself the first to make improvements in the manner of smelting the lead. He was an experienced miner from Virginia, and in 1798 received a grant of land one league square, including Mine á Burton, discovered by Francis Burton, in 1763, on condition that he erect a furnace and make other improvements.

Of the early mines within what is now St. Francois County, the best known were Mine á Joe, Mine á la Platte (Doggett Mines), Mine á Gerboree and the Valle Mines. The first is situated on Flat Creek. It was on a tract granted to Joseph Bogy, father of Senator Louis V. Bogy, who carried on the mining on the old plan for a number of years. After the civil war Senator Bogy organized a company for the development of the property. A shaft was sunk, and some mineral taken out, and the work was suspended. Nothing more was done until about two years ago, when Firmin Desloge and others, of St. Louis, obtained an option on it, and went to prospecting. They found good indications, and set to work to buy up the stock of the old company. They succeeded in obtaining the greater portion of it, and are now at work in the old shaft, with the intention of cutting through to where the best ore is thought to lie, 300 yards distant.

Mine á la Platte, or, as it is now known, the Doggett Mine, was discovered by an American in 1799, and was included in a grant made to De Lassus in October of that year. It is situated in the north part of the county, on Platin Creek.

Mine á Gerboree is situated on the waters of the St. Francois River, not far from De Lassus Station. According to Austin, it was discovered by Renault in 1745.

The Valle Mines are situated near the Jefferson County line. They were opened about 1825, and for many years have yielded about 1,500 tons of lead annually. The ore is found in caves or pockets, and is worked on the independent plan, the miners being paid a certain amount per thousand pounds. Valle, the original owner, had three daughters, who married brothers, Felix, Francois, and Firmin Rozier, and they or their representatives still own the mines. They have added to the original tract, and now own 6,000 acres of land, including the Perry Mine, discovered by John Perry about 1838.

The Chadburn Mine (formerly Bisch) was discovered about the same time as the Valle Mines, and has been worked ever since.

About four miles south and a little east of the Valle Mines is the Hazel Run lead district, where more or less mining has been done for seventy-five years. The mineral is found in cone-shaped masses of nearly pure galena, imbedded in limestone. It seems to offer rich returns, but no one with sufficient capital and experience has yet attempted to open mines in this vicinity.

The company, however, which, more than all others, has made St. Francois County the greatest lead producing county in the United States is the St. Joseph Lead Company, of Bonne Terre. The land upon which its works are located consisted originally of 800 arpents of land, granted to John B. Pratte, and surveyed in the year 1800, by Antoine Soulard, Surveyor-General of Upper Louisiana. The grant in 1836 was confirmed to John B. Pratte, Jr., and in 1843 was purchased by John B. Valle, who ten years later sold to Anthony La Grave. La Grave in 1856 added 233 acres to the original grant, making altogether 946 acres. Upon this property he erected a furnace, and began the reduction of disseminated ore. He succeeded in producing a large amount of merchantable lead, but it is said that no small part of his product came from nearly pure galena brought from the Flat River district. This was at the beginning of the civil war. In 1863 the attention of several gentlemen of means in New York was called to this property, and a committee was sent out to investigate. Upon their report the St. Joseph Lead Company was organized, under the mining laws of New York, of which J. Wyman Jones soon became president, and he has since been the master spirit in the enterprise. The capital stock was $1,000,000. Up to this time the mining consisted of mere surface work. The first blast of gunpowder was inserted in 1864, and it was not until several years later that the first shaft was sunk. From the report of the trustees, made in 1866, it is learned that the amount of lead prepared for market during the year was 260,126 pounds, and that at that time the production was at the rate of 500 pigs per month. The geologist's report of the same date closes with the following: "The company has had many discouragements to contend with, now happily removed, in the disturbed condition of the country, and in the visitation of the enemy, stripping the establishment of everything that they could eat or wear, and filling the miners with fear and apprehension; and yet, under such circumstances, much has been done; for example, the erection of some twelve tenement houses, an engine and crushing house, 36x40 feet; the stacks of two Scotch furnaces, one of which is in full blast; a crusher, capable of crushing forty tons of rock each day; washing tables of an improved form; a reservoir and pump shaft, by which the water is made to perform a continuous revolution, besides the accomplishment of an immense amount of surface work. I cannot, to-day, point to a mining establishment in Missouri or Wisconsin, so thorough in its appointment, where means are so adapted to ends as here."

The officers and directors at this time were J. Wyman Jones, president; James R. Knapp, secretary; James L. Hathaway, treasurer; J. C. Barlow, Nathaniel M. Terry, and Ed. I. Wade. J. C. Winslow was the superintendent, and J. W. Foster, geologist.

In 1867 Mr. C. B. Parsons arrived at Bonne Terre from Northampton, Mass., and was installed as superintendent, a position which he has since held. He found the works consisting of a small crushing mill, with one set of rolls and one furnace. The most of the work was done by hand, and the output did not exceed over 500 pigs of 72 pounds each per month. The outlook was discouraging, but Mr. Parsons set his mechanical ingenuity to work to improve the machinery, to adapt it to the peculiar character of the ore, and to economize in labor and material. He not only improved the process at every point, but enlarged and extended the works, until in 1882 the output had reached 15,000 pigs of 81 pounds each per month. On the 25th day of February, 1883, the entire works, with all the machinery, engines and boilers, were consumed by fire. Thus the improvements of twenty years were destroyed, but not so the experience gained in those years. This misfortune, no doubt, has redounded to the benefit of the company. The old works were a growth, and had not the convenience and economy of arrangement obtained in the new mills, erected in the light of accumulated experience, and upon one grand plan.

Immediately after the fire Mr. Jones arrived upon the ground, and put his forces to work to rebuild the mills and furnaces, and on the 25th day of the following June one of the largest and most complete lead works in the world, filled with the most improved machinery for reducing ores, was completed and put into operation. The main building is 150 feet long by 122 feet wide, and contains ten Blake crushers, an equal number of Cornish rolls, and the requisite number of jigs, percussion tables and pumps, all of which are constantly in use. The machinery is operated by two Harris-Corliss engines, having a combined capacity of 400 horse power. There are also twelve calcining furnaces, two reduction furnaces and one refining furnace, besides a blacksmith shop, machine shop, carpenter shop, foundry, laboratory and other buildings.

In 1880 the St. Joseph and Desloge Companies completed a narrow gauge railroad to connect with the Iron Mountain Railroad at Mineral Point, and this is now owned and operated by the St. Joseph Company.

In March, 1886, the Desloge Company's works, were destroyed by fire, and soon after their property was transferred to the St. Joseph Company, the capital stock of the latter being increased to $1,500,000. The Desloge Mine was opened in 1875, by a company of which Firnim Desloge was the superintendent and one of the principal stockholders. The mine and works lay adjacent to the St. Joseph plant on the north. The mill which burned had a capacity of about 250 tons of ore per day.

The mines of the St. Joseph Company are now worked by three shafts, one at the Desloge Mine, one at what was known as the Pen Diggings, and the original shaft. It is the intention to unite the mines, and to transport the ore underground to the main shaft, where it will be elevated.

The ore here is disseminated through magnesian limestone, there being about 10 per cent. galena, or 7 per cent. of metallic lead. This disseminated ore is found in horizontal strata, varying greatly in thickness and width, reaching in places a thickness of from sixty to one hundred feet. These strata are worked, and the excavations now extend over an area of about twenty acres. A very large area has been explored with the diamond drill.

The process of obtaining the metallic lead from the disseminated ore is highly interesting. It is a triumph of inventive genius made effective by capital. Nothing is wasted, and the work is done with the least possible outlay of labor. The ore is elevated in small cars, holding about three-fourths of a ton. Those from the two new shafts are run upon large cars, and hauled by an engine to the mills, where they are run on to a platform, from which the ore is dumped on the floor below in front of the crushers. The cars from the main shaft are run direct to the dump. The ore is shoveled into the crushers, but the remainder of the long and complicated process is accomplished without the intervention of manual labor, the machinery working automatically. The crushers are great iron jaws, that chew the rock into small pieces. These fragments drop between two heavy rollers, and are reduced to the size of a grain of corn, or less. It then passes into a revolving drum sieve. The smaller particles pass between the meshes, while the coarser ones roll from the lower end of the drum into buckets, and are carried up to go through the same process again. The fine particles drop from the sieve into water, and with it are pumped through large pipes to the floor above. There the mixture is distributed through smaller pipes to the jigs. In the mixture of lead and rock particles and water, the lead goes to the bottom, the larger particles underneath. The jigs are screens, to which is given a combined vibratory and jolting motion. The roughing jig, upon which the mixture is first thrown, drops the larger particles of lead. It then passes over the sand jig, where the next grade of mineral is caught, while the rock particles are thrown off at the end of the screen. From the jigs the water, relieved of the greater portion of its lead, is carried to the percussion tables, upon the upper end of which it is poured. These tables are slightly tilted, and are given a jarring motion from side to side. Here the greater specific gravity of the lead over the sand is again utilized. The jarring motion throws the lead beyond the sand, and the two are separated before they reach the lower end of the table. The water goes to a second percussion table, to be shaken again, and to be relieved of the last particles of lead, which are as fine as flour. Meanwhile the lead and the rock particles, now called "chats," separated in the jigs, have been carried by water through large pipes to their respective cars. The "chats," amounting to from sixty-five to eighty car loads per day, are hauled away to ballast the railroad, or grade the streets of Bonne Terre. The ore goes to the calcining furnace, where it is roasted and desulphurized. This furnace, or oven, is sixty-five feet long, and built on a gentle incline. The ore is put in at the upper end, and pushed by paddles to the opposite end, the heat constantly increasing. When it has completed its trip, it is a molten mass, and is raked out to cool. It then goes to the reduction furnace, which is charged from the top with a mixture of coke, ore, iron cinder and "chat." As the ore melts, it drops to the bottom, runs out into a tub, and is ladled into molds. The pigs thus made are then taken to the refining furnace, remelted, drawn off into molds, skimmed and left to cool. These pigs are taken out and stacked up ready for shipment.

The smoke which comes from the reduction furnace passes through a long chamber, where it is treated to a shower bath, in the shape of an artificial rain-fall, which precipitates the particles of lead that would otherwise be lost.*

The following table shows the amount of lead produced by the St. Joseph Company per year for the past twenty years, each ending April 30:

This gives a total for the twenty years of 179,042,873 pounds, or 89,521 tons.

The company owns 24,000 acres of land, including eleven farms under a high state of cultivation, stocked with several hundred head of fine cattle, and inclosed by between sixty and seventy miles of fence. It also owns the best portion of Bonne Terre, and maintains a store, which carries a stock of $45,000 worth of goods.

The officers and directors at the present time are J. Wyman Jones, president; Hugh N. Camp, secretary and treasurer; C. B. Parsons, superintendent, and Henry N. Day, J. Wyman Jones, Hugh N. Camp, C. B. Parsons, William H. Harris, F. Desloge, Russell H. Hoadley and J. H. Crane, directors.

Not far removed from the St. Joseph Company, and composed of the men who have built up that great institution, is the Doe Run Lead Company. This company was organized about December 1, 1886, with J. Wyman Jones as president; Gust. Setz, vice-president; F. P. Graves, secretary and assistant superintendent; C. B. Parsons, superintendent, and Hugh N. Camp, treasurer. These gentlemen are also large stockholders. The capital stock was at first $200,000, but on May 5, 1888, was increased to $500,000.

The mines are situated about two and one-half miles southwest of De Lassus, on Doe Run Creek, on land formerly owned by J. W. Merryman. Some five years ago he sank a shaft about thirty feet deep, and found disseminated ore, but he could interest no one in his discovery. In 1886 Judge W. R. Taylor, of Farmington, examined the ore, and took an option on the farm, consisting of 150 acres, for $15,000. He brought the property to the attention of the St. Joseph Company. The result was the organization of the new company, and the purchase of the Merryman farm for $60,000. To this tract they added as much more by subsequent purchases. With characteristic vigor and clear-headedness, the company commenced the sinking of two shafts, and the erection of furnaces and a mill. In this work they were aided by the twenty years' experience of the St. Joseph Company, and in less than a year from the organization of the company they had ready for operation a mill with a capacity of 200 tons of ore per day. Regular work was begun about January 1, 1888, and until May 15 the output was 6,000 pigs per month. At the latter date it was increased to the rate of 10,000 pigs per month. The ore is of the same general character as that at Bonne Terre, but lies shallower, and is of a higher grade. The mine is opened by two shafts, 500 feet apart, and connected at a depth of sixty feet. During nine months in the year water is obtained from Doe Run Creek, but during the remainder of the time is pumped from St. Francois River, a distance of two miles.

There are several other localities in St. Francois County where large quantities of disseminated ore have been found, and it is thought that the deposits extend, with some interruption, from Bonne Terre to the Mine La Motte. East of the Mine à Joe, or Bogy Mine, is a tract of 400 acres belonging to Judge W. R. Taylor, who is now prospecting with a diamond drill, and meeting with good indications. A short distance above Taylor's is what is known as the Shaw Mine, which was opened by the Central Mining Company, of which the father of H. S. Shaw, of Ste. Genieve, was the organizer. This company did some excavating, and found very rich ore at a depth of 234 feet, but the work was suspended by the death of Mr. Shaw.

St. Francois County, in addition to her vast wealth of lead, contains the celebrated Iron Mountain, which at one time was thought to be a nearly solid mass of iron, and was so written down by geologists. Investigation, however, has revealed the fact that the bulk of the mountain is porphyry. The error resulted from the fact that the whole surface was covered with surface-ore, and no extensive excavations had been made. The mountain is conical in shape, and rises 228 feet above the level of the valley. On the southwest is a knob known as Little Iron Mountain. The ore is of the specular variety, and of a very high grade, containing between 65 and 70 per cent. of metallic iron. It lies in veins, one of which, described by Dr. Schmidt, divides the mountain into two nearly equal parts. It is from forty to sixty feet thick in places, and is known as the "backbone" of the mountain.

The Iron Mountain and Pilot Knob were both included in a grant of 20,000 arpents of land, made by the Spanish Government to Joseph Pratte, and confirmed to him in 1834. By act of the Legislature, approved on December 31, 1836, the Missouri Mining Company was organized, with Pratte as president. Nothing, however, was accomplished in the way of iron mining until 1846, when Conrad C. Ziegler and the Prattes, under the name of the Iron Mountain Mining Company, began the manufacture of pig iron. The pigs were hauled in wagons to Ste. Genevieve for shipment, and in 1851-52 a plank road was built between the two points. In 1854 Pruett & Patterson erected some bloom furnaces, three miles east of Farmington, where the plank road crossed Wolf Creek. The ore was hauled from Iron Mountain, and the product to Ste. Genevieve. This furnace, known as Valle Forge, in 1858 became the property of Choteau, Harrison & Valle (Charles A. Pilley, superintendent), and was profitably worked until 1863, when the machinery was removed to Iron Mountain. The Iron Mountain Company, during the war, continued in operation, and made a large amount of money. In 1858 the railroad from St. Louis was completed, and the shipment of ore was begun. In 1876 the furnaces were shut down, and since that time the company has given its attention solely to the production of raw ore. This goes to Carondelet, Pittsburg and other iron centers. Until recently the ore has been taken from the top of the mountain, which has been very perceptibly lowered. The company owns 35,000 acres of land in one tract.

The granite quarries are located in the southwest part of the county, in the neighborhood of Knob Lick. The first quarry was opened by John Simpson, who made the first granite paving blocks used in St. Louis. He sold out to W. R. Allen, who put in a large amount of machinery, opened up extensive quarries, and employed a large force of men in getting out paving blocks and dimension stone. Subsequently Mr. Allen became interested in the quarries at Graniteville, Iron County, and has since removed his machinery to that point. There are still two quarries in the county, one operated by William Melne, at Knob Lick, and the other by Robert Tetley and George Skinner, on Doe Run, about three miles from Knob Lick.

St. Francois County lies on a water-shed, the northern part being divided by Big River toward the north, and the southern half by the St. Francois to the south. Both are very crooked streams. The principal tributaries of the Big River are Terre Blue and Flat River; of the St. Francois, Wolf Creek and Doe Run.

To the south of St. Francois County is Madison County, with an area of 560 square miles. The surface is very uneven, ranging from high chert hills and mountains to low valleys. The highest elevations are west of the St. Francois. They are Daguerre Mountain, 492 feet; Blue Mountain, 551 feet; Smith's Mountain, 432 feet; Rock Creek Mountain, 575 feet, and Black Mountain, 467 feet. The rocks are mainly syenitic and porphyritic. There is but little soil on the mountains, which are covered with fragments of chert or porphyry. In the elevated valleys is found the red clay soil, with a base of Magnesian limestone. This is the character of the land in the vicinity of Fredericktown, and along Slater's Creek, and Mathews' Creek. The northern part of the county forms an elevated plateau, upon which the soil is based on syenitic rocks, and is not very productive. It is, however, an excellent fruit country.

The county is rich in minerals, and contains a great variety of them. Lead is the most valuable, and has been worked for more than a century and a half. When Renault, in 1720, entered the country with his miners, he was accompanied by La Motte, a mineralogist, who in one of the earliest excursions, discovered the mines in the northern part of this county, which still bear his name. Of this mine, Moses Austin wrote in 1804 as follows: "Mine La Motte was discovered by Mr. Renault, about the year 1723 or 1724, who made an exploration, but finding no silver ore abandoned it. About the year 1725 a man by the name of La Motte opened and wrought the mine, after whom it was called.

About the years 1738-40 the Mine á la Motte was considered a public property, and the people in general were allowed to work it. At that time it furnished almost all the lead exported from the Illinois. But soon after the discovery and opening of the Mine á Burton* the Mine a la Motte was in a great measure abandoned, the mineral at Mine á Burton being much easier melted. The Mine á la Motte is at this time claimed as private property; in consequence, the inhabitants in general are denied the privilege of working. Therefore the quantity of lead is greatly reduced. For the years 1802 and 1803 the quantity of lead made at Mine á la Motte did not exceed 200,000 pounds' weight, although about thirty men were employed from four to six months in each year. "

The claimants of the mine at this time were J. B. Pratte, J. B. St. Gem, Francois Valle and J. B. Valle, who alleged that they purchased the property in 1790. To the United States Commissioners they submitted evidence to show that the mine was worked by one of the Valles as early as 1763; that in 1769 the Chickasaw Indians killed the son of Valle, and by other acts of hostility drove him from the land; that a short time after, he attempted to resume work, when one of his companions was seized and burned by the Indians; but that in 1780, or 1782, he once more returned to work. In 1827 the grant, which consists of about 24,000 acres, was confirmed to these claimants or their representatives, who in 1838 sold to C. C. Valle, Louis F. Linn and E. E. Pratte. These owners divided the mining section into forty lots of forty acres each, and leased them for a term of ten years, which was afterward extended three years. Various parties worked under these leases, and four or five furnaces were operated. In the thirteen years an aggregate of 19,000,000 pounds of lead was produced. During this period, a partition sale of the property took place, and some Philadelphia men became part owners. A legal fight over the title ensued, and lasted until the beginning of the civil war, during which time there was little mining done. In 1861 the works were destroyed by the Federal troops. In 1868 the property was purchased by the La Motte Lead Company, composed of R. G. Hazard, of

* At Potosi.

Rhode Island; R. B. Lockwood, of New York, and W. A. Scott, of St. Louis. Modern machinery and furnaces were put up, and preparations made for more systematic work, but the stockholders disagreed, and a financial wreck was the result. In 1876 Rowland G. Hazard became the sole proprietor, and still owns and works the mines. His manager is Mr. J. D. Sanders.

Three mines are worked. The ore is raised by steam, and carried over tramways to the works, where it is treated to much the same process as the disseminated ore at other mines. The mines may be termed shallow, the deepest not going more than 130 feet below the surface. The ore lies in isolated masses, the veins averaging three or four feet thick. In 1876 the total amount of lead produced from these mines since their discovery was estimated at 110,571,436 pounds. In 1887 the yield was about 80,000 pigs. Other lead mines in the county have been worked at different times, and recently there has been considerable prospecting for this metal. It is thought that there are ore fields as rich as those of St. Francois County, if they were sought out and developed.

In 1843 copper was discovered by John Craddock, one and a half miles east of Fredericktown. He sold out to Dilly & Avery, who formed a company to develop the mine, but four years later the property was transferred to J. T. Foster & Co., of New York, who worked it until 1860, taking out large quantities of black oxide and yellow sulphuret. Soon after the close of the war, work was discontinued, and has never been resumed. In 1838 copper sulphides in paying quantities were found on the Mine La Motte tract, and in 1845 a mine was opened. Work was carried on for three years, and it is said that the net profits from the copper taken out amounted to $150,000. The ore in sight was exhausted, and the work was suspended.

In the smelting of lead at Mine La Motte, some cobalt and nickel are found, and shipped to Europe in its raw state. The amount averages about seventy-five tons per year.

About fifteen years ago a company of St. Louis capitalists was organized to develop what was thought to be a very rich deposit of tin. It was found in what has since been known as Tin Mountain, ten miles southwest of Fredericktown. Half a million dollars was expended in putting in machinery and opening up the mine, but no tin was obtained, and the company was forced to the conclusion that the mine had been "salted" by interested persons, since specimens assayed had yielded large returns.

An equally fruitless attempt was made to develop a silver mine in the western part of the county, but it is believed that had this company continued their work they would have met with success.

With the exception of lead, the most valuable mineral production in the county at the present time is granite. A quarry has been opened by the La Motte Granite Company, about three and one-half miles from Fredericktown, and a large force of men are employed in getting out granite paving blocks.

Ten miles southwest of Fredericktown is a marble quarry, from which have been taken some very beautiful specimens, but it has not been extensively worked. It is of a very beautiful color, takes a good polish, and is highly valuable for ornamental work. Besides the minerals mentioned, there are large deposits of kaolin and hydraulic cement, but neither have been developed.

Madison County is drained by Castor and St. Francois Rivers. The main prong of the latter runs through the western part of the county, and receives from the west Brewer's, Stout's, Marble and Leatherwood Creeks. The tributaries from the east are Cedar, Turkey, Twelve Mile, Piney, Dry and Trace Creeks. Little St. Francois rises in St. Francois County, runs through the Mine La Motte tract, and forms a junction with the main stream twelve miles below Fredericktown. Its tributaries are Saline, Mill, Village, Rock and Musco Creeks. The Castor River rises in the northeast part of the county, and flowing southward receives the waters of Dry and Ground's Creeks from the east, and Kelly's and Mouser's Creeks from the west.

Iron County lies west of Madison County. Its area is about 550 square miles. Its surface is mountainous. The highest elevations are Pilot Knob, 581 feet; Shepherd Mountain, 660 feet; Cedar Hill, Buzzard's Mountain, Anderson Mountain and Peck Mountain, all within a radius of three miles of Pilot Knob. Encircled by these mountains and by hills is the beautiful valley of Arcadia. This valley is about three miles wide and six miles long, and extends east and west along Stout's Creek. In the northeast part of the county is Belleview Valley, which extends into Washington County. The remainder of the county is very hilly, the tillable land being found only along the streams.

The mountains and high ridges are huge masses of azoic porphyry and porphyry conglomerate, in some of which are deposits of iron ore. The valleys belong to the Lower Silurian formation, and have for a base magnesian limestone, overlaid in many places by sandstone and clay. The first iron made west of the Mississippi River was manufactured in this county. The precise date is not known, but it was sometime prior to 1820. Paul De Guire and a man named Orb. Ashabran, or Ashabranner, built a furnace on the Fredericktown road, near the "Shut In," and on the creek, a few hundred yards below, constructed a forge or bloomery. The ore was first roasted in a furnace, and then beaten to a powder. It was then put into the forge and heated, the blast being furnished by water power. When it had become fused into a mass it was taken out and placed under a hammer, also run by water power. These works were discontinued in a few years, and nothing more was done in the iron industry until 1847, when Conrad C. Ziegler and Bernard and E. E. Pratte organized the "Madison Iron Mining Company," afterward the "Pilot Knob Iron Company." Two smelting furnaces, each of about twenty tons capacity, were erected at the north base of the mountain, as was also a forge for making blooms and other wrought iron. The latter was operated for six or eight years, when it was discontinued. Up to the completion of the Iron Mountain Railroad, in 1858, the iron manufactured was hauled in wagons to Ste. Genevieve. After the opening of the railroad, the shipment of ore was begun, and at times as many as forty car loads were shipped daily. It was taken to the Mississippi River at Sulphur Springs, and there reshipped on barges to furnaces on the Mississippi River.

In September, 1864, during the battle of Pilot Knob, the furnaces were burned, but one furnace was rebuilt and resumed operations in 1865. Since that time the company has passed through two or three financial crises, and work has as often been suspended. Recently the Pilot Knob Iron Company was merged into the St. Louis Ore & Steel Company, and is now known by the latter name. The company owns 43,000 acres of land. No ore is smelted at the present time, but is shipped to St. Louis, Pittsburg and other points. It is of the specular variety, and is used in the manufacture of Bessemer steel. The vein begins near the highest point on the mountain, and extends downward, dipping to the southwest. Although the amount of ore is not so great as was supposed when the mines were first opened, it is not probable that it will soon be exhausted, since only the upper portion of the vein has as yet been worked. Mines have been opened at various other places in the county, but no regular and systematic work has been done. In 1868 about one hundred tons of ore were taken out at Russell's Mine, on Marble Creek, ten miles south of Ironton, and two years later some fifty tons of ore were mined at Biser Mountain, in the same vicinity. At an iron bank two or three miles west of Des Arc, about 500 tons of hematite ore were mined in 1873. In 1874 200 tons of ore were mined at Hogan's Mountain, five miles south of Ironton, and during the same year about fifty tons of ore were taken out at Minden iron bank, one mile east of Ironton.

Lead ore has been found in several places in the county, but it has not been developed. The only lead mined was at Big Creek Mines, near Des Arc, in 1868, when about twenty-five tons were taken out.

Marble has been found on Marble Creek, twelve miles south of Ironton, and in 1860 some of it was quarried, and sawed for market. At about the same time marble was quarried about three miles west of Ironton, and used in some part of the capitol at Washington, D. C. None has been quarried since the war.

In 1868 granite quarries were opened about four miles northwest of Ironton, upon lands belonging to the American Iron Mountain Company, and leased by B. Gratz Brown and Philip W. Schneider, who furnished a large portion of the granite for the St. Louis bridge and for the capitol building at Springfield, Ill. The latter gentleman subsequently operated the quarries and furnished the granite for the United States Custom Houses at St. Louis and Cincinnati. The quarries were suspended in 1876. Subsequently they were leased by the Syenite Granite Company, of which W. R. Allen is president, and are now operated on an extensive scale. Both paving blocks and dimension stone are produced. The quarries are owned by the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad Company.

Wayne County lies south of the counties of Madison and Iron, and embraces an area of 745 square miles. The surface is generally broken and highly diversified, rocky hills and ridges alternating with rich valleys. The soil in most parts is gravelly, with a limestone base. Many of the hills are too rocky for cultivation, but all are suitable for grazing. The county is well timbered, and large areas of pine, oak and poplar remain untouched by the woodman's ax.

The mineral wealth of the county has been developed to but a very limited extent. Iron ore, brown hematite and specular exist in considerable quantities, the former predominating. There are also copper and lead in the northwest part of the country. Several valuable granite quarries have been opened along the line of the Iron Mountain Railroad, and are very profitably worked.

The county is well watered by numerous springs and streams. Black River flows through the western part of the county, and receives from the west the waters of Big and Little Brush Creeks, and from the east McKenzie's and Haynes' Creeks. St. Francois River runs through the county from north to south, dividing it into two nearly equal parts. Its tributaries are Big Creek, Clark's Creek, Lake Creek and Otter Creek from the west, and Hughes' Creek, Cedar Creek and Lost Creek from the east. Castor River flows along the eastern boundary, and into it, from Wayne County, flows Bear Creek. On the southeastern border is the slough or bayou known as Black Mingo.

Bollinger County lies between Cape Girardeau County on the east and Madison and Wayne Counties on the west. It has an area of 381,000 acres. The surface is generally broken, and in some parts almost mountainous. The highest point is called Turkey Hill. The soil is similar to that of Cape Girardeau County. The extent of the mineral resources is not known, but they are supposed to be valuable. Some iron ore, brown hematite, has been mined, and lead and kaolin are known to exist. The drainage is good. In the north and east are Big and Little White Water Rivers, and in the southwest Castor River. Through the center flows Crooked Creek, and at Marble Hill forms a junction with Hurricane Creek.

Butler County lies south of Wayne County, and extends to the Arkansas line. Its area includes about 600 square miles. The surface is diversified, but not so broken as that of Wayne County. Bordering on the St. Francois River, the land is flat and low. The best farming lands lie along Cane Creek. The county was sparsely settled prior to the war, and there is yet a large amount of unimproved land. The northern portion of the county lies within the iron district, but there has been no development of the mineral resources.

The county is traversed centrally by the Big Black River, a sluggish stream, which during a part of the year is navigable for small boats as far up as Poplar Bluff. Its principal tributaries are Cane Creek and Copeland Creek. Little Black River, a tributary of Current River, flows through the western part of the county, and St. Francois River forms the eastern boundary.

SETTLEMENT.

Mound Builders.—Before the dawn of even traditional history, the alluvial plains of Southeast Missouri and Northern Arkansas were the home of a populous community possessing a high degree of civilization. Who these people were, whence they came and whither they went is an unsolved problem. That they existed, and in large numbers, there is abundant evidence. On every hand are found their implements, their household utensils, their weapons, their mounds and their fortifications. These relics are found all over the Mississippi Valley, but ethnologists have decided that the center of population was in this region.

To discuss the various theories as to the origin of this race is not within the province of this volume. It seems but natural, however, that a civilization should have developed itself in this country. It possessed all the elements which gave rise to the civilizations of the old world—the fertility of soil, the salubrity of climate, and ease of subsistence.

Although there is little known of the history of this remarkable race, much has been learned of their habits and manner of living. The artificial mounds erected by them are found in almost every part of Southeast Missouri, but are most numerous in the counties of Mississippi, New Madrid, Pemiscot and Dunklin. In Mississippi County there are hundreds of mounds, ranging in size from six inches in height and fifteen feet in diameter to twenty-five feet in height and 200 feet in diameter. The smaller mounds predominate, and are sometimes found in groups of from ten to fifteen. One group, on the farm of Thomas Beckwith, in Wolf Island Township, occupies a space of about ten acres, inclosed by an embankment.

There are several remarkable works in New Madrid County, and many large mounds have been carried away by the encroachments of the river. Brackenridge, in 1811, described a mound situated about four miles from New Madrid. As it appeared then it was 1,200 feet in circumference, forty feet high, and surrounded by a ditch five feet deep and ten feet wide. It is of the class known as temple mounds. Some fifteen miles from New Madrid, on Bayou St. John, are the remains of an ancient village, which closely resembles the village of Capaha, as described in the narrative of De Soto's expedition. From a description of these works by Prof. Conant the following is condensed. The bayou at this point is one mile and a half in width; its whole length may be stated, in round numbers, to be about seventy-five miles. Upon the western bank of the bayou are the works to be described. They consist of inclosures, large and small, conical and truncated mounds in great numbers, and countless residence sites of the ancient inhabitants. From the level of the bayou to the prairie lands above, the ascent is by a gradual slope to a vertical height of fifteen feet. Upon this belt of sloping ground, now covered with a heavy growth of timber, the works are most numerous; while from the edge westward the level prairie has been under cultivation for sixty or seventy years. Here, including forty acres of a cultivated field and ten of the sloping timber belt, is an area of about fifty acres, inclosed by earthen walls which may be distinctly traced for several hundred feet, but gradually disappear on the western side, having been obliterated by the long cultivation of the field. Where it is best preserved in the timbered land, its height was found to be from three to five feet, and fifteen feet wide at the base. In the center of the western side of the inclosure, and close to the wall, is a mound of oblong shape, 300 feet in length at the base, and at its northern end 100 feet wide and twenty feet high, at the present time. The top slopes gradually to the south, and although the plow has passed up and down it for fifty years, still on its eastern side may be distinctly seen the evidences of a graded way to the summit. Close to the northeastern side, where the mound is widest, is a deep depression in the field, about ten feet in diameter. In the center of the inclosure stands a circular mound, seventy-five feet in diameter and twenty feet high, which belongs to the class called residence mounds. In a direct line with the mounds described, upon the edge of the declivity which descends toward the swamp, in the midst of a group of smaller works, stands a large burial mound, twelve to fifteen feet in height and 100 feet in diameter. It has been the sepulchre of many hundreds, perhaps a thousand, individuals.

Along the shore of the bayou, in front of the inclosure, small tongues of land have been carried out into the water, from fifteen to thirty feet in length by ten to fifteen in width, with open spaces between, which, small as they are, forcibly remind one of the wharves of a seaport town. It would also suggest that the inhabitants were fishermen and had plenty of boats of some sort, which, being so, these waters must have been navigable, and not filled up, as now, with an almost impenetrable cypress forest.*

*A comparison of this description with that of the village of Capaha, as given in the following pages, discloses a striking resemblance. Capaha's Village was situated three leagues (9 mi.) from the Mississippi. It is estimated that the river has receded at the rate of a mile in seventy years. Therefore, in 350 years (about the time since De Soto's visit), it has receded five miles, which, added to nine miles, gives nearly the distance of the works at present. Is it not possible that, prior to the earthquakes, the bayou could have been mistaken for an artificial canal, and that the two places are identical?

The remains of these ancient villages, varying somewhat in their character and extent, are found on the bayous, rivers and lakes throughout the alluvial counties. In Pemiscot County there are numerous evidences of canals, walls and other artificial works. Several of the bayous in that county are thought to have been of artificial origin. One of these connects the flats of Big Lake with the Mississippi. Another is known as Cypress Bayou, which connects the waters of Cushion Lake with a bayou running into Big Lake. By this means a chain of lakes and bayous was established, which formed a system of inland navigation, extending from the Mississippi, at the mouth of Big Lake Bayou, through Big Lake, Cushion Lake, Collins Lake, and their connecting bayous, and so on to the Mississippi again at a point about five miles below New Madrid.

There are some very large mounds in Dunklin County, one or more of which have been utilized for building sites. The peculiarly rich soil of this county, no doubt, attracted a large population of these ancient people.

In the upland counties the mounds are not very numerous. There is a group in the Big Field of Ste. Genevieve which, after a century and a half of cultivation, are distinctly defined, and one of the mounds rises to a height of thirty feet or more.

The mounds have been classified, according to their use, as residence, burial, sacrificial, observatory, etc. The burial mounds vary greatly in size, but, it is believed, are not often above ten or fifteen feet in height. Many are from eighteen inches to four feet in height, and in some instances burial places are found on level ground. In the mounds the remains are found from one to six feet below the surface, but the usual depth is from two to three feet. There is some evidence that scaffold burial was practiced. This is indicated by the position of the bones, and the fact that many of them are usually missing. Frequently the skull and thigh bones are found together; often there are three or four skulls in a place. On one occasion Thomas Beckwith, of Charleston, Mo., found a mass of bones six inches in depth, and covering an area of eight or ten square feet, in which were but few skulls. He also found two large earthen pots or urns filled with human bones. In one of these were two skulls, two or three large bones, some ribs and some of the bones of the feet and hands. The bones were packed into the urn closely, and partly covered over with fragments of large vessels, one of the skulls filling the remainder of the open space. The bottom of the urn was about four feet below the surface, on the outer edge of the mound, surrounded by a large number of other burials in two layers. The urns crumbled to pieces when taken out, but one of them was restored. It is thirteen inches in depth, sixteen inches in diameter in its broadest part, the top narrowing to ten inches. A similar urn was found in a mound near New Madrid, and is now in the Peabody Museum. In some places the remains are found in stone coffins, each containing a single skeleton. They are made of six slabs, one each for the top, bottom, sides and ends. They are very short, not exceeding fifty inches in length, showing that the bones and not the bodies were deposited in them. Such graves have been found in Perry County.

The resident mounds are usually of truncated, pyramidal shape, with flat tops, and of small elevation. They are frequently, perhaps most often, found in groups.

From the implements found in and around these mounds, it is evident that a rude agriculture was carried on. Spades, hoes and axes, of flint or greenstone, are numerous. They are rude of shape and structure, as stone implements must be, but they were sufficient to stir the sandy, alluvial soil in which they were used. But it is not probable that agriculture was the chief dependence of these people for subsistence. The position of their villages upon the banks of rivers or lakes, and their numerous canals, indicate that they were fishermen, and the numberless spear-heads, arrow-heads, knives, and other implements of the chase, show that they must have been skillful hunters.

It is pottery, however, that constitutes the most interesting of the relics of this departed race. It is found in abundance, and in hundreds of different forms. In its manufacture they display great skill, but it is not thought that they knew anything of the use of the potter's wheel. Most of it was made by molding the clay around some object, a round stone, or a vessel prepared for the purpose, and then shaping it to the required form. The material was aluminous clay mixed with pounded shells.

Some of the vessels are plain, but the most of them are ornamented in some way. Many are made to represent various animals, as the bear, coon, squirrel, birds and fishes. The bowls are usually made with handles, representing the heads of birds, and sometimes of persons. The pots and kettles, and other cooking utensils, have little ornamentation. The pots vary in capacity from a half pint to several gallons, and are supplied with two or more ears, or handles, which would indicate that they were hung over the fire.

The drinking vessels, water-jugs and bottles are found in many forms, from the plain gourd-shaped water-jugs to the most elaborate and grotesque effigy bottles. These image bottles and vases are frequently made to represent the human figure in various postures, but most frequently they represent a woman of more or less deformity, the legs bent under the body, and the arms resting upon the knees. The opening is always in the back of the head. Mr. Beckwith has an image, which he found in a mound upon his farm, representing a man in the position described, with the arms at the side, and the hands crossed upon the stomach. It is painted a deep yellow color, with curved white stripes drawn about the body, upon which is painted a breech-cloth in deep red color. Another image represents a woman with skirts, and a pappoose or some sort of pack on her back. An image, recently discovered in Arkansas, which appears to represent the figure of a Catholic priest at his devotions, has the features of a European. The dress seems to be that of a priest, and upon the breast is suspended a cross. As there has been found no evidence of the use of the cross among these people, it seems reasonable to suppose that the image is the copy of a Catholic missionary, possibly of one of the priests accompanying De Soto. Such indications and many others there are that tend to refute the assertion that many centuries must have elapsed since the disappearance of this remarkable race.

There are two very fine collections of Mound Builders' relics in Southeast Missouri. One of these has been made by Thomas Beckwith, of Charleston, which is especially interesting from the fact that nearly every article was found in Mississippi County. It consists of some 1,800 specimens, and is especially rich in pottery. The other collection is in the hands of Dr. L. P. Ruff, of Jackson, an intelligent and discriminating antiquarian. His collection of the implements of war and agriculture is very fine, while in the number and variety of discoidals his cabinet is unexcelled.

De Soto's Travels and Indian History.—Nearly three and a half centuries have passed since Southeast Missouri was first seen by the eye of the white man. In 1539 Fernando De Soto, with 600 tried soldiers, the flower of Spanish chivalry, entered upon the conquest of Florida, and two years later, in May, 1541, having traversed a thousand miles of wilderness filled with hostile savages, he crossed the "Father of Waters," and after a march of five days was within the present limits of Missouri.

As there has been much difference of opinion in regard to the direction and extent of De Soto's travels west of the Mississippi River, the following extended extract from Irving's "Conquest of Florida," taken from the narrative of the Portugese historian, is given. It begins after the crossing of the river at the Chickasaw Bluffs:

"Breaking up their boats to preserve the nails, they proceeded four days through a wilderness intersected in many places by morasses, which they were obliged to ford, and on the fifth day, from the summit of a high ridge, they descried a village containing about four hundred dwellings. It was seated on the banks of a river, the borders of which as far as the eye could reach were covered with luxuriant fields of maize, interspersed with groves of fruit trees. The natives, who had already received notice of their approach, thronged out in crowds to receive them, freely offering their homes and their effects for their use. Two Indian chiefs arrived in a short time with a train of warriors, bearing a welcome from their Cacique, and an offer of their services. The Governor received them very courteously, and treated them with much kindness, so that they went away well pleased. The Spaniards, finding abundance offered for man and horse, halted six days in the village, which bore the name Casquin, or Casquí, as did the whole province and its Cacique.

"Resuming their journey, they marched through a populous and champaign country, where the land was more elevated, and the soil less alluvial than anything they had yet seen on the borders of the Mississippi. The fields were overflowingly fruitful, the pecan nut, the red and gray plum and mulberry trees grew there in abundance. In two days they came to the chief town, where the Cacique resided. It was seated on the same side of the river, about seven leagues above, and in a very fertile and populous country. Here they were well received by the Cacique, who made them a present of mantles, skins and fish, and wanted De Soto to lodge in his habitation. It stood on a high artificial hill in one side of the village, and consisted of twelve or thirteen large houses, for the accommodation of his large family of women and attendants. The Governor declined the invitation, for fear of incommoding him. A part of the army quartered in the houses; the remainder lodged in bowers, which the Indians quickly built of green branches, in groves close by. It was now the month of May, and as the weather was becoming oppressively warm, the tenants of these leafy bowers found them truly delightful.

“The army remained tranquil in this village during three days, with much good feeling on both sides. On the morning of the fourth the Cacique, accompanied by all his principal subjects, came into the presence of De Soto and, making a profound obeisance, ‘Senor,’ said he, ‘as you are superior to us in prowess, and surpass us in arms, we likewise believe that your God is better than our God. These you behold before you are the chief warriors of my dominions. We supplicate you to pray to God to send us rain, for our fields are parched for the want of water.’

“De Soto replied that although he and his followers were but sinners yet they would supplicate God, the father of mercies, to show mercy to them. In the presence of the Cacique, he then ordered his chief carpenter, Francisco the Genoese, to hew down the largest and highest pine tree in the vicinity and construct of it a cross. [The cross was set up; religious services were then held and the next night rain fell.]

“As the army had been already quartered nine or ten days in this village, De Soto gave orders for them to prepare to march the following morning. The Cacique, who was about fifty years of age, obtained permission of the Governor to go with him with a train of his warriors and domestics, the one to escort the army, the other to carry his supplies, as they had to traverse a wilderness, and also to clear the road, gather wood for the encampment and fodder for the houses. The true object of the Cacique, however, was to avail himself of the presence of the Spaniards to wreak vengeance on a neighboring chief, called Capaha—as war had existed between the tribes for several generations, but the present Cacique of Capaha had joined the ascendancy and kept Casquin in continued awe and subjection by the superiority of his forces.

“In the morning the Cacique Casquin took the field to escort the Governor. He had 3,000 Indians laden with the supplies, and with the baggage of the army, who were all armed with bows and arrows. But besides these he had 5,000 of his choicest warriors, well armed, fiercely painted and decorated with their war plumes.

“With the permission of the Governor, he took the lead under the pretence of clearing the road of any lurking foe, and preparing everything for the encampment of the Spaniards. He divided his men into squadrons, and marched in good military array a quarter of a league in advance. By night he posted sentinels in the same manner as the Spaniards. In this way they traveled three days, at the end of which they came to a point on a swamp, miry on the borders, with a lake in the center too deep to be forded, and which formed a kind of gulf in the Mississippi, into which it emptied itself. Across this piece of water the Indians of Casquin constructed a rude bridge of trunks of trees, laid upon posts driven into the bottom of the lake, with a row of stakes above the bridge for those who crossed to hold by. The horses were obliged to swim, and were got across with great difficulty on account of the deep mire. The swamp separated the two hostile provinces of Casquin and Capaha. The Spaniards were nearly the whole day in crossing it, and encamped in the beautiful meadows about half a league beyond. After traveling two days more, they came early on the third day to some elevated ridges, from whence they descried the principal town of Capaha, the frontier post and defense of the province.

"It contained 500 large houses, and was situated on high ground, which commanded the surrounding country. It was nearly encircled by a deep moat, fifty paces in breadth, and where the moat did not extend, was defended by a strong wall of timber and plaster. The moat was filled with water by a canal cut from the Mississippi River, which was three leagues distant. The canal was deep, and sufficiently wide for two canoes to pass abreast without touching each other's paddles. This canal and moat were filled with fish, so as to supply all of the wants of the village and army without any apparent diminution of their number.

"Capaha had received intelligence by his scouts of the formidable allies who accompanied his old antagonist, Casquin. His own warriors were dispersed, and not sufficient in number to resist such additional force. As soon, therefore, as he saw the enemy approaching, he sprang into a canoe in the moat, and passing along the canal into the Grand River, took refuge in a strong island. Such of his people as had canoes followed him. Others fled into the neighboring woods, while some lingered in the village. Casquin, marching as usual in advance, arrived with his warriors at the village some time before the Spaniards. Meeting with no resistance, he entered it warily, suspecting some ambush. This gave time for many of the loiterers to escape. As soon as Casquin ascertained that the village lay at his mercy, he soon gave full vent to his hatred and vengeance. His warriors scoured the place, killed and scalped all the men they met, to the number of 150, sacked and plundered the houses, and made captives of many boys, women and children. Among the captives were two of the numerous wives of Capaha. They were young and beautiful, and had been prevented from embarking with the Cacique by the confusion and alarm occasioned by the approach of the enemy.

"The hostility of Casquin and his warriors was not confined to the living, but extended to the dead. They broke into the grand sepulcher, or mausoleum, in the public square, which the Indians held so sacred. Here were deposited the remains of the ancestors of the Cacique and of the great men of his tribe, and here were treasured up the trophies gained from the people of Casquin in many a past battle. These trophies they tore down from the walls, and stripped the sepulcher of all its ornaments and treasures. They then threw down the wooden coffins in which were the remains of the dead, trampled upon the bodies, scattered about the bones and wreaked upon them all kinds of insults and indignities, in revenge for past injuries which the deceased had inflicted upon their tribe. At the entrance of the sepulcher were the heads of many of their warriors who had been slain in former battles, and which were here stuck on the ends of pikes as warlike trophies. These they took down and bore away with them, replacing them with the heads of the enemies they had massacred. They had completed their triumph by setting fire to the sepulcher and the whole village, but they were restrained by a fear of offending the Governor. All these outrages were perpetrated before the Spaniards had reached the place. De Soto was much concerned at this ravage of his allies. He immediately sent envoys to Capaha, to the island in which he had fortified himself, with proffers of friendship. They were indignantly rejected, and the Governor learned that the Cacique was summoning all his warriors and breathing vengeance. Finding every effort to conciliate the chieftain fruitless, the Governor determined to attack him in his stronghold. Casquin provided about seventy canoes for the purpose, and an invasion of the island was made by 200 Spaniards and 300 Indians. The island was covered by a dense forest of trees and underwood, and the Cacique had fortified himself strongly with barricades. The Spaniards effected a landing with great difficulty, gained the first barrier by hard fighting, and pressed on to the second, within which the women and children were sheltered. Here the warriors of Capaha fought with redoubled fury, and struck such dismay into the people of Casquin, that they abandoned their Spanish allies and fled to their canoes, nay, they would have carried off the canoes of the Spaniards, also, had there not been a couple of soldiers in each to guard them.

“The Spaniards, thus deserted by their cowardly allies, and being overpowered by numbers, began to retreat in good order to their canoes. They would all have been cut off, had not Capaha restrained the fury of his warriors, and suffered them to regain the shore and embark unmolested. This unexpected forbearance on the part of the savage chief surprised the Adelantado. On the next day four principal warriors arrived on an embassy from Capaha. They came with great ceremony, bowed to the sun, the moon, and the Governor, but took no notice of Casquin, who was present, treating him with utter contempt and disdain. In the name of their Cacique, they prayed oblivion of the past and amity for the future, and declared that their chief was ready to come in person and do homage. The General received them with the utmost affability, assured them of his friendship, and sent them away well pleased with their reception.

"Casquin was vexed at this negotiation, and would fain have prolonged the hostilities between the Spaniards and his ancient enemies, but the Governor was as much charmed with the frankness and magnanimity of one Cacique as he had been displeased with the craft and cruelty of the others. He issued orders forbidding any one to injure the natives of the province or their possessions.

"In order to appease the Governor for the dastardly flight of his warriors, Casquin made him presents of fish, together with mantles and skins of various kinds, and moreover brought him one of his daughters as a handmaid. De Soto was, however, not thoroughly to be reconciled. He permitted the Cacique to remain with him, and retain about him a sufficient number of vassals for his personal service, but obliged him to send home all his warriors.

"On the following morning Capaha came to the Governor at the village, attended by a train of 100 warriors, decorated with beautiful plumes and with mantles of all kinds of skins. He was about twenty-six years of age, of noble person and fine demeanor. On entering the village, his first care was to visit the sepulcher of his ancestors. The indignities that had been offered to their remains are such as an Indian feels most acutely. The Cacique, however, concealed the grief and rage that burned within his bosom. Gathering up the scattered bones in silence, he kissed them, and returned them reverently to the coffins, and having arranged the sepulcher as well as circumstances would permit, proceeded to the quarters of the Governor, who came forth to meet him accompanied by Casquin."

[Here follows an account of the interview.]

“While in the territory of Capaha, the Governor gathered intelligence from the Indians that, at about forty leagues’ distance, among certain ranges of hills, there was much salt and also much of a yellowish metal. As the army was suffering for the want of salt, and still retained their eagerness for gold, De Soto despatched two trusty and intelligent men, Hernando de Silvera and Pedro Moreno, accompanied by Indian guides, to visit this region. At the end of eleven days they returned quite spent and half-famished, having eaten nothing but green plums and green maize, which they found in some squalid wigwams. Six of their Indian companions were laden with rock salt in natural crystals, and one with copper. The country through which they passed was sterile and thinly peopled, and the Indians informed the Governor that still further on to the west the country was almost uninhabitable on account of the cold; that buffalo roamed there in such numbers that the natives could not cultivate fields of maize; they subsisted, therefore, by the chase, and principally on the flesh of these wild animals.

“Hearing this unfavorable account of the country, and that there was no gold in that direction, De Soto returned with the army to the village of Casquin, to strike from thence westward, for hitherto, ever since leaving Mauvila, he had kept northward to avoid the sea. After sojourning five days in the village of Casquin, he proceeded four days down the bank of the river, through a fertile and populous country, until he came to the province of Quiguate, where he was well received. Keeping down the river for five days longer, he came, on the 4th of August, to the chief village of the province, called by the same name. Here he took up his quarters during six days in the house of the Cacique.

“From Quiguate De Soto shaped his course to the northwest, in search of a province called Caligoa, lying at the foot of the mountain, beyond which he thought that there might be a gold region. He was guided by a single Indian, who led the army for several days through dreary forests and frequent marshes until they came to the village of Caligoa, on the margin of a small river. The natives, not being apprised of the coming of the Spaniards, threw themselves into the river on their approach and fled. The troopers pursued them, and took a number of prisoners of both sexes. In a few days the Cacique came to wait upon De Soto, bringing him a present of mantles, deer skins and hides of the bison, and informed him that about six leagues to the northward was a thinly populated country where vast herds of wild buffalo ranged; but that to the southward there was a populous and plentiful province called Cayas. The Cacique of Caligoa furnishing the Spaniards with a guide, they resumed their travel, striking toward the south, and after a journey of five days entered the province of Palisema. The Cacique had fled, but had left his dwelling furnished and arrayed in order for De Soto. They made but a short halt in this province, as the supply of maize was scanty, and pushing onward rapidly, in four days crossed the frontier of the province of Cayas, and encamped on the banks of a river near a village called Tenico."

De Soto and his band had now reached White River, in the present State of Arkansas, and thence marched southeastwardly to the banks of the "Grand River," where, in the following spring, he succumbed to the miasma of the swamps, and died.

After a study of the above narrative, Henry R. Schoolcraft, the explorer and scientist, wrote as follows: "The track of De Soto has been a question of much discussion. The march west of the Mississippi has been generally deemed to be very obscure in the Spanish narrative. Having, in early life, made my first exploratory trip in ranging among the semi-Alpine group of mountainous hills in Missouri and Arkansas called Ozark, which were the scenes of De Soto's marches, the route has assumed to me a more definite character. The route was partly governed by the geological formation of the country, and in some measure, also, by the ancient Indian trails and paths, which later gave direction to the routes of the earliest modern roads. After crossing at the Lower Chickasaw bluffs, he marched five days on an Indian trail, over the alluvians of the Mississippi, west to the hill country of the St. Francois, and reached the site of Casqui, probably a location of the Illinois Indians (Kaskaskias). He followed the wily chief of this village northeastwardly, against his enemies, the Capahas (Quappas). on a bayou of the Mis-

Jacob Hamby

MISSISSIPPI CO.

Mississippi, difficult to approach from that quarter. This was evidently about seventy miles above his original landing point. He then returned southwest to the Casqui; then marched south to Quiguate, probably near Black River. Hearing fresh reports of mineral wealth, he now marched northwest to Caligoa, on the source of the St. Francois. This was his most northern point. He was now at the foot of the peaks of St. Francois County, Mo., celebrated in modern times for the iron mountain and the lead and cobalt mines of La Motte. He now marched south in search of a rich province called Cayas (Kansas), and probably crossed the White River Valley at Tenico."

The route, described with reference to modern places, seems to have been about as follows: He crossed the Mississippi at Memphis, and marched northwardly to the St. Francois or Little River, to the village of Casquin; thence to the seat occupied by Capaha, which seems to be identical with the village on Bayou St. John, the remains of which are still visible, and which are described elsewhere. There are some, however, who locate the village of Capaha in the vicinity of Cape Girardeau. Be that as it may, the two men sent out for salt doubtless reached the Saline of Ste. Genevieve County. After their return, De Soto retraced his steps to Casquin, and continued down Little River and St. Francois to Quiguate, probably on the latter stream, instead of on Black River, as located by Schoolcraft. Here, changing his course, he marched northwest, and probably traversed Butler, Wayne and Madison Counties, while his return route could not have been far from the line followed by the Iron Mountain Railroad.

After the retreat of De Soto, for a century and a half the Casquins and the Capahas were undisturbed by foreign invader. But what occurred between these tribes will never be known. If it be true, as conjectured by Schoolcraft, that the Casquins were the Kaskaskias, and the Capahas were the Quappas, a tribe of the Decotahs, the former must have migrated across the river into Illinois, and the latter northward, for Marquette and other early voyagers make no mention of any Indian tribes occupying the west bank of the Mississippi in this section.

When the settlement of Missouri was begun there was no tribe between the Osages and the Mississippi River. The Osages lived among the Ozarks. They were divided into two bands, the Little Osages and the Great Osages, the latter of whom had their permanent encampment on the Osage River. They were of the same stock as the Sioux, and were generally hostile to the whites. Physically they were a fine race, and were the most distinctive people among the red men of all this region. The term Osage is of French origin, and is said to be a translation of the Algonquin term, Assinijun, or Bone Indians.

In the year 1787 the Spanish government, to protect the settlements against the hostile incursions of these Indians, invited a band of 1,200 Shawnese and 600 Delawares to remove from the Miami country in Ohio to Upper Louisiana, which invitation the Indians were not slow to accept. The French, for whom they always had a strong attachment, had been driven out of Ohio, and some of the traders had sought refuge in the country beyond the Mississippi. These the Indians were ready to follow. They were placed under the direction of Louis Lormier, and were distributed along the frontier from the Meramec to the Arkansas. They lived in villages, some of a half dozen families, others of a much larger number. One, known to the French as Le Grand Village Sauvage (the big Indian village), was situated not far from the present town of Uniontown, in Perry County, and contained at one time as many as 500 inhabitants. This was a Shawnese village, and a sister of the great chief, Tecumseh, resided here. She was a famous beauty, remarkable for her intelligence, and while on a visit to some of her tribe near New Madrid, was wooed and won by a French Creole, Francois Maisonville. They were married according to the Indian custom. At about this time Tecumseh visited Upper Louisiana to induce the various tribes to join in the war against the whites, and hearing of the marriage of his sister, became greatly incensed, and forced her to return to her old home. She remained for a few months, but before the end of the year returned to her husband. They lived happily together for many years, and reared a family of five or six children.

There were two or three small villages of both Delawares and Shawnese in the northern portion of Cape Girardeau County. There was also a village of Shawnese on Castor River, in Stoddard County, at what is known as Shawnee ford, while the Delawares had a small encampment near the site of Bloomfield. Chilliticaux, or Chilledecoux, with a small band of Delawares, was located in Dunklin County, close to where Kennett now is.

The Delawares and Shawnese were known to the French as Loups and Chawanons. They were ever the close friends of the French, and, with rare exceptions, were never known to molest the American settlers. They lived in small, square huts, made of poles, and without chimneys. They possessed large droves of ponies, and were fond of horse racing. In the fall of the year they used to meet in large numbers at what was called Price's old field, on Little Saline Creek, in Perry County, and have races, which continued several days, and not infrequently did the Americans join them.

The women were more handsome and better formed than the females of other tribes. They cultivated small patches of corn, and other vegetables, and were civilized to a degree greater than any other tribe in the West. The men, however, spent the greater portion of their time in hunting and trapping. They did their trading at Ste. Genevieve and New Madrid. Their spoils in winter consisted of furs, bear and deer skins, in summer honey and bear's oil, which they cased in deer skins, dressed whole, and tied at the openings with raw hide.

The men dressed in deer skins, wearing leggins, a breech cloth and hunting shirt, and in cold weather a blanket; in summer, a sort of red blouse trimmed with white and blue beads. Their feet were incased in moccasins. The women were very fond of decoration, and wore an abundance of brilliant feathers and silver trinkets.

The Shawnese had two great yearly feasts: the first in the spring when sowing their grain, which was called "Le feu nouveau" (the new fire); the second occurred when the corn changed color, "Fete du petit blé" (the feast of small wheat).

Of the crimes committed on the frontiers of Upper Louisiana, very few can be charged upon the Shawnese or Delawares, the most of them having been perpetrated by bands of renegade Creeks and Chickasaws, who occasionally made raids into the county. On one occasion a Shawnee, named Little George, who lived at the Big Village, in Perry County, killed the wife of Andrew Burns, a farmer living three miles north of Jackson. Mrs. Burns and a young lady were sitting together under a tree near the house, when the Indian stealthily approached from behind and, catching Mrs. Burns by the hair, dragged her a short distance away, and stabbed her with a butcher knife. News of the murder spread like wildfire, and intense excitement prevailed throughout the settlement. A company of militia went out from Jackson to the Big Village, and took two or three of the leading braves as hostages for the surrender of the murderer. He had made his escape, but this act of the settlers put the Indians in pursuit, and in a few days they returned from the swamp country with a human head, which they asserted was that of Little George. It was accepted as such, and was placed upon a pole in Jackson, where it remained for several months. It was supposed the murder was planned by a white man, and that the murderer was bribed to commit the deed. This occurred only a short time before the removal of the tribe. After the transfer of Upper Louisiana to the United States, the Shawnese and Delawares laid claim to a grant from the Spanish authorities, to satisfy which the Federal Government gave them a tract fifty miles square on the Kansas River. To this grant a portion of these tribes removed, while the remainder emigrated to Arkansas. The removal from Cape Girardeau and Ste. Genevieve Counties took place in 1824, but those Indians living in what are now Stoddard and Dunklin Counties lingered some ten years longer.

In evidence of the high esteem in which the Shawnese were held by the Spanish governor is the following from Gayoso:*

Don Manuel Gayoso de Lamos, Brigadier de las Real Exercitos, Gobernador General, Vice Patrono Real de las Provincias de la Louisiana y Florida Occidental, Inspector de las Tropas Veteranas y Milicias de Ellas.

Aux Chefs et hommes consideres, de la Nation Chawanons, resident dans le Ferritore de S. M. C. des Illinois:

Mes Chers Enfants: J'ai recu la parole que vous m'avez envoyée par les gens de votre nation, qui sont descendus ici: je les ai vus avec beaucoup de plaisir, parce que j'aimee votre nation.

Je vois que vous souvenez de moi, que vous suivez toujours la voie du bon sens, et que vous etes disposés a profiter des bons conseils.

Oui, mes enfants, je vous chéris, et je vous distingue parmi ceux qui ne font que courir, perdant leur temps, et écoutant qui les détourne du chemin de leur chasse, et de leur labourage, et de la paix; mais je suis bien aise que mes enfants les Chowanons, ne soient pas de même.

Je suis bien aise de les voir parmi, mes enfants blancs, et faire leurs champs ensemble. J'ai donné mes ordres au Lieutenant-Gouverneur des Illinois pour qu'il vous regarde avec tendresse, et vous traite comme des blancs, puisque vous vous conduisez comme eux. Malgré que j'aie dit tout ceci à vos gens ici, je le mets par écrit, pour que cela ne s'oublie pas.

Mes chers enfants, que le soleil brille tous jours sur vous: puissiez vous faire une bonne chasse: que votre feu soit toujours allumé, et que vos chemins soient toujours blancs et unis.

Don Emanuel Gayoso de Lamos, Brigadier of the Royal Service, Governor General, Royal Vice-Regent of the Provinces of Louisiana and West Florida, Inspector of Veteran and Militia forces of the same:

To the Chiefs and the notable men of the Shawnese Nation, residents of the Territory of Her C. M. of the Illinois.

My dear children: I have received the talk which you have sent me through the people of your nation who have come down here; I have seen them with much pleasure, for I love your nation.

I see that you remember me, and that you still follow the path of good sense, and that you are disposed to profit by good counsels.

Yes, my children, I cherish you and I set you apart from those who are roving, squandering their time, and listening to whoever turns them away from their hunting paths, and from plowings and from peace, but I am much pleased that my children, the Chowanons, are not so. I am very glad to see them among my white children, tilling their fields together.

I have given my orders to the Lieutenant Governor of the Illinois, that he should regard you with tenderness, and should treat you the same as white men, since you behave the same.

Although I have said all this to your people here, I put it in writing so that it shall not be forgotten.

My dear children: May the sun ever shine on you; may you have a profitable hunt; may your fire never go out, and may your paths be always white and smooth.

MANUEL GAYOSO DE LAMOS.

In New Orleans, the 17th of May, 1799.

During the early settlement of Ste. Genevieve, a small band of Peorias took up their residence in and about the town and on the bluffs fronting the "Big Field." Upon the organization of the courts, in 1805, an order was made requiring them to remove from the town within one month, and in case they did not obey the constable was ordered to demolish their huts.

Ste. Genevieve District.—From the time of De Soto until 1720 no white man, except, perchance, some Coureur-des-Bois, visited the territory now denominated Southeast Missouri. To be sure, voyages of exploration had been made by Marquette, La Salle and others, but accounts of their travels make small mention of this region, and it does not appear that they gave it much attention. In 1717 the famous "Company of the West" was established, and soon after the "Company of St. Phillips" was organized, under its patronage, for the prosecution of the mining business in Upper Louisiana. Of the latter company Phillip Francis Renault was the agent and manager. He left France in 1719 with 200 mechanics and miners. At St. Domingo he purchased 500 slaves, and with this force, he arrived the following year in the Illinois, and established himself near Fort Chartres. He at once sent exploring parties across the river in search of gold and silver. One of these was headed by M. La Motte, who discovered the lead mines which still bear his name. Considerable excavations were also made at Potosi, but no precious metals were found. Renault finally turned his attention wholly to smelting lead, which he made in considerable quantities. About 1731 the "Company of the West" was united with the Royal Company of the Indies, and to the consolidated company was given the exclusive privilege of commerce and mining in the Mississippi Valley. Renault remained, as stated elsewhere, until 1742, when he returned to France.

Notwithstanding these extensive mining operations, no permanent settlement was made in the vicinity of the mines, but it was on the banks of the great "Father of Waters" that the foundation of the first civilized community in Missouri was laid. At what time this occurred is not definitely known, but the year 1735 has long been the generally accepted date. The place was at the old village of Ste. Genevieve (Le vieux village de Ste. Genevieve), situated about three miles south of the present town of that name, in what is known as the Big Field.

The oldest legal document relating to the old town that could be found is in the possession of Mrs. Menard, of Ste. Genevieve. It is an account of the sale to Jean Baptiste St. Gem of a house and lot belonging to the estate of Laurant Gabouri in December, 1754. The property is described as located in the village of Ste. Genevieve, which proves that it was an established place at that time, and had been settled for several, perhaps many, years.

The following note from Capt. St. Gem, of Ste. Genevieve, furnishes a possible clue to the time at which the settlement was made. He says:

"Late in the fall of 1881, Leon Jokerst, a citizen of Ste. Genevieve, while hunting along the river at the site of the old town or where a portion of the same still remained, not having yet fallen a prey to the rapid abrasion of the river at this point, noticed, where the bank had just caved in, that an old well of stone masonry was left standing, like an old chimney or tower. As this uncovered ruin was next to the shore, and accessible, curiosity impelled him to examine it, when he found cut distinctly on one of the top stones the figures 1732, which doubtless related to the date at which this was built. Mr. Jokerst chipped off a small piece of the stone, which he has produced, with a written memorandum attached thereto, but it is to be regretted that the whole stone, which was soon swept away by the strong current and floating ice, had not been saved, for it certainly would have been appreciated as a valuable relic, indicating the old part of Ste. Genevieve may have been settled as early as 1732."

In 1825 the following deposition, now on file in the office of Register of Lands, was taken with reference to the settlement of Ste. Genevieve:

Julien Labriere, being sworn, says he is fifty-six years of age, and that he was born in the old village of Ste. Genevieve, which place was built about where the lower ferry is at present: that when he first had any recollection, he remembers seeing a man, then very old, named Baptiste La Rose, who was the first settler in the old village. About fifty years ago, there were fifty or sixty cabins in the old village. About forty-one years ago, the bank having caved in very much, the inhabitants were compelled to think of removing from the old village, and A. D. 1784, three men, Loisset, Maurice Chatillion and Jacques Boyer, removed from the old village of Ste. Genevieve, and built houses on the lots at present occupied by Grifford, Doget and Vuive Leclere. Oro was then the commandant. The following year after the commencement of the settlement of the new village was "L'Annee des Grandes Eaux." The old village was overflowed so as to be on the tops of houses. A boat of Mr. Chouteau arrived at this time, and they made the boat fast to the top of the chimney, and climbed on the roof of the houses, of old Andre, in the Big Field. The water in many places was twelve or fifteen feet deep.

THEO. HUNT, Recorder, L. T.

The transfer of the territory of the Illinois east of the Mississippi to England, in 1765, caused a considerable emigration from the old town, on that side of the river, to St. Louis and Ste. Genevieve. They were under the impression that the country west of the Mississippi still belonged to France, and had they known of the claims of Spain, it would have made little difference, as nothing to the French mind was worse than British rule.

Prior to this time the civil business of Ste. Genevieve had been transacted at Kaskaskia, but in May, 1766, a post was established, and Rocheblave installed as the first commandant. The first legal proceedings of record occurred on the 19th of May, 1766, M. Robinet being notary and greffier, when Pierre Roy and Jeanette Lalonde signed a marriage contract. The first sale of land was made by Pierre Aritfone to Henri Carpentier. Another was made by Joseph Le Don to Le Febre du Couquette. During the same year, salt works on the Saline, together with ten negroes and some cattle, were sold to one Blowin by John Lagrange.

Rocheblave continued in command at Ste. Genevieve until near the close of the year 1769, when the Spanish Government assumed possession of Upper Louisiana. Joseph Labruxiere then assumed the functions of judge of the post, and appointed Cabazie notary and greffier. Early the next year, however, Don Francois Valle, père, who for some time had been a resident of the town, was appointed commandant, and continued in that position until his death in September, 1783. His successor was Don Francisco Cartobona de Oro, who in turn was succeeded by Don Henri Peyroux, afterward commandant at New Madrid. These two officers, together, served about five years, and in 1788 Don Francois Valle, fils, became the commandant. He continued in that capacity until his death, on March 6, 1804, only four days before Captain Stoddard took possession of Upper Louisiana. He was succeeded by his brother, Jean Baptiste Valle.

As mentioned in the deposition of Labriere, the village of Ste. Genevieve was removed from its original site, but he was, doubtless, mistaken in the supposition that the removal was caused by the abrasions of the river. Although the old site has now entirely disappeared, the encroachment of the waters upon this bank began at a comparatively recent date. The inhabitants of the old town began to transfer themselves to the new in 1785, "l'annee des grandes eaux," when the waters extended from bluff to bluff, completely inundating the old town. Some of the towns on the east bank of the river, Kaskaskia, Cahokia and Ft. Chartres, suffered severely from this flood, and a considerable number of the inhabitants sought refuge from a repetition of the disaster in the new town of Ste. Genevieve. Among the original settlers of the old and the new village of Ste. Genevieve were Francois Valle, père, Jean Baptiste and Vital St. Gem de Beauvais, Jean Baptiste Pratte, Nicholas Janis, Laurent Gabouri, Jacques and Nicholas Boyer, Louis Bolduc, Perfoit Dufour, Andre, Peter and Paul De Guire, Jean Baptiste Thormure, August, Antoine and Baptiste Obuchon, Jacques Guibourd and John and Israel Dodge.

The Valle family was one of the most prominent and influential. As stated above, Francois Valle, Sr., and his sons, Francois Valle, Jr., and Jean Baptiste Valle, all served as commandants of the post. Francois Valle, Jr., resided on South Gabouri Creek, in a large, one-story frame building with wide galleries. He married Louise Carpentier in 1777, and reared a family of several children. The daughters married, respectively, Robert T. Brown, who became a prominent citizen of Perry County; Dr. Walter Fenwick, who was killed in a duel with Thomas T. Crittenden; Joseph Pratte, son of J. B. T. Pratte, and Capt. Wilkinson. Francois Valle, Jr., died on March 6, 1804, and was buried under his pew in the old Catholic Church at Ste. Genevieve.

Jean Baptiste Valle married Jane Barbau, and both lived to be very old. He was a prosperous merchant. There was a third son of Francois Valle, Sr., named Charles, who married Pelagie Carpenter in 1769, and a daughter, Marie Louise, who married Francois Leclere in 1776.

The St. Gems emigrated from Beauvais, in France, to Canada, where they were known as St. Gem de Beauvais, or St. Gem Beauvais. Some members of the family finally dropped the St. Gem and became known as Beauvais. Jean Baptiste St. Gem came to Kaskaskia, and in 1725 married Louise La Croix at Ft. Chartres or Ft. St. Phillip. They had a family of five sons and two daughters. Two of the sons, Jean Baptiste St. Gem, Jr., and Vital St. Gem, or, as often written, Vital Beauvais, came from Kaskaskia soon after the capture of that place by Gen. Clark. The former is said to have built the first grist mill in the old town, and consequently the first west of the Mississippi. The house which he built in the new village is still standing, occupied by negroes. He was commissioned one of the first judges of the court of common pleas and quarter-sessions, and continued in office until his death. He was the father of six sons, Raphael, Joseph M. B., Bartholomew, Vital, John B. and August.

Vital St. Gem first located at the Saline, but about 1791 came to Ste. Genevieve and built the house where Mrs. Menard now lives. He died in 1816. John B. Pratte came to Ste. Genevieve between 1750 and 1760, and for many years was a successful merchant. He was chairman of the first board of trustees for Ste. Genevieve, and held various other local offices. He reared a large family, and his descendants are numerous. His sons were Bernard, Joseph, Antoine, Bileron, and Henry, who became a Catholic priest.

Nicholas Janis was an early resident of Kaskaskia, and also, it is thought, of Ste. Genevieve. He had three sons, Francois, Antoine, and Baptiste, and an equal number of daughters: Felicite, who married Vital St. Gem; Catharine, who married Stephen Bol-due, and Francoise, who became Madam Durocher.

Probably the first American settlers in Ste. Genevieve were John and Israel Dodge, brothers, who came as early as 1788. Not much could be learned of the former. Israel Dodge was born on Block Island, and while a youth made a trip on a slaver to the coast of Africa. He afterward served in the American Army during the Revolution, and about its close came to the western country. He married Nancy Hunter, a sister of Joseph Hunter, a pioneer of New Madrid County, but, for some cause not now known, he was divorced from her after the birth of a son. He then came to Ste. Genevieve, where he died in 1806. He was the first sheriff of the district, and was succeeded by his son, Henry Dodge. The latter had a remarkable career. He possessed a strong liking for military life, and in 1806, accompanied by John Smith, went to New Madrid to join Burr's expedition, thinking it a legitimate enterprise, but, warned by Jefferson's proclamation, returned home. In September, 1812, he was appointed major of territorial militia, and took an active part in the operations against the Indians. Toward the close of the war, he was promoted to rank of brigadier-general to date from January 17, 1814. After the return of peace, he was engaged in the manufacture of salt at the Saline. In 1827 he removed to Fever River Lead Mines, in Wisconsin. In 1832 he was commissioned major of United States Rangers, and on March 4, 1833, made colonel of First United States Dragoons. When the Territory of Wisconsin was organized, he was appointed its governor by President Jackson, and so continued until 1841. During the next four years he served as a delegate to Congress, and from 1845-47 as governor again. He then served in the United States Senate from the admission of Wisconsin to the Union, until 1857. He died June 18, 1867, at the age of eighty-five years. His wife was Christiana McDonald, by whom he was the father of nine children that grew to maturity. The fourth child, who was born January 2, 1812, was named Augustus Cæsar. He was educated in the Hertich Academy, and subsequently married Clara Hertich, a daughter of the founder. He then removed to Iowa, from which State, from 1840 to 1848, he was a delegate to Congress, and from the latter date until 1855 was in the United States Senate. Afterward he went as a minister to Spain, under President Pierce. Closely connected with the history of Henry Dodge, is that of another eminent gentleman, Lewis F. Linn, his half-brother, who was born near Louisville, Ky., November 5, 1795. His grandfather was Col. William Linn, who served under Gen. Clark. His father was Ashael Linn, who, with three others, was captured by the Shawnee Indians, near Louisville, and held prisoners for three years. After his escape, he married the former wife of Israel Dodge. Lewis F. Linn adopted medicine as his profession, and in 1815 located in Ste. Genevieve. He was a remarkably handsome man, and exceedingly popular. In 1830 he was elected to the State Senate, and from 1833 till his death, in 1843, represented Missouri in the United States Senate. He was buried at Ste. Genevieve, and the State has erected a monument to him, bearing the inscription: "Here lie

the remains of Lewis F. Linn, the Model Senator of Missouri."*

During the French Revolution in 1789, a large number of the aristocracy was forced to fly from France, and some of these unfortunates reached Ste. Genevieve. The most illustrious of the fugitives was Don Pierre Carlos De Hault, "Seigneur de Lassus de Luziere, Chevalier de grand croix de l'ordre royal de St. Michel," and a member of a family dating their nobility from the time of Henry III. He fled to Spain, where his son held high rank in the army. There he was appointed commander of the post of "La Nouvelle Bourbon" which was erected expressly for him, and named in honor of the tyrannical dynasty that had just fallen. He was the father of Charles De Hault De Lassus, the last lieutenant-governor of Upper Louisiana. The latter entered the Spanish army as a cadet, and was promoted to be second lieutenant in a battalion of guards in 1788, second lieutenant of grenadiers of the Royal Guards in 1794, captain of infantry in the regiment of Louisiana in 1795, and colonel of the regiment in 1802.†

The commandant at New Bourbon had a second son, Camille De Lassus, who came with his father to America. He reared several children, and some of his descendants still live in Perry County.

The post of New Bourbon was situated two or three miles south of Ste. Genevieve, on the bluffs overlooking the Mississippi. It became a beautiful little village, but it ceased to exist many years ago.

Prior to the transfer of Upper Louisiana to the United States, the number of American settlers in Ste. Genevieve District was not large. As Cape Girardeau was the most distinctively American settlement, so Ste. Genevieve was the most distinctively French. The language, customs, and domestic economy were all French. Descriptive of the character and customs of these early set-

*It may be noted in this connection that two other citizens of Ste. Genevieve have reached the United States Senate, George W. Jones and Lewis V. Bogy. The latter is mentioned in another chapter. George W. Jones was born at Vincennes in 1804, and is the son of John Rice Jones. He removed to Ste. Genevieve in 1826, and married Josephine Gregoire, a daughter of an old family. In 1830 he removed to Iowa, and in 1835 was elected delegate to Congress from Michigan Territory, of which Iowa then formed a part. In 1839 was appointed surveyor of Northwest Territory, by Van Buren. Removed in 1841, reinstated in 1845, and held till 1849. He was one of the first Senators from Iowa, and from 1859 to 1861 was minister to Bogota, U. S. C. He is still living in Iowa.

† He served as commandant at New Madrid from 1797 to 1799 and from 1799 to 1804, was lieutenant-governor.

tlers, Gen. Rozier, himself a descendant of this ancien noblesse, says: "They were all remarkable for their strong constitution, simplicity of manners, honesty of purpose and hospitality; endowed naturally with good minds, without the advantages of an education they were free from ostentation and excess of pleasures except such as were of an innocent character. Their dress was remarkably plain; they wore heavy cotton or gingham pants, without the support of suspenders, but fastened by a belt or clasp about the waist; without vests; a blue or colored skirt, a white Mackinaw blanket with a capuchon, and moccasin shoes completed the toilet of the citizens of early Ste. Genevieve. The apparel of the women of those days was simplicity itself, and would cause a smile from our fair ones, could it be seen to-day. They wore a cotton or calico dress, their shoulders and breasts ornamented with a mantlet, neck adorned with a rich Madras handkerchief, and their feet incased in beautiful moccasin shoes. Those of advanced age, of both sexes, wore a blue or Madras handkerchief, which encircled their heads.

"The occupations of the patriarchs of Ste. Genevieve were as cultivators of the soil, and voyagers with barges and keel-boats to the city of New Orleans, and traders of goods for furs, peltries and lead, the latter being the money of the country. They encountered many privations, and passed through the ordeal of many romantic adventures of a savage life, and well deserved the appellation of the 'pioneers of the West.'

"They possessed great industry and hospitality of character, and were the pioneers of all great commercial enterprises in the far West. They felled the forests, excavated mines, established trading posts, planted the standards of civilization along the banks of our great rivers. Their intellect was of a strong and vigorous character; they had honesty of purpose, and their promises and engagements were kept most sacredly and religiously. They were the gallant sons of France and the compeers of La Fayette."

It is true America owes very much to her French pioneers. They made explorations and established settlements far in advance of the English. They, better than any other European people, understood the Indian character, and were in sympathy with it. Their coureur-des-bois mixed with the Indians, took their daughters for wives, and gained their love and admiration. This, no doubt, saved the frontier settlers from many hardships and much bloodshed. But the race has never been successful in colonization, in subduing the wilderness, in developing the country. The early French settler was not enamored of an agricultural life. It required too much isolation. He was too fond of society and companionship. Therefore, although a tiller of the soil, he opened no farm upon which he established himself, but lived in a town or village, and cultivated a portion of a common field which lay adjacent. He frequently engaged in mining, not regularly and systematically, but spasmodically. It afforded him ready money and did not deprive him of his cherished companionship. But it was in commercial enterprise that he found his element. He was a born trader. In this business he would undergo the severest hardships and brave the greatest dangers uncomplainingly. In many instances large fortunes were amassed. He cared little for education, and often could barely write his name; but there was nothing stupid or commonplace about him—quite the contrary. He was bright, vivacious, shrewd and active. He was polite, hospitable and fond of entertaining, and, taken all in all, was an excellent companion, and a thoroughly honest and courageous man.

The French women were industrious, devout and virtuous, and were equally as fond of social pleasures as the men. Dancing was the most common entertainment, and all indulged in it, especially during the carnival season, which was introduced by the "Gaie-annee." The Gaie-annee was a song and dance, performed by the young men, dressed in fantastic costumes, on New Year's Eve. They assembled together and visited each family in turn, accompanied by an increasing number of young ladies and others who did not participate in the dance. In this song a contribution was solicited, and usually provisions of some sort were given to provide for a ball to be held a week later, and known as the king's ball. For the king's ball a cake was baked containing four beans. This was cut, and the gentlemen receiving the pieces containing the beans were made the kings of the next ball. Each king selected his queen, and it was customary for him to make her some present. These kings and queens gave the next ball, usually the following week, and opened it with the first dance. At 12 o'clock the kings and queens again took the floor, and at the end of the dance each queen presented a bouquet to some gentleman. As the bouquet was presented, the cry of "Vive le Roi" was set up. The parties to whom the bouquets were presented were expected to give the next ball, and so it was continued to the end of the season. The custom of singing the Gaie-annee is still maintained, but it has lost some of its early features. The origin of the song is not known, but it is supposed to have come from Canada. The following is the song:

THE GAIE-ANNE EOR GUIGNOLEE.

Bonsoir le maitre et la maitresse,
 Et tout le monde du logis;
 Pour le dernier* jour de l'annee,
 La gaie-annee vous nous devez.
 Si vous ne voulez rien a nous donner, dites-nous le,
 Nous vous demandons pas grand chose, une echinee.
 Une echinee n'est pas grand chose,
 Ce n'est que de dix pieds de long;
 Et nous en Ferons une fricassee.
 De quatre-vingt—dix pieds de long.
 Si vous ne voulez nous rien donner dites nous le;
 Nous vous demandons seulement la fille ainee;
 Nous lui ferons faire bonne chere,
 Et nous lui ferons chauffer les pieds,
 Nous lui ferons faire bonne chere
 Et nous lui ferons chauffer les pieds,
 Quand on fut au milieu du bois on fut a l'ombre;
 J'entendis le coucou chanter et la colombe,
 Le Rossignol du vert bocage,
 L'ambassadeur des amoureux,
 Va t'en dire a ma maitresse
 Qu'elle ait toujours le coeur joyeux.
 Qu'elle ait toujours le coeur joyeux; point de tristesse!
 La fille qui n'a pas d'amant; comment vit-elle?
 E'est l'amour qui la reveille
 Et qui l'empêche de dormir,
 C'est l'amour qui la reveille
 Et qui l'empêche de dormir.

EPILOGUE.

 De vouloir bien nous excuser;
 Si vous avons fait quelque folie,
 C'était pour nous desennuyer.

TRANSLATION.

Good evening master, mistress dear,
 And every one that lives here, too;
 For the last day of the year,
 The Gaie-annee, is to us due.
 If you should be unwilling to give us any kind of treat
 We only ask you to bestow a small chine-piece of meat.
 A chine-piece of meat is no great treat,
 Ten feet long is all it will be,
 But we will make it ninety feet
 Of rich and savory fricassee.
 If nothing to us you are willing to give, then let us know;
 We only ask that you to us your eldest daughter show.
 We will give her a pleasant time,
 And we will nicely chafe her feet,
 We will let her have a jolly time,
 And we will quickly warm her feet.
 When I was in the midst of the woods, I was in the shade,
 I heard the cuckoo and the turtle dove cooing in the glade.
 Nightingale of the verdant wood,
 Ambassador of lovers gay,
 Go tell, from me, my own true love
 To have a joyful heart alway.
 Tell her always to have a joyous heart, never to grieve,
 The girl that never had a lover, say, how does she live?
 Her thoughts of love keep her awake
 And do not allow her to sleep.
 Her aimless love keeps her awake
 And chases away gentle sleep.

EPILOGUE.

And now, good company, we pray
 That you will kindly us excuse;
 If we have foolish been and gay,
 It was to drive away the blues.
 Goodnight, master and mistress dear,
 And every one that lives here too;
 On the last day of the parting year
 The Gaie-annee is to us due.

Until near the close of the last century the population of Ste. Genevieve District was concentrated at the villages of Ste. Genevieve and New Bourbon, but with the arrival of American settlers it became more distributed. The districts of Upper Louisiana numbered five. Their limits are defined in the following proclamation, and are practically the same as those of the commandaries under the Spanish domination, except the northern boundary of Ste. Genevieve, which had formerly extended to the Meramee.

BY WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Indiana Territory and of the District of Louisiana.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, by an act of Congress, passed the 26th day of March, 1804, entitled an act to erect Louisiana into two Territories, and providing for the temporary government thereof, it is declared that the district of Louisiana shall be divided into districts by the Governor under the direction of the president. Now, therefore, in conformity to the said recited laws and the direction of the president, I do hereby make known and declare that the said district of Louisiana and the same is hereby divided into five districts, which shall be laid off and bounded in the following manner, viz.:

First. All that part of the said district which lies above the Missouri River shall form one division or district, by the name and style of the district of St. Charles.

Second. Another district, to be called the district of St. Louis, shall be bounded by the Missouri River on the north, and on the south by Platin Creek from its mouth to its source; thence in a due west line to the fork of the river Merrimack, called Arencau, thence up the said Merrimack to the upper settlements on that river; thence in a due west line to the western boundary of Louisiana.

Third. The district of Ste. Genevieve shall be bounded on the north by the last described boundary throughout its whole extent from the mouth of Platin Creek to its termination at the western boundary of Louisiana, and on the south by Apple Creek from its junction with the Mississippi to its source; thence by a due west line to the western boundary of Louisiana.

Fourth. Between the last described boundary and that which has heretofore separated the commandaries of Cape Girardeau and New Madrid, there shall be another district, to be called the district of Cape Girardeau.

Fifth. All that part of the district of Louisiana which lies below the district of Cape Girardeau shall form a fifth district, to be called the district of New Madrid, and the seat of justice for the district of St. Charles shall be at the village of St. Charles, for the district of St. Louis at St. Louis, for the district of Cape Girardeau at such place as may hereafter be appointed, and for the district of New Madrid at the town of New Madrid.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of Indiana Territory to be affixed, at Vincennes, the first day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and four, and of the Independence of the United States the twenty-ninth.

By the Governor, WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON.

JOHN GIBSON, Secretary.

One of the first American settlements in Ste. Genevieve District was made in the vicinity of Big River Mills, in what is now

St. Francois County, by John Alley, Andrew Baker, Francis Starnater and John Andrews. They located their claims in 1794, but did not bring their families until two years later. For a time they all lived in camps with the exception of Andrew Baker, who had erected a house. During the same year, 1796, other families joined them, and a considerable settlement was made along Big River. At this time there was no one authorized to perform the marriage ceremony nearer than Ste. Genevieve, and on March 1, 1797, a wedding party, consisting of Henry Fry and Rebecca Baker, the prospective bride and groom, accompanied by Catharine Miller, Mary and Abraham Baker and William Patterson, set out for that place. When near Terre Bleu they met a band of Indians, who robbed every member of the party of their clothes, except Rebecca and Abraham Baker, and left them otherwise unmolested.

In 1798 Rev. William Murphy, one of the pioneer Baptist ministers of East Tennessee, together with his son William and a friend, Silas George, reached Upper Louisiana, and located claims in the neighborhood of the present town of Farmington. While on their return to Tennessee the elder Murphy and Silas George died. In 1801 David Murphy, another son of Rev. William Murphy, came to what is now St. Francois County, and felled the first tree in what was long known as the Murphy settlement. The next year he was joined by his brothers, Joseph, William and Richard, who began to open farms on grants from the Spanish Government. In 1803 Sarah Murphy, the widow of Rev. William Murphy, resolved to settle on the grant made to her husband and in company with the remainder of the family, consisting of three sons, Isaac, Jesse and Dubart, one or two daughters, a grandson and a negro woman, she set out in a keel boat down the Tennessee River. After a journey full of hardships and peril they landed at Ste. Genevieve, and on January 10, 1804, reached the house of Richard Murphy. About three years after her arrival Mrs. Murphy organized and taught a Sunday-school, the first west of the Mississippi. She was a sister of David Barton, and a woman of great force of character.

Michael Hart and his son Charles located two miles north of Farmington, about the time the Murphys came. Among other early settlers in the vicinity of Farmington were Davis F. Marks, a son-in-law of Hart, Isaac Mitchell, Sr., Isaac Burnham, James Cunningham, Sr., and John Robinson.

In the year 1800 Nathaniel Cook located in the southeast part of the county, in the neighborhood still known as the Cook Settlement. He was followed soon after by James Caldwell, William Holmes, Jesse Blackwell, Elliott Jackson and James Davis. Nathaniel Cook was a prominent and influential citizen. He was one of the first judges of the court of quarter-sessions in Ste. Genevieve, and at the first election for State officers received next to the highest number of votes for lieutenant-governor. He was also a candidate for the United States Senate. He was then living in Madison County, near Fredericktown.

The settlements of Perry County were made contemporaneously with those in St. Francois. The first immigrants were from Pennsylvania and Kentucky. The former located mostly in Bois Brule Bottom. Among them were Michael Burns and his sons, Barnabas, William and James, and his sons-in-law, Thomas Allen, Thomas Cochran, John and Joel Kinnison, William Flynn, Alexander Patterson, Archibald Camster and Alexander McConnoche.

The first settlers from Kentucky were from the southwestern part of that State, in what was known as the "Barrens," and when they reached their new homes they gave the prairie-like country in the vicinity of Perryville the same name. They were nearly all Catholics. One of the first to arrive were the Tuckers. Of these there were two large families. Joseph Tucker with his nine sons, James, Nicholas, William, John, Francis, Peter, Thomas, Joseph and Michael, located west of Perryville. They were tall men, and their settlement became known as the "Long Tucker Settlement," in contradistinction to the other family, who lived south of Perryville, and were short of stature. Another numerous family were the Moores. Among them were James, Benedict, Isadore, Nicholas and Bede, all of whom had wives and children. Isadore Moore was a prominent citizen; represented Ste. Genevieve County in the Territorial Legislature prior to the organization of Perry County. There were also a large number of Laytons—John, Ignatius, Bernard and Zachariah, and of the Hagans, Michael, Aquilla and Joseph. Bernard and Lewis Cissell, Charles Brewer, Thomas Riney and John Manning were among the others who came at about the same time. A few years later the Farrars, Abernathys, Caldwells, Venables and Clines, came from North Carolina.

John Logan, a connection of Gen. John A. Logan, and his brothers, Robert and James, were among the early residents in the southeast part of the county. John Logan married the widow of Louis Lorimier and daughter of Francois Berthiaume, who had a Spanish grant on Apple Creek, and was there engaged in running a mill for some years prior to his removal to Illinois.

A settlement was made in what is now Saline Township, Ste. Genevieve County, about the beginning of the present century, and long known as New Tennessee. Among the first settlers were Peter Bloom, who came from Maryland, and Thomas Mad-din, an early resident of Ste. Genevieve, and a man of great wealth. The latter was deputy surveyor under Soulard, and owned a mill on the River Aux Vases.

Nicholas Counts and two or three brothers, Joseph Hughes, Jesse Bryant, William Painter, Elder Wingate Jackson, a pioneer Baptist preacher, John McFarland, a pioneer Methodist preacher, and John and Edward Walch were also early in this vicinity.

Probably the first settlement in Madison other than the mining communities, which were constantly shifting, was made by John Calloway, who came from Kentucky, and located on Saline Creek, as early as 1799. He served as a judge of the court of quarter-sessions of Ste. Genevieve District in 1806, and was sheriff of Madison County.

William Dillon and John Mathews came from South Carolina a year or two later.

About the year 1800 a grant of 400 arpents was made to each of thirteen individuals, between the Saline Creek and Little St. Francois River. These individuals were Peter Chevalier, Paul De Guire, Andrew De Guire, Baptiste De Guire, Antoine Lachance, Nicholas Lachance, Joseph Lachance, Michael Lachance, Gabriel Nicolli, Peter Veriat, and three whose names could not be found. After the manner of French settlers, they established a village, called St. Michael, and cultivated their land from that.

In 1806 Elijah O'Bannon came from Virginia, and located two miles west of St. Michael, where, in 1818, he built the first brick house in the county. Among other early settlers may be mentioned the Colliers, Pettitts and Friars from Kentucky, the Watts and Anthonys from Virginia, and the Whiteners and Mousers. The last two families located in the south part of the county, the Mousers on the creek which bears their name.

The first settlers within the limits of what is now Iron County were, doubtless, in the Bellview Valley. The first person to take up his home in the Arcadia Valley was Ephraim Stout, a Tennessean, who, in 1805, built a little log-house not far from where the Arcadia Hotel now stands, and near the stream which still bears his name. He went to Illinois in 1826, having sold his land to Josiah Berryman. A short time after Stout made his settlement, Looney Sharp and his sons, Ellison and John, and James Brown, came into the valley. Looney Sharp located on the farm now occupied by Judge Russell. Ellison Sharp made an opening where Leonard Sutton now lives, but in 1824 sold his claim to John Sutton and went to Texas. John Sharp lived where the village of Pilot Knob now is, and James Brown on the spot now occupied by the residence of Judge Emerson. The valley was settled very slowly up to 1838, when Col. Cyrus Russell and family came from New England and purchased a large amount of land. He was an enterprising man, and did much to develop the country. After the organization of Arcadia Academy and the opening of the iron mines at Pilot Knob there was a large influx of population.

The German settlement of Southeast Missouri began about fifty years ago, although a few families came to Ste. Genevieve earlier. Chief among the latter were the brothers Zeigler, Mathias, Francis and Sebastian. About 1840 German families began to make settlements in the vicinity of New Offenburg and Zell, which neighborhood has since been known as the "German Settlement." They were mostly of the Catholic faith.

In 1839 a large colony of German Lutherans arrived in Perry County. These people had become dissatisfied with the practices and teachings of the established church, and under the lead of a pastor, Martin Stephan, a pretended reformer, had come to America. Stephan was a knave and a hypocrite, and had previously been suspended by the church authorities, but he possessed a great influence, and when he proposed to immigrate to America, telling the people that it was the voice of God calling them, they flocked to him in great numbers. In the language of the German historian, "Preachers, teachers and public officers resigned their positions and sold their property; physicians gave up their practice; artists and artisans abandoned their work; married men left their wives; parents, their children and children their parents."

In October and November, 1838, the colonists gathered at Bremen to the number of 707—from Dresden, 240; Leipsic, 31; Frohna, 109; Lunzenau, 84; Eichenberg, 108; Paitzdorf, 48; Langenchursdorf, 16; Bräunsdorf, 19, and other places 20. After establishing among themselves a bank of credit, into which were put their combined funds, amounting to nearly $125,000, and making other necessary arrangements, they set out in five ships for New Orleans. All arrived in January, 1839, except the "Amalia," which was the last to sail. She was lost, with all on board. On February 19, 1839, the colonists reached St. Louis, where they remained until June. Meantime many fell sick and died. At the latter date, 4,440 acres in the southeast part of Perry County were purchased for $10,000, which was taken out of the general fund. To this land the colonists, with the exception of about 120 who remained in St. Louis, came. The land was poor, and but little of it cleared. There were few houses, and most of the people were compelled to live in camps, on account of which there was much sickness and many deaths. Here their trouble was much aggravated by the bad management and brutality of Stephan, who, as bishop, had the direction of everything. He was deposed before the end of the year, however, and the colony became more prosperous. Soon after, the land, which had been bought and held in common, was distributed, and still further contributed to the general prosperity.

At about the time of Stephan's expulsion, Rev. Maximilian Oertel, with seventy-five Germans from New York, arrived and established themselves at Wittenberg. Oertel soon after returned to New York, and became a Catholic priest.

In 1880 the number of German born citizens in Perry County was 1,023, about one tenth of the whole population. The proportion in Ste. Genevieve County was about the same. The number of persons of German parentage is much larger in both counties.

Cape Girardeau District.—The settlement of Cape Girardeau dates from 1793. The name, originally applied to the "Big Bend" above the city, was derived, it is tolerably certain, from that of Ensign Sieur Girardot, who from 1704 to 1720 was stationed with the royal troops of France at Kaskaskia, or possibly from that of his son. The name last appears on the records at Kaskaskia, signed to a marriage contract, in 1775. The following scrap from the diary of Matthew Clarkson, a fur trader, afterward mayor of Philadelphia, who visited the Illinois as early as 1766, indicates that Girardot, after resigning his position in the army, became a successful trader among the Indians: "Mons. Jeredot, the elder, who has been a trader for many years among most of the Indian nations about the River Mississippi, informed me, December 22, 1766, that the Osages live on a river of the same name, which falls into the Missouri from the south, at the distance of about sixty leagues from its conflux with the Mississippi." It is, therefore, reasonable to conjecture that "Mons. Jeredot" had a trading point in the Big Bend, or, at least, that he made this cape a rendezvous while trading with the Indians on this portion of the Mississippi. His name thus became associated with the cape, and in its application to a place became transformed into Girardeau. But Girardot was a trader and not a settler, and it is a French Canadian, Don Louis Lorimier, to whom the honor of making the first permanent settlement is due. Lorimier was a remarkable man, and could a complete history of his life be written, it would read like a romance, but all that is positively known of his career prior to his coming to Upper Louisiana is that he was born in the parish of Etienne, district of Montreal, Canada, in the year 1748.* There is good evidence that at the age of twenty-one he immigrated to what is now Shelby County, Ohio, and established a trading post on the portage between the Miami and Maumee Rivers, called Pickawillany. In a preface to "Capt. William Trent's Journal from Logstown to Pickawillany in 1852," published in 1871, the late A. T. Goodman says: "Pickawillany was deserted at this period, the most of the English traders having abandoned the Ohio trade. Not long after, the French commandant at Vincennes, deeming the location a good one, sent some traders to the place, and made a treaty of concord and friendship with the Miamis, lavishing upon them a very large amount of money and a great variety of costly presents. The place, however, did not possess enterprise or spirit, and was not widely known as a trading post until 1769, when a Canadian French trader, named Peter Loramie, established a store there." A "History of Ohio," published several years ago, has the following: "At the time of the first settlement of Kentucky, a Canadian Frenchman, named Loramie, established a store or trading station among the Indians. This man was a bitter enemy of the Americans, and it was for a long time the headquarters of mischief toward the settlers.

*Persistent effort has failed to discover anything concerning the parentage and youth of Lorimier. The first volume of the genealogies of Canada mentions but one person of that name. That is William Lorimier, born in 1695, and a captain in the army. He was the son of William and Jenny (Gullbaut) Lorimier both natives of Paris. This Capt. Lorimier was doubtless either the father or grandfather of Louis Lorimier, as the latter named his eldest son William.

"The French had the faculty of endearing themselves to the Indians, and no doubt Loramie was in this respect fully equal to any of his countrymen, and gained great influence over them. So much influence had Loramie with the Indians that, when Gen. Clark, from Kentucky, invaded the Miami Valley in the autumn of 1782, his attention was attracted to the spot. He came on, burnt the Indian settlement there, and plundered and burnt the store of the Frenchmen. Soon after this Loramie with a colony of the Shawnese immigrated to the Spanish territory west of the Mississippi, and settled in the spot assigned them, at the junction of the Kansas and Missouri Rivers, where the remaining part of the natives from Ohio have at different times joined them."

In a history of the Maumee Valley, by Knapp, is the following: "In 1769 a Canadian French trader, named Peter Loramie, established a store at Pickawillany, situated on the west side of the Great Miami River, at the mouth of Loramie's Creek. He was a man of energy and a good hater of the Americans. For many years he exercised great influence among the Indians. After his arrival the place was called 'Loramie's Station.' During the Revolution Loramie was in full fellowship with the British. Many a savage incursion to the border was fitted out from his supply of war material. So noted had his place become as the headquarters of spies, emissaries and savages, that Gen. Clark, of Kentucky, resolved to pay it a visit, which he did with a large party of Kentuckians in the fall of 1782. The post was taken by surprise, and Loramie barely escaped being made a prisoner. His store was rifled of its contents, and burned to the ground, as were all the other habitations in the vicinity. Poor Loramie shortly afterward removed with a party of Shawnese to a spot near the junction of the Kansas and Missouri Rivers, where he closed his days." These accounts agree very closely, and were, no doubt, drawn from the same source. As there was no settlement of Shawnese Indians at the junction of the rivers named, and as no mention of Peter Loramie, in connection with these Indians, can be found, it is reasonable to conclude that the trader was Louis Lorimier, the first settler of Cape Girardeau; but should there be any doubt about it, the following letter filed at Ste. Genevieve, with other documents relating to the case of Lorimier vs. The Miami Company, ought to set it at rest. The letter is from two members of the company to a third. The company was engaged in the fur trade.

MIAMIS, 4th May, 1787.

Dear Sir:—We learn from common report that you had left Port St. Vincents, with an intention to seize Mr. Louis Lorimier's goods. We have received from him about eight packs, and on our arrival here Mr. Sharp went to see him, on purpose to know his reasons for leaving this country. His reasons appeared to him pretty good, and as he had no property along with him, on purpose to get his peltry and gain his good will, we were induced to advance a few things, as he says, to assist him. A few days after Mr. Sharp left him, he got intelligence of your going to seize his goods, and he wrote a letter expressing his surprise at our duplicity.

What we have to say on the subject is neither more nor less than this, that the Spaniards have invited the Delawares and Shawnese to their side of the Mississippi. With a tribe of the latter Mr. Lorimier goes, and expects the Spaniards will allow him to follow them. If this is the case and he well inclined, we think he may do better than was expected, and as the company means to have somebody there to do this business, it might in some measure atone for the loss of the Port Vincent's (Vincennes) trade, which will never be renewed.

We wrote you yesterday at some length. You will be the best judge how to act in regard to Lorimer, but we think his intentions are honest.

Sir, your very humble servants,

GEORGE SHARP,
THOMAS SHEPHERD.

TO HUGH HEWARD, Mouth Illinois.

It is evident that Lorimier arrived in Ste. Genevieve shortly after the date of the above letter, for his suit to recover the goods seized was entered on the 14th of July, 1787. From a will which he made in October, 1788, it is learned that he took up his residence at the Saline, three or four miles west of St. Mary's. There he remained until early in 1793, when he removed to Cape Girardeau.

Prior to his coming to Upper Louisiana, Lorimier had taken for a wife a half-breed Shawnese woman, named Charlotte Pemanpieh Bougainville, supposed to have been a daughter of a Canadian officer of that name, aid-de-camp to Montcalm. This greatly endeared him to the Indians, and, added to his experience and ability, gained him great power over, not alone the Shawnese, but the various other tribes with whom he came in contact. In 1793 the Spanish official, having learned of his influence over the savages, and recognizing the value his services might be to them, took steps the more firmly to secure his allegiance. This was of the more importance, because Spain was about to declare war against France, and it was feared that the United States would render aid to her late ally, since the French minister, Genet, was even then endeavoring to organize an expedition against Louisiana. Accordingly the following concession was made to Lorimier:

El Baron de Carondelet, Caballero de la religion de San Juan, Coronel de los reales exercitos, Gobernador, Intendente General, Vice Patrone de las provincia de la Luisiana, Florida Occidental e Inspector de sos Tropas, etc.

Baron of Carondelet, Follower of the religion of St. John, Colonel of the royal armies, Governor, Intended General Vice-Regent of the Province of Louisiana and Western Florida, Inspector of the Army, etc.

Know all men by these presents, that in consideration of the true and faithful services which Louis Lorimier has rendered to the State since he became a subject of her Catholic Majesty, we permit him to establish himself with the Delawares and Shawnese who are under his care, in such places as he may think proper in the province of Louisiana on the west bank of the Mississippi, from the Missouri to the River Arkansas, which may be unoccupied, with the right to hunt, and cultivated for the maintenance of their families, nor shall any commandant, officer, or other subject of the king hinder them, nor occupy of the land for him and the said Indians, sown, planted or laid out, so much as is judged necessary for their maintenance; and be it further understood that in case they should remove elsewhere, the said lands shall become vacant, and as for the house, which the said Sir Louis Lorimier has built at Girardeau, it will remain in his possession, nor can he be removed for any causes, except those of illicit trade, or correspondence with the enemies of the State.

In testimony of which we have given these presents, signed with our hand and the countersign of the secretary of the Government, and caused to be affixed our official seal at New Orleans, the 4th of January, 1793.

THE BARON OF CARONDELET

By order of the Governor. Andres Lopez Armesto.

This was followed by a communication from Gov. Tradeau, of which the following is a translation:

ST. LOUIS, May 1, 1793.

The within is a permit which the Governor General gives you to make your trade with the Delawares and the Shawnese, so extended that there may be nothing more to desire, without fear that you will be troubled by any officer of the king as long as you do as you have heretofore done. He recommends you to maintain order among the savages, and to concentrate them, so that he may be sure that they will take position more on the frontier of our settlements in order to lend us help in case of a war with the whites, and they will thus also be opposite the Osages, against whom I shall declare war forthwith, a thing I have not yet done, because I have to take some precautions before that shall reach them. Inform the Delawares, Shawnese, Peorias, Potawattomies and the other nations which presented a memorial, last September, that it is on account of the bad treatment that they have suffered: that the Governor General has determined upon the war, in order to procure quiet for our land; the Osages are at present deprived of aid, and harrassed by us and by them, they will surely be open to reason; that consequently all the red nations must agree to lend a hand; it is their good which the Government seeks; and it is of that that you must convince them, so that the offended nations will take some steps toward the others to secure their aid, and particularly that the Iowas, Sacs and Foxes shall not consent to let the Osages come so far as to trade on the river Des Moines, and that still less shall they allow the English to introduce themselves by that river, which is a possibility.

Protected by the Government, you owe it your services in closely watching over all that tends to its prosperity, and averting everything which is to its detriment. At this moment we fear nothing from Congress, but from the ill-disposed which depend upon it, posted in advantageous places, to give advice of the least assemblage. I am confident that as soon as you are cognizant of it you will make it known to the commandants with whom you are connected, as much for our safety as for our defense.

The Governor has approved of the distribution of the twenty thousand beads, which I have given the Delawares, and to which you have contributed. It has been my intention to reimburse you, and to-day I can do it with greater facility, because they have offered me the means without looking for them elsewhere, so you may draw on me at the rate of six per thousand, which the king has agreed for me to pay.

I am told that you are coming to St. Louis with your savages. Because I am deprived of all merchandise, their visit will be a little embarrassing. Therefore I ask you to come by yourself (when your presence here is necessary) and attend to it, that when the boats arrive you are here to make a suitable present to the savages.

May God take you in his holy keeping.

ZENON TRADEAU.

P. S.—I keep your permit for an occasion to which I can intrust it. It states that you shall not be troubled from the Missouri to the Arkansas in your trade, also in the settlements or encampments which you have formed with the savages, the Shawnees and Delawares, etc., and that you shall be protected at Cape Girardeau.

Mr. Louis Lorimier.

The threatened invasion did not occur, and Lorimier remained quietly at Cape Girardeau, conducting, no doubt, a profitable trade with the Indians. In 1795 he presented a petition to the governor-general for eight thousand arpents of land at Cape Girardeau, fronting on Cypress Island, which was granted. At about this time Spain thought it advisable to populate Upper Louisiana as a barrier to the English in Canada, and accordingly offered great inducements to settlers, especially to those from the United States. She preferred the latter, since their prejudices against the British, which were strong at that time, rendered their attachment to Spanish interests more certain. To them lands were given gratuitously, and they were exempted from taxation. The extent of the concession was usually regulated by the wealth and importance of the settler, the size of his family and his ability to cultivate the land; except for special service, however, it did not often exceed 800 arpents, which is equal to about 680 acres. The only cost to the settler was the fees of office and the surveyor's charges, amounting to about $41. This, however, did not give a complete title. When the settler had actually inhabited, possessed, or cultivated the land for ten years, a confirmation was required. To secure this, it was necessary for the lieutenant-governor to certify the fact of possession for the required time to the proper officer at New Orleans, who issued a patent.

Under these inducements, people from Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky and other States came to Upper Louisiana in large numbers. Of these, the great majority located in Cape Girardeau District, which soon became the most compactly settled section in the whole province. This was doubtless due to the fact that here these pioneers found a country most similar to that which they had left, and no prior settlement of the French prevented their securing the best land. This was, in reality, the first purely American settlement west of the Mississippi. Here, unlike the other districts, there was no crowded village, with its big field and its small farmers, its traders and trappers. Every settler sought and obtained a concession of land, upon which he built a cabin and began to open a farm, and it was not until the establishment of a seat of justice became necessary that a village was thought of. In 1799 the population of the district numbered 416 whites and 105 slaves. During the same year there were produced 510 bushels of wheat and 16,200 bushels of corn. In 1803 a second census was taken, of which the following is a copy:

CAPE GIRARDEAU, NOVEMBER 1, 1803.	WHITES.				SLAVES.				CROPS AND PRODUCTIONS.							Horned Cattle.	Horses.
	Males.		Females.		Males.		Fe- males.		Total.	Wheat.	Corn.	Tobacco.	Flax and Hemp.	Cotton.	Maple Sugar.

EXPORTATIONS FOR THE YEAR 1803.—371 barrels of salt pork; 14 barrels of unrefined lard; 8,675 pounds of beef; 1,800 pounds of cotton; 7,000 pounds of bacon.

Upon the settlement of the district, Louis Lorimier, while retaining his superintendency of Indian affairs, was made the civil and military commandant of the post of Cape Girardeau, and in this office, as elsewhere, he displayed great activity and good judgment. No matter was too trivial for his attention, and his decisions were always in accord with right and equity. He was a terror to evil-doers, and maintained the best of discipline. The following judgments illustrate his manner of disposing of criminal cases:

WHEREAS, It evidently appears by the written instructions of William Lorimier and Henry Sheridan, that Robert Pulliam, an inhabitant of Horse Prairie Settlement, in the district of Kaskaskia, territory of the United States, hath committed a theft in this place, the nineteenth day of the month, we, Don Louis Lorimier, commander, civil and military, of the post of Cape Girardeau, by virtue of the authority vested in us to maintain good order and administer justice in the said post, have condemned, and do hereby condemn, the said Robert Pulliam to receive thirty lashes on his bare back, and to defray the expenses incurred by his prosecution, and restore the articles stolen, after which the said Robert Pulliam is hereby ordered to depart without further delay from this post, and to appear no more therein, else he shall be liable to receive 500 lashes at every time he shall be apprehended within the limits of our jurisdiction. We, therefore, do hereby give orders to the inhabitants of this post, not to harbor the said Robert Pulliam, in or near their plantations, and whenever he shall be found within the extent of this post, to apprehend him and bring him before us, and every inhabitant who shall not comply with the present order shall be culpable, and fined accordingly.

Given at Cape Girardeau, the twenty-fourth of July, in the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine.

L. LORIMIER.

WHEREAS, Josiah Lee, Sr., hath left his lawful wife, and taken away with him the wife of another man, contrary to the ecclesiastical laws of this kingdom, and to the great scandal of this and neighboring settlements, it is ordered to said Josiah Lee to leave immediately this post and country, and it is forbidden to every inhabitant of the same to harbor him, under a penalty suitable to the case.

Given at Cape Girardeau on the 9th of July, 1799.

L. LORIMIER.

MR. SAMUEL RANDOL:

You will keep in your hand, out of Josiah Lee's property, in your custody, the following sums:

To a fine for leaving several times this post without a passport from the commander, contrary to orders, likewise for the scandal given to the settlement and all the country, in leaving his wife and taking away another man's wife.....	$15 00
To taking care of his house, while under attachment, five days, at one dollar a day	5 00
To writing an agreement between him and D. C. Brant, to writing an agreement between him and Sarah Lee, to writing an order to Enoch Randol, and to writing an order to Samuel Randol.....	6 00

Amounting in the whole to..... $26 00

CAPE GIRARDEAU, 9th July, 1799.

L. LORIMIER.

This judgment brought forth the following petition from the offender:

MOST RESPECTED SIR:

After an insight of my folly which I have committed, it is my humble petition to your Honor that you will pardon me my past offenses, and it shall be always my constant care not to commit any offense that shall displease your Honor, or any persons whatever, for I am sorry that I ever did behave so bad, but if you would permit me to live in this country with my children, I always will make it my study to behave as becometh a true citizen of Spain, and your petitioner will be always bound to pray.

JOSIAH LEE.

Doubtless, the commandant responded favorably to so humble a plea, and permitted the petitioner to remain, as his name appears on a tax list five or six years later.

Mr. Lorimier continued as commandant at Cape Girardeau until the transfer of the Government to the United States, and was held in the highest regard by the governor-general and lieutenant-governor. The latter wrote of him to Col. Stoddard:

"M. Louis Lorimier, the commandant at Cape Girardeau, can neither read nor write, but he has natural genius, since he has always had the judgment to have some one near him able to assist him in regard to his correspondence. He signs nothing without having it read to him two or three times, until he comprehends it, or it must be read again. He has maintained order in his post with incredible firmness against some inhabitants who designed to mutiny against him without cause. He is extremely zealous, when employed. Although supposed to be interested, I have known him to neglect all his business to execute a commission which would cause him rather expense than profit. He is much experienced in Indian matters, particularly with the Shawnese and Delawares. It was through his influence with the latter tribe that the Delaware Indian, who had killed a citizen of the United States on the road to the Post Vincennes, was taken by his nation to Kaskaskia. I had an incontestible proof of his talent with the Indians at New Madrid, where, without his mediation, I would have been obliged to employ force to execute the Mascoux Indian. He is brave, and extremely well posted in the Indian method of warfare, feared and respected by the savages."

In 1799, in response to the following petition, which truthfully sets forth his services to the Government, he received a grant of 30,000 arpents of land:

To Don Carlos Dehault De Lassus, lieutenant-colonel in the armies of his Catholic Majesty, and lieutenant-governor of Upper Louisiana, etc.

Louis Lorimier, captain of militia, and commandant of the post of Cape Girardeau, of Illinois, has the honor very respectfully to represent to you, that since he has become a subject of his Catholic majesty he has been employed in superintending the Indian nations living in this vicinity, and in maintaining peace and order, as well among themselves as between them and the whites; in consequence of which he has often been called near the lieutenant-governors and commandants of Upper Louisiana, to serve not only as interpreter between them and the chiefs of the different nations, but also as a mediator and conciliator, near those chiefs, on various critical occasions, on which the petitioner has made use, with success, of the influence and ascendancy which he has acquired among these nations, in order to bring them, without violence, to determinations advantageous to the general welfare, and to the tranquility of the country. The cares and troubles which the petitioner experienced in fulfilling the various missions with which he was charged; the frequent voyages he was obliged to make, to the injury of his private interests, which suffered during his absence, and even at the peril of his health and life; the numerous and importunate visits of those same Indians, to whom he was obliged to furnish lodgings, provisions, ammunition, to which he has often added considerable presents; a thousand other inconveniences and expenses, which it would take too long to enumerate, have remained to this day without reward or indemnification from the Government. And although at all times his conduct has procured him the approbation of his superiors, and even that of the Government of the United States, these honorable attestations are, as yet, the only fruits he has reaped for his services during upward of fifteen years.

Founded upon such strong pretensions, the petitioner applies now to your lordship, and solicits, with confidence, a reward of indemnification adequate to the importance and extent of his services, and to the great sacrifices which they obliged him to make, praying you to grant him in full property, as well for himself as for his heirs and assigns, a tract of land of 30,000 arpents in superficie on his majesty's domain, with the liberty to have it surveyed when he will find it convenient, and in such place or places which he may choose, without prejudice to anybody.

The petitioner hopes to obtain this favor of your justice and of the generosity of this Government; and full of gratitude for the same, he will pray heaven for the coservation of your days.

[Signed] LOUIS LORIMIER.

CAPE GIRARDEAU, 18th December, 1799.

After the organization of the courts, in 1805, some attempt was made to persecute Lorimier, on the part of those whom he had so firmly repressed while commandant. He was indicted upon the charge of horse stealing and another serious offense, but a nolle prosequi was entered in both cases, as the charges were malicious fabrications.

He remained at Cape Girardeau until his death, which occurred on June 26, 1812. His body lies in the old city cemetery, and on the slab which covers his grave is the following inscription:

TO THE MEMORY

OF

MAJOR LOUIS LORIMIER,

A native of Canada and first settler and commandant of the post of Cape Girardeau under the Government of Spain, who departed this life the 26th day of June, 1812.

Aged 64 years and 3 months.

Immortali animæ luceat alma dies.

He was twice married; that is, if he was married at all to his first wife. In his will, made in 1808, he speaks of her as "the Shawnese woman, Pemanpieh, with whom I have lived these four and twenty years and upward, and whom I consider, love and regard as my wife." It is probable that they were married according to the Indian custom, but whether they were married or not, it is certain that they lived happily together. Tradition says that she was a very beautiful, amiable and intelligent woman. She died soon after the will above referred to was made, and her body rests beside that of her husband. Her tomb bears the following inscription:

CHARLOTTE P. B. LORIMIER,

Consort of Maj. L. Lorimier, who departed this life on the 23d day of March, 1808, aged 50 years and 2 months, leaving 4 sons and 2 daughters.

*Vixit, Chaoniae præses dignissima gentis;
Et decus indigenum quam lapis iste tegit;
Illa bonum didicit natura——‡ magistra.
Et, duce natura, sponte secuta bonum est,
Talis honos memorum, nullo cultore, quotannis
Maturat fructus mitis oliva suos.‡*

* "Peace to his bones and his ashes interred in this grave, May the eternal day illumine his immortal soul."

‡This word is nearly obliterated on the tombstone. It has the appearance of "nosce," but that seems to make ill sense.

‡She lived the noblest matron of the Shawnese race,
And native dignity covered her as does this slab.
She chose nature as her guide to virtue,
And with nature as her leader spontaneously followed good,
As the olive, the pride of the grove, without the planter's care,
Yearly brings its fruit to perfection.

Of the sons and daughters mentioned above, Louis was the eldest. He married Margaret Penny, and lived upon a farm not far from Cape Girardeau. He succeeded his father in his trade with the Indians and control over them. He died in 1832. Marie Louise married Thomas S. Rodney, and died, leaving two children. Augustus Bougainville, the second son, died in 1822, unmarried. Agatha married Daniel F. Steinback, one of the first merchants of Cape Girardeau, and reared a family of five children. Verneuil Raphael went to one of the Southern States, and his subsequent career is unknown. Victor, the youngest, married Sally Sheppard. Mr. Lorimier also had a natural son, William, born in 1781, who came with him to Cape Girardeau. He married Hetty Thorn, a daughter of Solomon Thorn, and became a prosperous farmer of Cape Girardeau County. On June 23, 1810, Mr. Lorimier married Marie Berthiaume, a daughter of Francois Berthiaume, who lived on Apple Creek, in Perry County. Two years after the death of Mr. Lorimier she married John Logan, a relative of Gen. John A. Logan.

The man to whom Mr. Lorimier owed much of his success as a commandant was Bartholomew Cousin. He was born in the parish of Greville, near Cherbourg, France, on March 28, 1767, the son of a farmer. He left his native country for the West Indies in 1791, and must have arrived at Cape Girardeau a year or two later. He was highly educated, wrote and spoke French, English and Spanish, and was a fine Latin scholar. His English, as found in legal documents, proves him a master of elegant diction. He was employed as interpreter, notary and "greffier" until after the transfer of the government to the United States, and in return for his services received a large grant of land on Whitewater and Byrd's Creek. Subsequently he was surveyor of Cape Girardeau County, and died in 1824, leaving a large estate, which has been in litigation almost to the present time. During the latter years of his life he devoted much time to the study of mathematics and physics. On two flat-boats, anchored in the river, he built a little mill, which was turned by a screw similar to that now used in navigation.

As has been stated the settlement at Cape Girardeau was purely American, there not being more than five French families in the entire district. Of this settlement Andrew Ramsay was the pioneer. Attracted by the liberal offers of land, the salubrity of climate and fertility of the soil, as well as, no doubt, by the personality of the commandant, or more properly speaking the personality of his able, accomplished and intellectual secretary, Andrew Ramsay, in 1795, settled immediately adjacent to the grant of the commandant, and for many years his home was the point to which the hardy pioneers of Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina and Tennessee directed their course. An eye witness, Jesse Friend, now dead, but who as a boy remembers the encampment around Ramsay's plantation, gave a graphic picture of these hardy pioneers, who, under the inducements offered by the Spanish Government, now crowded across the Mississippi. Every day, he said, new settlers would arrive from the States, and after a long and weary journey, rest along the bank of a creek that meandered through his plantation, and yet known as Ramsay's Creek, and allow their cattle to pasture in the open and park-like woods, filled in summer with luxuriant cane and grass, while they themselves, accompanied by Ramsay, prospected the country for eligible locations. On Sundays, especially, the whole settlement would congregate at Ramsay's to hear the latest news from the latest immigrants, and to pass the day in such enjoyments as a new country afforded.

Andrew Ramsay came to the Spanish dominions from the neighborhood of Harper's Ferry, and at that time must have been a man of mature age, as he was accompanied by a well grown up family. He is said to have been among the Virginia troops at Braddock's defeat, and since he was by marriage related to the celebrated Daniel Morgan, no doubt took part in the Revolutionary War. The cause of his emigration was some financial reverse, which made it desirable on his part to seek a new home in the far West. A short time after his arrival and location at Cape Girardeau he was followed by several of his family connections, who located in the neighborhood. Among them were Nicholas Seavers, Jeremiah Simpson, Alexander Giboney and Dr. Blevins Hayden, with their families. His sons-in-law, William Daugherty and Samuel Tipton, also made settlements in the district, the latter immediately adjacent to Ramsay, and the former near Jackson. Three daughters married after their arrival: Margaret married Stephen Jones, and removed to Arkansas; Mary married Peter Craig, who fell at the battle of "Sink Hole," and Rachel became the wife of John Rodney. Andrew Ramsay also had five sons who accompanied him to Upper Louisiana, viz.: John, who married a Hannah; Andrew and James, who married, respectively, Patty and Rebecca Worthington; William, who married Elizabeth Dunn, and Allen. John, Andrew and James subsequently located in what is now Mississippi County.

All these immediate connections of Ramsay were accompanied in turn by their relations. Thus Alexander Giboney was accompanied by his sons and sons-in-law, and these again by their kin. So, also, the Hayden, Simpson and Seavers families. Thus are found grants, all dating prior to 1800, to Alexander Giboney, to his sons, John and Robert, and his son-in-law, Jacob Jacobs; also grants to his brothers-in-law and nephews, altogether embracing some of the most valuable lands near the post, and encircling it on the southwest from the "Big Swamp" or "Le Grand Marais" to the Jackson road. To this settlement others contributed, and in 1804 it was pronounced by Capt. Stoddard "the richest in Upper Louisiana."

Andrew Ramsay was a man of substance and the owner of a goodly number of slaves. He exercised a decided influence in the settlement, and so early as 1799 an English school, the first west of the Mississippi, was established at what was called Mount Tabor, a mile from his plantation, and in the center of the new settlement. He was one of the largest landholders in the district. A few years after the acquisition of Louisiana by the United States he removed to what is now Batesville, in the then territory of Arkansas, where he died.

Among the settlers related to Ramsay the Giboney family were the most numerous. This family arrived in the new settlement, according to Ramsay's testimony before the United States Land Commissioners, as early as 1797. Alexander Giboney, the father, died shortly after their arrival, and the care of the family devolved upon his widow, Rebecca (Ramsay) Giboney, a woman of great energy, administrative ability and intelligence. Her family consisted of four sons, John, Robert, Alexander and Andrew, and three daughters, Arabella, wife of Jacob Jacobs; Isabella, who afterward intermarried with Dr. Ezekiel Fenwick, and Margaret, who married Lindsay D'Lashmutt. She resided upon her plantation, granted by the Spanish authorities in 1797, until her death in 1840, and her granddaughter, Mrs. Louis Houck, still resides there. Adjacent was the grant of her son, Robert Giboney, also still occupied by his descendants. One of the daughters of Robert Giboney married Judge W. C. Ramsay, and another, Dr. Wilson Brown, at one time auditor of Missouri, and at his death, in 1852, lieutenant-governor. Alexander Giboney was killed at the battle of the "Sink Hole." John Giboney resided about a mile west of the home grant, and next to him was Jacob Jacobs. The descendants of this branch of the family are numerous. One daughter of John Giboney married Dr. Henderson, of Scott County; another, Gen. Sol. G. Kitchen, of Stoddard County. The youngest son, Andrew Giboney, died in 1874, on the home place, at the age of eighty-two years. He was born near what is now the town of Henderson, Ky., while the family temporarily resided there. In 1832 he married Mary Hunter, and at his death left one daughter, the wife of Hon. Louis Houck, president and principal owner of the Cape Girardeau Southwestern Railway. Mrs. Fenwick resided in the northern part of Cape Girardeau County at the time of her death, and the descendants of Mrs. Jacobs, among whom are Mrs. McCloud and Mrs. McFarland, reside in Pemiscot County. The Giboney family came to the Spanish dominions from Western Virginia, and prior to the immigration resided for a time near Pittsburg.

In 1809 John Ramsay, a brother of Andrew Ramsay, accompanied by his sons and sons-in-law and other families, to the number of eighty persons, arrived in Cape Girardeau District. Ramsay, after living for a short time in the neighborhood of his brother, removed to what is now Scott County. One of his daughters, the widow of Lewis Painter, is still living in Jackson, Mo., an intelligent chronicler of pioneer days.

The foundation of the settlements on White Water River, in what is now Bollinger County, and the western part of Cape Girardeau County, was laid by Col. George Frederick Bollinger. He was born in North Carolina, of Swiss parentage. His father, Henry Bollinger, was a Revolutionary soldier, and was shot at his home by Tories. George F. was the fourth son. About 1796 or 1797, with a companion named Moose or Meus, came to Upper Louisiana, and selected a location on the White Water, including the site of the present town of Burfordsville. He made the acquaintance of Commandant Lorimier, and was promised a large concession of land if he would bring a certain number of colonists into the district. He returned to North Carolina for his wife, and when he again set out for the West he was accompanied by twenty families. The journey was made in wagons. The company crossed the Mississippi River at Ste. Genevieve on the 1st of January, 1800, and proceeded to the White Water, along which stream they made their settlements. In this colony were the families of Mathias Bollinger, John Bollinger, Henry Bollinger, William Bollinger, Daniel Bollinger, and Philip Bollinger, Peter and Conrad Statler, Joseph Nyswonger, George and Peter Grount, Peter Cryts (Crites), John and Jacob Cotner, John and Isaac Miller, Frederick Limbaugh, Leonard Welker and Frederick Slinkard. All were either Germans or Swiss, and all spoke the German language. They were members of the German Reformed Church, and as soon as the interdiction against protestant ministers was removed by the transfer of the government in 1804, Col. Bollinger induced Rev. Samuel Weiberg, or Whybark, as the name is now written, to come from the Carolinas to look after the spiritual wants of the colonists. He did so, and in 1805 made a permanent location. From that time until his death, in 1833, he was traveling and preaching over a district extending from Jonesboro, Illinois, to the Current River. Among the colonists which he had brought out from North Carolina Col. Bollinger was naturally the leader, and Commandant Lorimier appointed him captain to organize the able bodied men into a company of militia, which he accordingly did, and so well were they drilled and mounted that they were pronounced by Lorimier the model company.

Soon after locating on his concession Col. Bollinger erected a log mill, which later was replaced by a stone structure. Upon this mill the settlers for many miles around were dependent for their flour, and it brought much money into the coffers of its owner. But he was a most generous man, and was very popular with all classes. He was a large, powerful man, rather careless of his personal appearance. He was a member of the first territorial assembly, which met in October, 1812. He was subsequently re-elected to the territorial assembly, and served several terms in the State Senate. In 1828 he was elected president pro tem. of that body, and in 1836 was a presidential elector on the Jackson ticket. He died in 1842 or 1843. His wife died soon after reaching their new home, leaving one child, Sarah, who married for her first husband Joseph Frizel, and after his death became the wife of Ralph Daugherty. When a girl she was sent to Salem, N. C., to be educated. She made the entire journey on horseback, carrying her wardrobe in saddle-bags. She became a proficient musician, and was the possessor of the first piano brought into Cape Girardeau County.

The Byrds were another large and influential family among the pioneers of Cape Girardeau District. Amos Byrd, the head of the family, was born in North Carolina, in 1737, and resided in that State until several years after his marriage. He then, after a short residence in Virginia, emigrated with his family to Tennessee, then Washington County, N. C. He first located in the territory which, in 1783, was organized into Greene County, and was a member of the first county court. Three or four years later, with his family, he passed on down the valley of East Tennessee, and built a fort or "station" on the frontier of Knox County. There the family remained until near the close of the century, participating in all the stirring events of the most exciting period in the history of Tennessee. Among their nearest neighbors at this time were the Gillespies, whose station was only a few miles away. An intimacy naturally sprang up between these isolated families, and so congenial did they find each others society, that no less than three of the young men of the Byrd family found wives at the Gillespie fort. In 1799 Amos Byrd, accompanied by his children, set out for Upper Louisiana. The family then consisted of Abraham Byrd and wife (Elizabeth Gillespie), Stephen Byrd and wife (Mary Gillespie), John Byrd and wife, Amos Bird, Jr., and wife (Ann Gillespie), Polly Byrd and her husband, William Russell, Clarissa Byrd (who subsequently married James Russell), Sally Byrd (afterward Mrs. George Hays) and Moses Byrd.

All settled on or near the stream since known as Byrd's Creek, and with the exception of Stephen all continued to reside in the county until their deaths. John Byrd built a mill, a still-house, a cotton-gin, and a blacksmith shop, all of which he conducted until his death in 1816. He left a family of three sons and eight daughters.

The most prominent members of the family were Abraham and Stephen. The latter was a member of the first territorial assembly, and also of the constitutional convention of 1820. Abraham was a member of the State Legislature several times, and in 1836 was a presidential elector. He reared a family of three sons and six daughters, of whom Ingabo married John Bird, of Bird's Point; Mary, W. W. Horrell; Nancy, Edward Kelso; Sabrina, John Allen; Clarrissa, Thomas Horrell, and Emily, John F. Martin. The sons were Amos, William G. and Stephen. Stephen, Sr., had a family of four sons, William, James, John and Amos, and four daughters, Elizabeth (Mrs. Thompson Bird), Mary, Serena (Mrs. John Campbell) and Sallie. Amos, the son of Amos, had three children: Sallie (Mrs. John Wilson), Elizabeth (Mrs. George Cochran), and John. Moses had a family of five sons, William, Amos, John, Abraham and Adolphus, and four daughters, Polly (Mrs. John McLane), Sallie (Mrs. Joseph Brown), Patsey (Mrs. Minton), and Edith (Mrs. Foster).

The Russell's were natives of Scotland. After coming to America, they lived for a time in Virginia, but subsequently emigrated to Tennessee, locating in what is now Grainger County. They came with the Byrd family to Cape Girardeau District, and located on Byrd's Creek, and taught the first schools in that settlement. William Russell was the father of Hon. James Russell, at one time sheriff of Cape Girardeau County, and member of the State Legislature, and grandfather of the Hon. Elam W. Russell.

The Daugherty's, who were of Welsh descent, came to Cape Girardeau district from Virginia, in 1798 or '99. There were Elijah, John and Abraham, brothers, and William, a half-brother of the other three. All located a short distance south of the present site of Jackson, on adjoining farms. William Daugherty married Elizabeth Ramsey, a daughter of Andrew Ramsey, Sr. He was a man of education, and, it is said, was an original Abolitionist. He would own no slaves in his own right, and had around him only those inherited by his wife from her father's estate. His son, Ralph, married the widow of Joseph Frizel and daughter of Col. George F. Bollinger. He became a man of some prominence in political circles, served several years as clerk of the county court, and in 1828 was a Jackson elector.

Among the pioneer families few have exerted a wider influence than the Rodney family. During the war for independence, a Hessian soldier, Martin Rodner, came to America, one of the troops sold to England by the petty German princes. He was captured by Gen. Greene's forces in North Carolina, in the latter part of the war, and not wishing again to enter the army was permitted to go under parol to Tennessee. He stopped at Bledsoe's Lick, and there married Hannah Smith, an English woman; about 1801 or 1802, with his family, consisting of three sons and two daughters, came to Cape Girardeau District, locating about two miles southwest of the present town of Gordonsville. The original patronymic was Rodner, but by his American neighbors was Anglicized into Rodney. He was a devout Lutheran, and died in 1827. Of his three sons, Thomas S. Rodney became the son-in-law of Lorimier, as already mentioned. After the death of his first wife he married Mary Penny, by whom he was the father of four children, one of whom, Adeline Rodney, married Fred. C. Butler, a prominent citizen of New Madrid County. In 1823 he removed to Lawrence County, Ark., where he died two years later.

John Rodney, the second son of Martin Rodney, was a surveyor by profession. In 1815 he married Rachel Ramsey, and removed to what is now Mississippi County, where they left a large property and numerous descendants. Michael Rodney, the youngest son of Martin Rodney, married Matilda Penney, who bore him five sons, Oscar, Anthony, Martin, Thomas J. and John, and three daughters, one of whom, Louise, married her cousin, Thomas J. Rodney, and another, Susan, married Thomas Johnson. Of the daughters of Martin Rodney, Charlotte married Peter Massie, and Mary, a man named Lakeman.

The Randol family came from Pennsylvania in 1797, and located on Randol Creek. It consisted of Enos Randol, his wife "Becky" and seven sons and three daughters. Of the sons, two were married. Anthony, the eldest, married Polly Hulse, of Breckenridge County, Ky., and reared a family of ten children, one of whom, Mrs. C. B. Houts, is still living in Cape Girardeau at the age of eighty-one years. Samuel was also married before coming to the county. His wife was Polly Pierrepont. He was one of the "syndics" under Louis Lorimier, and built one of the first grist-mills in the district. Medad, the second son, in 1798 married Deborah, the daughter of Joseph Waller. After her death he went to Scott County, and there married Thankful Stout, by whom he was the father of several children. She survived him, and after his death purchased a small farm on Mathews' Prairie, and became one of the proprietors of the new town of Charleston. Elijah Randol also removed to Scott County, and married Nellie Stout; Abraham married Mary Parker, and located on a farm near Jackson, but afterward removed to Indian Creek. James married Ann, the daughter of James Dowty, in 1801, and after her death chose, for his second wife, Nancy Ollar. Of the daughters, Helen married Allen McKenzie in June 1800, and continued to reside in the county; Rebecca married James Story, and removed to Arkansas; Sallie became the wife of William Randol, who, although of the same name, was in no wise related to her.

The male members of this family were typical frontiersmen, rough and uncultured, and ever ready to settle difficulties by an appeal to nature's weapons; consequently their names appear frequently on the records of the courts, as defendants in cases of assault and battery and similar misdemeanors. Their descendants, however, are among the most respectable people of the county.

Christopher Hays with his sons, John and George, came from Pennsylvania about 1800. He received a concession of land two or three miles north of Jackson, where he located. He was the first presiding justice of the county court, but died a few years after the organization of the district. John Hays lived on the home farm until 1817, when he removed to his concession on the Mississippi, at the mouth of Indian Creek, where he built a saw-mill and established a ferry. He was the first sheriff of the county, and filled that office for seventeen years. His wife was a daughter of John McCarty. George Hays was married, in 1801, to Sallie, a daughter of Amos Byrd, Sr., and was a resident of the county until his death in 1820.

Jeremiah Thompson and his sons, William, Isaac and John, were among the earliest settlers of the district. They were originally from North Carolina, but had lived for a few years at New Madrid. A daughter, Elizabeth, married Dr. Samuel Dorsey of that place.

William Williams came to Upper Louisiana in 1802, from Virginia, and located about two miles east of Jackson. He had four sons, Isaac S., Jacob, Squire and William W., all of whom located in the same neighborhood. Simon and Isaiah Poe and Charnal Glasscock came two or three years later, from North Carolina, and settled near by.

Thomas English arrived in Cape Girardeau District about the time the transfer of Upper Louisiana occurred, but one of his sons, Robert, must have come earlier, as there was a Spanish grant confirmed to him. Thomas English located in the Ramsay settlement. He had a family of six sons, and an equal number of daughters. The sons were Robert; Thomas, who married Elizabeth Howard; Joseph, who married Columbia McFerron; Simeon, who married Erina McFerron; William, who married Nancy Hunter, and John. The daughters were Jane, wife of Z. R. Howard; Patsey, wife of George Camster, of Perry County; Louisa, wife of Hiram Kennison; Talitha, wife of John Evans; Hannah, who married A. Joyce, and Charity, who became Mrs. Mathews. Several of the brothers emigrated to Arkansas.

The Penney family were also pioneers of Cape Girardeau District. William Penney, the head of the family, came to America from Wales, with two brothers, one of whom went to South Carolina and the other to Tennessee. He himself located at Bledsoe's Lick, now Gallatin, Tenn., and in 1798 married Susan, a daughter of Col. Anthony Bledsoe. In 1808 they came to Missouri, and settled near the present town of Gordonsville. They were accompanied by several of Mrs. Penney's relatives, two of whom, Mrs. Joseph Sewell and Mrs. William Neely, were her sisters.

Mr. Penney was a gunsmith, and one of the best workmen of his trade. He was a good-natured, careless, mirthful man, fond of drink, and a lover of the hunt and the chase, but he was also brave, generous and chivalric, and when advanced in life, is said to have administered a sound whipping to a man who cast some reflection upon the wife of Gen. Jackson.

Mr. and Mrs. Penney reared a family of four sons and three daughters. They were Thomas B., who married a daughter of Shelby, and removed to New Madrid County; Isaac B., who married a sister of John Walker, and lived in Stoddard, Scott and Cape Girardeau Counties; Anthony B., who married three times—first, Jane, daughter of Robert English; second, a daughter of Solomon Hayden, and third, Alice, daughter of John Dunn; William A., now living in Cape Girardeau; Mary, who married first Thomas S. Rodney, and afterward Abraham Wright; Margaret, who married Louis Lorimier, Jr., and Matilda, who married Michael Rodney.

Col. William Neely, the husband of Mrs. Penney's sister, above mentioned, was a companion of Gen. James Robertson when, in 1779, he made the first settlement on the Cumberland, in Tennessee. After his arrival in Missouri, he located on a farm adjoining Jackson, and upon the organization of the territorial government he was made a member of the council. In 1814 he was chosen president of that body. He continued to reside in the county until his death, sometime in the "twenties." His brother-in-law, Joseph Sewell, also lived on a farm adjoining Jackson.

In 1803 Luke Byrne, with his grown sons, Morgan and Moses Byrne, accompanied by Anthony Haden, and John Morrison, the father of ex-Senator T. J. O. Morrison, came from Ireland and located in the Ramsey settlement. Morgan Byrne is remembered as an intelligent man, and an exceptionally fine singer, while Moses was a typical son of Erin. The former reared a family of four sons and three daughters. Luke, one of the sons, located near New Madrid, and became a prominent farmer. There was also a Dr. Thomas Byrne, an early settler in the northeast part of Scott County, who was of no connection to the family above mentioned.

The German settlement in Cape Girardeau County dates from the year 1834, when Otto Buehrman, William Cramer, with their families, and Rev. Frederick Picker, an unmarried man, located on a farm in the "Big Bend." The Cramers and Picker were from Hanover, and Buehrman from Brunswick. The next year Picker removed to the settlement on White Water, where he married and entered upon ministerial work. At the same time Cramer, with one John Anthony, removed to Cape Girardeau, and engaged in the manufacture of cigars. He had four sons, William, Ludwig, George H. and Theodore. All died within two or three years after their arrival in America, with the exception of George H., who still carries on the business of his father. He is one of the most highly respected citizens of Cape Girardeau, and has several times been elected mayor. Hon. Wilson Cramer, of Jackson, and Maurice Cramer, of Cape Girardeau, both able lawyers, are his sons. Otto Buehrman had three sons, and one of his grandsons is a leading merchant of Cape Girardeau. In 1835 William Bierwirth and family, Daniel Bertling, Henry Friese and Chris. Schatte and family arrived in the county, and thus set in a stream of German immigration, which has ever since continued, and which has furnished to Cape Girardeau County some of its best and most enterprising citizens. A settlement was made in the neighborhood of Dutchtown, in 1835 or 1836, by several families from Switzerland, and here, about 1838, a German Evangelical Church was organized.

It has been stated that the first settlements within the present limits of Bollinger County were made along the Big and Little White Water Rivers. There were few locations elsewhere in the county, prior to 1804. However, concessions were made to Edward Haythorn and Joseph Watkins, on the Castor River, on the St. Francois County line, and to Thomas Lewis, James Smith, Lemuel Hargrave and Peter Franks, on Hog Creek. In 1805 John Lorance, who had come from North Carolina with Col. Bollinger, married and located on Crooked Creek, where Eli Deck now lives. About the same time Daniel Hahn settled on the creek which bears his name, about one-half mile west of Lutesville. Casper Schell located below, on the same creek, and Peter Baker opened the farm now occupied by his grandson of the same name. Opposite Lorange, on Crooked Creek, was Henry Baker. John Deck was also a pioneer in this portion of the county. In the neighborhood of Glen Allen there located several families from North Carolina, among whom were George and Jacob Nifong, Jacob Hinkle and Jacob Clodfelter.

The first settlements in Wayne County were made in 1802, when Joseph Parish, Thomas Ring and David, Charles and Robert A. Logan came from Kentucky. Parish was a Virginian, and the father-in-law of Thomas Ring and of one or more of the Logans. He located near where the village of Patterson now is, and adjoining his grant was that of Robert Logan. Charles and David Logan and Thomas Ring made their settlements on the St. Francois. Ephraim Stout received a grant on the St. Francois, below the Logans, but in a few years removed to Iron County. Isaac E. Kelly located on the present site of Bloomfield. His brother, Jacob Kelly, was a man of wealth and influence, and was the first justice of the peace of this settlement. Tillman Smith, James Caldwell and Francis Clark were among the earliest settlers, but nothing could be learned of them.

In 1806 Elijah, Ransom and Overton Bettis, brothers, and their brothers-in-law, Ezekiel Ruebottom, Elijah Mathews and ——— Alston, came from North Carolina. Elijah Bettis located where Mrs. White now lives, and Overton Bettis near the site of Wellsdale. Ransom Bettis, in 1811, married Polly Kelly, and lived where John F. Rhodes now does. Overton Bettis was a bachelor. All were men of considerable property, and owned slaves. Mathews and Alston lived near each other on Otter Creek, and soon after coming to this country became involved in a difficulty over some domestic affairs, and during a quarrel growing out of it Mathews struck Alston on the head with a hand-spike, killing him. He was tried for murder, but was acquitted.

This settlement was far from any trading point, and did not grow very rapidly. Up to 1818 the territory now known as Wayne County formed St. Francois Township, of Cape Girardeau County, and in 1809 it was reported to the county court that no roads had yet been laid off within it.

New Madrid District.—The settlement of this district was begun in the winter of 1786–87, by Francois and Joseph Lesieur, brothers, in the employ of Cerre, a fur trader and merchant of St. Louis. They had been sent down the Mississippi in a canoe the year previous, to select a suitable place for a trading post, and now they came to build a house and to begin trade with the Indians. They were very successful. The Delawares brought in immense quantities of furs and skins, which they readily disposed of for powder and shot and such trifles as delight the heart of the savage. But so rich a mine could not be long concealed from rival traders, and they began to come from Vincennes and other posts. The place soon became one of the best trading points in the country west of the Mississippi, and the name of "L'anse a la graisse" (the cove of fat) was bestowed upon it. But while these simple French traders were trafficking with the Indians, and growing rich, the eyes of a man of greater ambition were fixed upon this country. Col. George Morgan, a native of New Jersey, who had been an officer in the American Army, while passing down the Mississippi to New Orleans, conceived the idea of building a great commercial city in the Spanish territory opposite or below the mouth of the Ohio. He at once began negotiations with the Spanish Government for a large grant of land, and by extravagant promises succeeded in obtaining it. He published a prospectus of the city which he proposed to lay out, and early in 1789, with a party of some fifty or sixty emigrants, descended the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to a point about a mile below the present town of New Madrid. There he proceeded to lay out a city on a magnificent scale, with broad streets, spacious squares and grand plazas, and gave it the name of New Madrid. His ambitious designs, however, were soon brought to an end. Gen. James Wilkinson was at this time intriguing with the Spanish governor, Miro, at New Orleans, for the purpose of inciting a rebellion of the people west of the Alleghanies against the United States Government, with the intention of attaching them to the Spanish Government. He was very jealous of a rival, and such he conceived Col. Morgan to be. He conducted his negotiations through Gov. Miro, and in a letter to that officer states that in connection with others he has applied for a grant in the Yazoo country in order "to destroy the place of a certain Col. Morgan." He then goes on as follows: "This Col. Morgan resides for the present with his family in the vicinity of Princeton, in New Jersey, but twenty or twenty-five years ago he used to trade with the Indians at Kaskaskia, in co-partnership with Boynton & Wharton. He is a man of education, and possesses an intelligent mind, but he is a deep and thorough speculator. He has already become twice a bankrupt, and according to the information I have lately received he is now in extremely necessitous circumstances. He was sent by a New Jersey company to New York in order to negotiate with Congress the purchase of a vast tract of land, comprising Cahokia and Kaskaskia. But whilst this affair was pending he found it to his interest to deal with Don Diego Gordoqui, and he discovered that it was more advantageous for him to shift his negotiations from the United States to Spain. The result was that he obtained, forsooth, the most extraordinary concession, which extends along the Mississippi from the mouth of the St. Francois River to Point Cinque Homme, in the West, containing from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 of acres. I have not seen Morgan, nor am I acquainted with the particulars of his contract, but I have set a spy after him since his coming to these parts, and his going down the river to take possession of his new province, and through that spy I have collected the following information: That the intention of Morgan is to build a city on the west bank of the Mississippi, as near the mouth of the Ohio as the nature of the ground may permit; that he intends selling his lands by small or large lots for a shilling an acre; that Don Diego Gordoqui pays all the costs of that establishment, and has undertaken to make that new town a free port to intercept all of the productions of this country on the most advantageous terms he may be able to secure from our people. Morgan departed from here on the beginning of this month to take possession of his territory, to survey it and to fix the site of the town, which will be called New Madrid. He took with him two surveyors and from forty to fifty persons beside."

This letter produced upon Gov. Miro the effect desired by Wilkinson. On the 20th of May, 1789, Miro wrote to Spain concerning the impolicy of the conditions of the concession to Morgan, and the extent of it. He denominated it an Imperium in Imperio, and protested against it. He also wrote to Morgan, stating how he had been deceived in regard to the conditions and extent of the concession, and declared that it was entirely inadmissible. He also infinitely regretted that Morgan had, without authority, laid out a town, and had spoken of it as "our city." He further informed him that a fort would be constructed there, and a detachment of soldiers placed in it, to receive favorably all his emigrants. Morgan replied the next day, tendering an apology for his course, but his loss of influence with the Government cost him his prestige among the colonists, who began to murmur against his authority. Finally they sent an agent, one John Ward, to present a complaint to Gov. Miro. Morgan, thus stripped of his concession and influence, soon after returned to the United States. Several of the colonists also returned to their former homes.

Of the emigrants who came out with Col. Morgan, the greater number were from Maryland and Pennsylvania. The names of but few could be ascertained. There were David Gray, Alexander Sampson, Joseph Story, Richard Jones Waters, John Hemphill, Elisha Winsor, Andrew Wilson, Samuel Dorsey, Benjamin Harrison, Jacob Meyers, Benjamin Meyers, William Chambers, Elisha Jackson, Ephraim Conner, John Hart, James Dunn, Lawrence Harrison, William Harrison, John Gregg, Nicholas Gerry, James Gerry, John Morris, John Becket, John Summers, Louis and Joseph Vandenbenden, Joseph McCourtney, John Pritchett and David Shelby.

Of the earliest French settlers the Lesieus, Francois and Joseph, were not only the first, but also among the most influential, and their descendants are now numbered by the hundreds. They were sons of Charles Lesieur, who came from South France early in the last century and located at Three Rivers, Canada. About 1785 they came to St. Louis and found employment with Gabriel Cerre, a fur trader, who sent them out to establish a trading post, as before related. Joseph had married before leaving Canada, and became the father of two sons, both of whom died young. He himself died in April, 1796. Francois married Cecile Guilbeaut on May 13, 1791; she was a native of Vincennes, and a daughter of Charles Guilbeaut and Cecile Thiriat. In 1794 they removed to Little Prairie, where they resided until the earthquakes of 1811-12, when they returned to what is now New Madrid County, and located at the old Point Pleasant, about a mile above the present village of that name. There Francois Lesieur died in 1826, after having been three times married. By his first marriage he had seven children, viz.: Francois, Jr., who married a Miss Le Grand and reared a large family: Collestique, who became the wife of Noah Gambol; Margurite, who married Hypolite Thiriat (now Teror); Godfrey, who, in 1818, married Mary E. Loignon, and reared a family of eleven children; Matilda, who became Mrs. W. B. Nicholas; Christine, who married George G. Alford, and an infant. His second wife was a Miss Bono, who bore him one son, Napoleon. In 1820 he married the widow of Charles Loignon, of Little Prairie. Raphael Lesieur, a nephew of Francois and Joseph Lesieur, came to New Madrid in 1798, and lived to be seventy-two years old. He married Frances Guibeault, and had a large family.

The majority of the French settlers were entirely uneducated, could neither read nor write, and possessed but little property. Among this class were Joseph Hunot, and his sons Gabriel and Joseph, and Joseph and Etienne St. Marie, all from Vincennes. By far the larger number of the French pioneers were originally from Canada, but had resided at some of the neighboring posts—Vincennes, Kaskaskia and Ste. Genevieve. A few, however, were natives of France, and these were usually the best educated. To this number belonged Pierre Antoine Laforge, who came to New Madrid in 1794. He was a member of an aristocratic family, and had been educated for the priesthood, but having fallen in love with his cousin, Margaret Gabrielle Colombe Champagne, had married her. He lived in Paris until driven out by the Revolution, when, taking his wife and family, with the exception of the youngest child, he sought refuge in America.

He located at Gallipolis, Ohio, where his family remained for several years. In 1794 he came to New Madrid, where he was appointed interpreter and public writer, and was held in high esteem by the authorities of Upper Louisiana. He was recommended to Capt. Stoddard by De Lassus, in 1803, as "a very zealous officer, performing the duties of adjutant of militia. He is also a justice of the peace and notary public. He performs these various offices with correctness and precision. I can do no less than recommend him as a man very active, earnest and useful for the public service; but he does not write English." He was appointed commandant of the post by Stoddard, and served until the organization of the courts. He subsequently held the office of judge of the court of common pleas. When the earthquake of December, 1811, occurred he was sick of a fever, and died from exposure, having been removed from the house to a tent. He was the father of eleven children, only three of whom married. They were Adele, Gabrielle and Peter A. The last named was a farmer, and married Harriet, daughter of Charles Loignon. He, also, had a family of eleven children, of whom eight married. They were Margaret C., who first married Justice Morgan, and, after his death, John W. Butler; Alfred, who married Laura, daughter of Dr. Robert D. Dawson; Eliza, who became the wife of William S. Mosely; Alphonse, who married Fanny Hatcher; Agatha, who married Thomas Dawson; Prudence, who married Benjamin Stewart; Virginia, now the widow of William O'Bannon, and Mary, the widow of Dr. Drake McDowell.

Robert McKay (or McCoy) came to New Madrid as early as 1791, and for a long time was in command of a Spanish galley. After the change in the government he remained in the town, and continued to reside there until his death in 1840.

Among these American colonists, Richard Jones Waters was the most prominent and influential. He was a native of Maryland, and was the son of William Waters and Rachel Jones. He received a medical education, but seems never to have practiced his profession. He was engaged in a mercantile business at Louisville, Ky., when Morgan set out for Upper Louisiana, and he joined the expedition at that place. He was then twenty-nine years of age, and unmarried. He resumed business at New Madrid, and began to accumulate property rapidly. He carried a large stock of such goods as were in demand at that time, and purchased the greater portion of the produce shipped from New Madrid. He also owned the first water-mill in the district, which was situated on Bayou St. John. In addition to all this, he dealt very extensively in land and land grants, and was involved in endless litigation. By reference to the archives of the post, it is found that he was a party to more than one-half of the civil suits before the commandant. But he was a successful business man, and at the time of his death, in 1807, his personal property alone was valued at over $65,000, a very large amount for that day.

On the 31st of May, 1800, he was married to Francoise Julie Godfrey, widow of Louis Vandenbenden, and a native of Normandy. They had no children, but prior to their marriage he had adopted two sons of Mrs. Jacob Meyers, of whom he was the reputed father. He was the captain of a militia company, and served at different times as commandant of the post ad interim. Col. De Lassus wrote of him to Capt. Stoddard: "He is a zealous officer of extensive knowledge, but of a somewhat extravagant disposition and very quarrelsome." His sons were John and Richard Jones Waters. The former was an adventurous spirit, and left the country when a youth. The latter remained with his adopted mother, and at her death fell heir to all the property. He was an intelligent gentleman of the "old school" type, and from him have descended many of the best people of Southeast Missouri.

Dr. Samuel Dorsey was also a native of Maryland. Upon the establishment of the military post at New Madrid, he received the appointment of surgeon, at a salary of $30 per month, and continued in that position until the transfer of the country to the United States. On January 17, 1795, he married Marie J. Bonneau, a native of Vincennes, who died in 1799. Subsequently he married a daughter of Jeremiah Thompson, of Cape Girardeau District, whither he removed in 1804. After the earthquake of 1811-12, he went to Claiborne County, Miss.

Joseph Story was a native of Massachusetts, and a son of William Story. He was a surveyor, and it is believed was brought to the country by Morgan to assist in laying off his city. In 1794 he married, at New Madrid, Catharine, a daughter of Jacob Seek, and a native of Pennsylvania.

Andrew Wilson was a native of Scotland, and had been a minister in the Presbyterian Church. He was the father of George Wilson, the first sheriff of the district.

John Summers was also a Scotchman, and was the father of Andrew and Alexander Summers, both of whom located in Cape Girardeau District about 1797. Andrew married Elizabeth, the daughter of George Ruddell, of Little Prairie.

The Vandenbendens, Joseph and Louis, were from Pennsylvania. The latter was a merchant and a man of considerable wealth. He died about 1797 or 1798, and his widow married Richard J. Waters. Joseph was a large land owner, and survived his brother many years.

Jacob Meyers was from Pittsburgh, Penn., and was the father of Benjamin Meyers. Joseph McCourtney was a native of Ireland, and married a daughter of John Pritchett, who came from Virginia. David Gray was from Massachusetts; his wife, Dinah Gray, obtained a legal separation from her husband, and for many years kept a sort of boarding house in New Madrid. She is said to have been a woman of more than ordinary intelligence.

John Lavallee, the last commandant under the old regime, has several descendants still residing in New Madrid County. He was the father of Charles A. Lavallee, and was a man of intelligence and education. He was recommended by De Lassus as follows: "He is a zealous and skillful officer, recommended for a long time for captain. I appointed him commandant ad interim of New Madrid. He was recognized by the Government, and I think would have been retained but for the change. Every time I employed him he gave me great satisfaction in the manner in which he acquitted himself. He speaks and writes Spanish, French and English, and is a firm, brave and prudent man." He remained at New Madrid until his death, and served for three years as judge of the court of common pleas.

In July, 1789, Gov. Miro sent Lieut. Pierre Forcher, with two sergeants, two corporals and thirty soldiers, to build a fort, and to take civil and military command of the post at New Madrid. Upon his arrival, Forcher laid off a town between Bayou St. John and Bayou de Cypriere, and built a fort upon the bank of the river, which he named Fort Celeste, in honor of the wife of Gov. Miro. Lieut. Forcher was a man of energy and administrative ability, and soon established order and prosperity in the community. He was recalled, however, in about eighteen months, and was succeeded by Thomas Portell. The following admirable sketch, by P. A. La Forge, furnishes a graphic description of these two administrations:

NEW MADRID, Dec. 31, 1796.

*To Mr. Chas. Dehault De Lassus, Lieutenant-Colonel admitted into the Stationary Regiment of Louisiana and Military and Civil Commandant of the Posts and Districts of New Madrid:

Sir, the Commandant:—Before handing you the first census of New Madrid under your commandment, I have ventured upon a sketch of the origin of the settlement of this post, and the courses which have retarded its growth and chiefly its cultivation. If former defects have kept it until this time in a species of stupefaction, your sagacious views and the zeal you exhibit to second the good will of Mr., the Governor General of this Province, towards this settlement, can in a little while efface the trouble it experienced in its birth.

I was present, Mr. Commandant, when you pronounced with effusion these words, which I wish that all of the inhabitants might have heard; words which depicted so frankly your kind intention, and the interest which Mr., the Governor, takes in us.

"The Governor," said you, "is surprised at the languor exhibited by this settlement and its little advance; he desires its prosperity. I will reflect upon its failure," added you, "and will endeavor to remedy it; I ask your assistance. If the inhabitants need encouragement, if they stand in need of help, let them inform me of their wants, and I will convey them to the Governor General." This offer was appreciated by those near you; little accustomed to hear the like, they wondered at you, and appeared to rest content.

Nevertheless different statements were spread among those who heard you. Why so long a silence since your generous offer? Is it distrust on their part? Is it mistrust of their own misunderstanding? Is it profound reflection to better further your views? or may it be self interest that induces some to remain silent? I am ignorant of their motives, and limit myself to the hope that they will eventually break their silence and make known to you their solitary reflections.

If my knowledge equalled my desires, I would hasten with all my power, sir, the commandant, to tender you the homage of my services, but they fall too far short to allow me to hope that they could be of any utility to you. I will confine myself solely to communicate to you such knowledge as I have acquired, and my reflections thereon since I have been at this post, and may a series of these reflections assist in your benevolent heart some happy idea that may tend to the advantage and prosperity of this colony.

Some traders in pursuit of gain, came to l'anse a la graisse (cove of fat or grease), a rendezvous or gathering place of several Indian nations, and where, as we are told by tradition, they found abundance of game, and especially bears and buffaloes, hence the name of l'anse a la graisse. A first year of success induced them to try a second, and to this others. Some of them, determined to establish their homes where they found a sure trade and unlimited advantages, divided there among themselves the land. The bayou, named since St. John, was the rallying point, and the land the nearest to this then became settled, therefore we find that Messrs. Francis and Joseph Lesieur, Ambrose Dumay, Chattoillier, and others, divided among themselves this neighborhood; property which Mr. Foucher, the first commandant, considered as sacred, and which he did not disturb. The profits of the trade of l'anse a la graisse having been heard of as far as the Post Vincennes, the St. Maries, the Hunots, the Racines, the Barsaloux, etc., of that place accomplished for some years very advantageous trips. They congratulated themselves, moreover, that the Indians of l'anse a la graisse traded with them amicably, whilst those of the United States were treacherous towards them, and made them averse to inhabit a post where their lives were in constant danger.

Nevertheless an unfortunate anarchy, a singular disorder, prevailed, at l'anse a la graisse: all were masters, and would obey none of those who set themselves up as heads or commandants of this new colony. A murder was committed by an inhabitant on another—then their eyes were opened, they began to feel the necessity of laws, and some one at their head to compel their observance. They bound the culprit and sent him to New Orleans. Everything tends to the belief that the commandants of the posts of Ste. Genevieve and of St. Louis had, during these transactions, apprised the Governor-General of what was occurring at l'anse a la graisse; but a new scene was in preparation.

One Morgan, having descended the Ohio the first year that traders settled at l'anse a la graisse, examined, in passing, the land, and found it suitable to fix here a settlement. Returning to America (U. S.), he removed and succeeded in bringing down to this post several families. He selected for the village the elevated ground, where at present are the habitations of Jackson and of Waters, near the Mississippi. They built some houses on the land, and, full of his enterprise and the success he expected from it, Morgan descended to New Orleans to obtain, not encouragement simply in his plans, but proprietary and honorary concessions beyond measure. He was baffled in his pretensions, and did not again set his foot in the colony.

These various occurrences determined the Governor General to send a commandant to this post, and M. Foucher was selected. Men are not gods, they all possess in some respects the weaknesses of human nature; the predominant one of the first commandant was self-interest; and who in his place would not have been so—sent to a desert in the midst of savages, to bring the laws of a regulated government to new settlers as barbarous as the Indians themselves? What recompense would he have received for neglecting his personal interests? What obligation would the new colony have been under to him? None.

Mr. Foucher was the man that was wanted for the creation of this new colony. Busying himself at the same time with his own interests as of those of the inhabitants; with his own amusements as well as theirs, but always after having attended first to his business; and by a singular address, if he sometimes plucked the fowl, he not only did it without making it squall, but set it dancing and laughing. M. Foucher remained but a very short time at this post, and did a great deal. In eighteen months he divided out the country, regulated the land necessary for the village and that of the inhabitants. He built an imposing fort, promulgated the laws of the King and made them respected. He was the father and friend of all, lamented, regretted and demanded again, from the Governor General down, by the unanimous voice of all the inhabitants.

In all his labors was Mr. Foucher assisted by anyone? Had he overseers at the head of the works he presented? Not at all; he alone directed everything; he laid out the work, penetrated the cypress swamps to select the useful trees; he walked with the compass in hand to align the streets and limit the lots; he demonstrated by his example to the perplexed workmen how much men with but little main strength, but with intelligence and dexterity, can multiply the extent of the same, and surmount obstacles. His administration was too brief to ascertain the good he might have done, had it continued the ordinary period. What is certain is that, during the eighteen months that he was in command, there came to New Madrid the largest portion of families that are still there, and it was he that attracted them there.

M. Portell, successor of M. Foucher, commanded this post during five years; the population did not increase under his administration, and the growth of agricultural labors was but slightly perceptible.

M. Portell did not value the inhabitants sufficiently to do them a substantial favor, nor did he use the proper means to improve the condition of the colony. He was not a man of the people, and when by chance his interest required him to assume the character, he was extremely awkward in it; they perceived that he could not play his part, and that a residence in court would have infinitely better suited him than one in a new settlement mostly ill composed. M. Portell had a good heart, he was by nature noble and generous, but his mind was somewhat mistrustful and suspicious, and his age placed him in a position to be influenced by his surroundings. I am convinced that if M. Portell had come alone to this colony, he would have exhibited much less weakness, and that his time would have been much more to him for the public good than it had been.

The little progress made by the colony must not, however, be attributed to the apparent indifference which seemed to form the base of M. Portell's character; physical and moral courses retarded its advancement.

At the period when M. Portell assumed command, he found the inhabitants of this post made up of traders, hunters and boatmen. Trade was still pretty fair for the first two years of his residence here, so that nearly everyone, high or low, would meddle with the trade, and not a soul cultivate the soil. It was so convenient, with a little powder and lead, some cloth and a few blankets, which they obtained on credit at the stores, to procure themselves the meat, grease and suet necessary for their sustenance, and pay off a part of their indebtedness with some peltries. Some of them, but a very few, seeded, equally as well as badly, about an acre of corn, and they all found time to smoke their pipes and give balls and entertainments. How often have I heard them regretting those happy days, when they swam in grease, and when abundance of every description was the cause of waste and extravagance, and the stores of fish from their drag-nets gave them whiskey at four or five reaux (bit of 12½) a gallon, and flour at four or five dollars a barrel, maintained and kept up these festivals and pleasures, which only came to an end when their purses were exhausted.

Mr. Foucher, a young man who, during his command of the post, never neglected his work or business for amusements, yet found time to be at them all, and often was the first to start them, but M. Portell was not so sociable in this respect. He found fault with this giddiness and folly, and judged that a colony, peopled by such individuals, could not attain a very brilliant success.

At last, game in these parts becoming scarcer, the Indians removed themselves further off, and were seldom here; the traders knew very well where to find them, but the inhabitants waited for them in vain; then grease, suet, meat and peltries being no longer brought by the Indians, it was only a few resident hunters and the traders themselves who provisioned the village; the unfortunate habit of not working had gained the day, it was too difficult to overcome it, so great distress was often seen in the country before they could snatch a few green ears of corn from a badly cultivated field. Three or four Americans at most, as far back as 1793, had risked the settlement of farms on large tracts of land. The Creoles undervalued them, did not eat their fill of dry corn bread, and smoked their pipes quietly. They were, however, surprised to see that, with several cows, they often had not a drop of milk, while these three or four Americans gorged themselves with it, and sold them butter, cheese, eggs, chickens, etc.

By dint of looking into the matter, and waiting in vain for the Indians to supply them with provisions, it struck them that the most prudent thing they could do would be to become farmers. It became, then, a species of epidemic, and the malady spreading from one to another, there are not a single one of them but who, without energy, spirit, animals or ploughs, and furnished only with his pipe and steel, must needs possess a farm.

It was towards the close of the year 1793 that this disease spread itself, and towards the spring of 1794 all the lands in the vicinity of New Madrid were to be broken up and torn into rags, to be seeded and watered by the sweat of these new farmers. Who can tell how far this newly awakened enthusiasm might have been carried? It might have produced a salutary crisis, and self-love and necessity combined, we should be supplied with farmers at all hazards, and whose apprenticeship might, perhaps, have resulted in some success.

An unlooked-for occurrence calmed this effervescence; all were enrolled into a militia to be paid from January 1, 1794, and they found it much pleasanter to eat the King's bread, receive his pay, and smoke his pipes, than to laboriously grub some patches of land to make it produce some corn and potatoes. These militiamen were disbanded about the middle of 1794; their pay was already wasted. They found it a great hardship to be no longer furnished with bread by the King, the largest portion of them had neglected their planting, they found themselves at the year's end in want, and clamored as thieves against the King, saying it was all his fault. M. Portell knew his people and disregarded these outcries.

In the meantime five galleys had come up in the course of this year, and had passed all the summer at New Madrid, and they had caused a great consumption of food. M. Portell found nothing in the village for their subsistence, and drew his supplies for them in part from Illinois and from Kentucky. He did not let pass the opportunity of making it felt by those of the inhabitants of long residence, that should have been in a condition to have furnished a part of these supplies, but the blows he struck came too late, and made but little impression—the hot fever which had occasioned the delirium, where every one saw himself a farmer, had now subsided; no one thought any more of it, some of them who had made a trial of their experience at Lake St. Isidor, had so poorly succeeded, that the laugh was not on their side, and it needed but little for hunting, rowing, and smoking the pipe, to resume their ancient authority over nearly all the colony.

In 1795 a new fit of the fever struck the inhabitants. The settlements of Ft. St. Fernando occasioned a hasty cleaning out of the little corn there was in the colony. Kentucky furnished a little, and Ste. Genevieve supplied a great deal, even to New Madrid, that fell short after having consumed her own supply. This example struck the inhabitants; they saw that if they had harvested extensively, they could now well have disposed of their surplus—new desires to go on farms to raise stock and to make crops.

During these occurrences several American families came to New Madrid; some of them placed themselves at once on farms, and like children our Creoles, from a state of jealousy, clamored against the Americans, whom they thought too wonderful. Jealousy stimulated them, and they would also place themselves on farms.

It is in reality, then, only since the year 1796 that we may regard the inhabitants of this post as having engaged in cultivation, and that it is but yet absolutely in its infancy; a new scarcity they have just experienced before the last crops has convinced them of the importance of raising them, not only to provide against such affliction, to enable them also, with the surplus above their own consumption, they may procure their other indispensable necessities.

The population of the years 1794, 1795 and 1796 is nearly about the same, but the crops have increased from year to year, and all tends to the belief that this increase will be infinitely more perceptible in future years.

In the year 1794 the corn crop was 6,000 bushels; in 1795, 10,000, and in 1796, 17,000.

It was in this condition of things that M. Portell left his command.

It was, perhaps, impossible, from the foregoing facts, that the settlement at New Madrid could have made greater progress than it has up to this time. It was not husbandmen who came and laid the foundation, it was tradesmen, cooks, and others, who would live there with but little expense and labor, who, being once fixed there, having their lands and their cattle, the Indians having removed themselves to a distance, and trade no longer within the reach of all the world, necessity taught them that to procure the means necessary to live, they must resort to tilling the soil. The first attempts were difficult, but the inducement of disposing with ease of their crops determined them to labor.

The first steps have been taken; nothing remains for a wise Commandant, but to manage everything with prudence, according to the views of the Government, to firmly repel idleness and laziness, to welcome and encourage activity, and exhibit to the industrious man that he is distinguished above others and has earned the protection of the government, in giving him tangible proof, either by preference in purchasing from him or some other manner of recompense. The honest man, the active and industrious man, is sensible of the slightest proceeding on the part of his superior, and it is to him a great expansion to reflect that his labors and fatigues have not been ignored, and that they have given him a claim on the good will and benevolence of the heads of a Province.

What a vast field is open to a commandant who would reap advantage by these means, and gain the benedictions of all the worthy inhabitants of a colony.

I stop here, Mr. Commandant; what I might say further would add but little to the good purposes you design for the progress and success of the place. I have made a concise narrative of the origin of the post of New Madrid, and the reasons of its slow growth in agriculture. The census which follows, will give you a correct view of its present situation. It will prove to you that courage and emulation need but a slight support to emerge from the giddiness where they have so long remained. But for certain the Creoles will never make this a flourishing settlement, it will be the Americans, Germans and other active people who will reap the glory of it.

Observe, if it please you, sir, that amongst the habitations granted long since, those given by Francis Racine, by Hunot, Sr., the Hunot sons, Paquin, Laderoute, deceased, Gamelin, Lalotte, etc., have not yet had a single tree cut on them; that those of the three brothers, Saint Marie, Meloche and other Creoles are barely commenced.

You will see, on the contrary, that the Americans who obtain grants of land have nothing more at heart but to settle on them at once and improve them to the extent of their ability, and from this it is easy to draw conclusions.

Another observation which will surely not escape you, sir, is that the total heads of families amount, according to the census I exhibit to you, to 159, and that in this number there are fifty-three who have no property. This, I think, is an evil to which it would be easy for you to apply a remedy. In a county destined to agricultural pursuits, and to the breeding of domestic animals, it is too much that one-third of the inhabitants should stand isolated from the general interest, and that the other two-thirds should be exposed to be the victims of a set of idle and lazy people, always at hand at their slightest necessities to satiate their hunger by preying on the industrious.

I think, Mr. Commandant, that several habitations left by persons who have absented themselves from this post for a long time should be reunited to the domain.

The following are of this class:

One Enie Bolduc, absent for over two years, had a place at Lake St. Francis No 2.

One John Easton, absent over three years, had a place at Lake St. Eulalie; it is now abandoned. One Mr. Waters says he has claims on it. What are they?

One Tourney had a place at Lake St. Isidor; he associated with to cultivate it one Gamard. Tourney returned to France, and Gamard has worked for two years at Fort St. Fernando.

One M. Desrocher, why has he not worked his place in the Mill Prairie, which he holds for over four years? Has he not enough with the one he holds at St. Isidor?

One M. Chisholm holds three places; he lives on one he has just commenced to clear; a second is in litigation, and for over four years he has done nothing on a third near the village—has he not enough with two? Why hold land uselessly, and above all near the village?

The examination you will give the census, and the information concerning the property of each head of a family will lead you probably to other reflections. I append to the whole a new map of the village and its environs, as taken after the last abrasion of land by the Mississippi; this work claims your indulgence; it is not that of an artist, but one of the most zealous subjects of his majesty; and the only merit it may possess is to demonstrate to you with correctness the number of places that have been conceded in the village, the houses that are built thereon, and the names of the proprietors on the general list which correspond with the same numbers as those placed on each conceded place.

I pray you to believe me, with profound respect, sir, the commandant,

Your very affectionate and devoted servant,

New Madrid, December 31, 1796.

NEW MADRID, 31. Fbre, 1796.

Col. De Lassus remained at New Madrid until the spring of 1799, when he was promoted to the position of lieutenant-governor of Upper Louisiana. He was a prudent and conscientious commandant, and during his term the population of the district was considerably increased. He was succeeded by Don Henri Peyroux, who had previously been in command at Ste. Genevieve. Peyroux arrived in New Madrid, in August, 1799, and remained four years. He then resigned, and, leaving his wife at New Madrid, went to France, where he had large possessions. Being old and infirm, he did not wish to venture on a return voyage, and entered into an agreement with his wife for a separation, relinquishing to her all his title to their property in America.

After the resignation of Peyroux, the post was under the command of John Levallee until the transfer of Louisiana to the United States, in March, 1804. At that time the population of the district, including Arkansas and Little Prairie, numbered 1,350, about one-third being French and the remainder Anglo-Americans.

The settlement at La Petite Prairie (Little Prairie) was begun in 1794, by Francois Lesieur, at a point a short distance below the present town of Caruthersville, in Pemiscot County. A town covering some two hundred arpents of land was laid out, and divided into lots of an arpent each. A fort, called Fort St. Fernando, was constructed on the bank of the river. Among the residents of the town and vicinity, besides its founder, were Jean Baptiste Barsaloux, George and John Ruddell, Joseph Payne, Louis St. Aubin, Charles Guibeault, Charles Loignon, Francois Langlois and Peter Noblesse. In 1799 the population numbered 78, and in 1803 it had increased to 103. The village continued to prosper until the earthquakes of 1811-12, which almost entirely destroyed it. Its site was long since carried away by the waters of the Mississippi. Other settlements were made in what is now Pemiscot County, one in the vicinity of Gayoso, one north of Big Lake, another on Little River and a fourth on Portage Bay. The earthquakes drove most of the inhabitants away, and it was not until thirty years later that any considerable number of immigrants came in. One conspicuous figure remained in this section after others had fled. Col. John H. Walker, familiarly known as Harde-man Walker, located on Little Prairie about 1810, and continued to reside there until his death. He was sheriff of New Madrid County in 1821-22, and subsequently was a judge of the county court. One of his sisters married Dr. Robert D. Dawson, of New Madrid, and another married John Martin, of Point Pleasant.

During the year 1789 a road known as the King's road was marked out from Ste. Genevieve to New Madrid, and it was along this road that the settlements were the most numerous in New Madrid District and what is now Scott County. One of the earliest settlers was Edward Robertson, who, with his son-in-law, Moses Hurley, located near where Sikeston now is. The former in character and business methods was like Richard J. Waters. He was an extensive land speculator, and also kept a store and trading post. He was entirely uneducated, and could not write his name, but he was a shrewd business man, and succeeded in keeping most of the other settlers in his debt.

In 1796 or 1797 Capt. Charles Friend, with his family, came from Monongahela* County, Va., and received a concession of land near the present town of Benton. He had been a captain in the Revolutionary War, and was at this time about seventy-five years of age. He had a family of nine sons: Aaron, Israel, Teene, Charles, Jonas, Jacob, John, Alexander and David, and two daughters. Some of the sons were married in Virginia. Aaron and Teene were dissatisfied, and returned to their native State. Jonas, John and Jacob each received the customary concession of 800 arpents of land. Two of the brothers subsequently removed to Texas. About 1811 John Ramsey removed from Cape Girardeau, and located on what is now the county "poor farm," where he remained until his death in 1837. He had a family consisting of one son and eight daughters. Three of the daughters, Elizabeth, Ann and Mary, married, respectively, John, James and Robert Ravenscroft; another daughter, Harriet B., became the wife of Lewis Painter, and is still living; Rebecca married John Hall in Virginia, but came to the Territory with her father's family. Hall became a man of some prominence in political circles. He was a presidential elector on the Adams ticket, in 1828, and served one or more terms in the Legislature.

Joseph Hunter, one of the most distinguished pioneers of Southeast Missouri, came to New Madrid District in 1805, and located on a grant purchased from Joseph La Plante, near New Madrid. Very soon after he removed to Big Prairie, and with his brother-in-law, Samuel Phillips, located near the present town of Sikeston. Joseph Hunter was a son of a Scotch-Irish Presbyterian, who immigrated to America from the North of Ireland prior to the Revolutionary War. During the early settlement of Kentucky the family removed to Louisville. A brother of Joseph, who had been an officer in the continental army, received a grant of land on the river above the town in what is still known as "Hunter's Bottom." The mother of Joseph and a sister were killed by the Indians while in a flax-field near their home; a brother, Abraham, also met his death at the hands of the savages. Nancy Hunter, another member of the family, is mentioned in connection with the history of Ste. Genevieve.

Upon the organization of Missouri Territory, Joseph Hunter was appointed by President Madison a member of the territorial council. He had a large family, and his descendants are very numerous, embracing many of the wealthiest and most prominent citizens of that portion of this State. His eldest son, Milford, removed to Grand Gulf, Miss. The second son, Abraham, married Sally Ogden, and became the father of three sons and three daughters, viz.: Isaac, a judge of the Scott County Court; Joseph, a wealthy citizen of New Madrid, and Benjamin F., living near Sikeston, one of the largest land owners in Southeast Missouri; Catharine, who married first Americus Price, and second Marmaduke Beckwith; Mary, who married Archibald Price, and Amanda. Abraham Hunter in his day was probably the best known politician in Southeast Missouri, and served for twenty years, successively, in one or the other of the branches of the State Legislature. James, another son of Joseph Hunter, married Lucy Beckwith, and had two children: Joseph, killed in the battle of Pilot Knob, and Kate. David, a fourth son, married his cousin Nancy Phillips, by whom he had three children: Samuel, Betty and Jenny. Joseph Hunter, Jr., married Elizabeth Johnson, and was the father of two children: Maria, who married Maj. James Parrott, and Ann, who became the wife of Joseph H. Moore. Thomas, the youngest son of Joseph Hunter, Sr., married Eliza Meyers, and reared two children: Nannie Kate, wife of Col. Thomas Brown, of Columbus, Ky., and Senator William Hunter. Of the daughters of Joseph Hunter, Mary married Andrew Giboney, of Cape Girardeau, whose daughter is the wife of Hon. Louis Houck, and Hannah married Mark H. Stallcup, of New Madrid County. Capt. William Meyers was the first settler on the site of Benton. He was a native of North Carolina, but had lived for a time in Tennessee. He was a commissioned officer in the War of 1812, and distinguished himself as an Indian fighter.

That part of Scott County formerly known as Tywappity Bottom, which extended from Commerce to Bird's Point, began to receive settlers as early as 1798; among them were James Brady, James Curran, Charles Findlay, Edmund Hogan, Thomas, John and James Wellborn, and Stephen, Josiah and Robert Quimby. About 1802 or 1803 Thomas W. Waters, a South Carolinian, located on the site of Commerce, and established a trading post and store, in partnership with Robert Hall. He also kept a ferry across the Mississippi. He died within a few years after coming to this country.

The first settlement in the territory now embraced in Mississippi County was made about the year 1800 by John Johnson, who obtained a grant of land, and built a cabin on or near the present Bird's Point. The next year Edward Mathews, with his sons, Edward N., Charles, Joseph, James and Allen, settled on what was then known as St. Charles Prairie, but which has since borne the name of "Mathews' Prairie." They were joined within the next two or three years by Charles Gray, Joseph Smith, John Weaver, George Hecker, and Absalom McElmurry. The last named married Elizabeth Gray, and in 1810 removed to Arkansas, but returned to the Prairie three years later. About 1805 Abraham Bird, the founder of Cairo, Ill., crossed the river, and established himself on the land previously occupied by John Johnson, where he remained until the overflow of 1814-15. He then went to Louisiana, and a few years later his youngest son, John Bird, took possession of the homestead.

In 1812 Newman Beckwith came from Virginia, and located between Norfolk and Wolf Island, and the next year William Rush settled on Rush's Ridge. Lucas' Bend was settled by James Lucas, about 1802.

About 1800 John, Andrew and James Ramsey came from Cape Girardeau District, and located in the vicinity of Norfolk.

John and Drakeford Gray and Thomas Phillips were pioneers of Wolf Island Township, and William B. Bush, of Long Prairie.

In 1811 and 1812 the inhabitants of New Madrid District experienced a series of the most terrific earthquakes that have ever occurred on the American continent. The best account of these fearful convulsions that could be obtained is given in the following letter, written to Rev. Lorenzo Dow:

NEW MADRID TERRITORY, MISSOURI, March 22, 1816.

Dear Sir: In compliance with your request, I will now give you a history, as full in detail as the limits of a letter will permit, of the awful visitation of Providence in this place and its vicinity.

On the 16th of December, 1811, about 2 o'clock A. M., we were visited by a violent shock of an earthquake, accompanied by a very awful noise, resembling loud but distant thunder, but more hoarse and vibrating, which was followed in a few minutes by the complete saturation of the atmosphere with sulphurous vapor, causing total darkness. The screams of the affrighted inhabitants running to and fro, not knowing where to go or what to do, the cries of the fowls and the beasts of every species, the cracking of trees falling, and the roaring of the Mississippi, the current of which was retrograde for a few minutes, owing, as is supposed, to an eruption in its bed, formed a scene truly terrible. From that time until about sunrise a number of lighter shocks occurred, at which time one still more violent than the first took place, with the same accompaniments, and the terror which had been excited in every one, and indeed in all animal nature, was now, if possible, doubled. The inhabitants fled in every direction to the country, supposing (if it can be admitted that their minds were exercised at all) that there was less danger at a distance from than near the river. In one person, a female [Mrs. Lafont], the alarm was so great that she fainted, and could not be revived. There were several shocks a day, but lighter than those already mentioned, until the 23d of January, 1812, when one occurred, as violent as the severest of the former ones, accompanied by the same phenomena as the former. From this time until the 4th of February the earth was in a continual agitation, visibly waving as a gentle sea. On that day there was another shock, nearly as hard as the preceding ones; next day four such, and on the 7th, about 4 o'clock A. M., a concussion took place, so much more violent than those which had preceded it, that it was denominated the hard shock. The awful darkness of the atmosphere which, as formerly, was saturated with sulphurous vapor, and the violence of the tempestuous thundering noise that accompanied it, together with all the other phenomena mentioned as attending the former ones, formed a scene, the description of which would require the most sublimely fanciful imagination. At first the Mississippi seemed to recede from its banks, and its water gathered up like a mountain, leaving, for a moment, many boats which were here on their way to New Orleans, on the bare sand, in which time the poor sailors made their escape from them. It then rising fifteen or twenty feet perpendicularly, and expanding, as it were, at the same moment, the bank overflowed with a retrograde current rapid as a torrent. The boats, which before had been left on the sand, were now torn from their moorings, and suddenly driven up a little creek, at the mouth of which they laid, to the distance, in some instances, of nearly a quarter of a mile. The river, falling immediately as rapidly as it had risen, receded within its banks again with such violence that it took with it whole groves of young cottonwood trees which ledged its borders.

They were broken off with such regularity in some instances that persons who had not witnessed the fact would with difficulty be persuaded that it had not been the work of art. A great many fish were left on the bank, being unable to keep pace with the water. The river was literally covered with the wrecks of boats, and it is said that one was wrecked in which there was a lady and six children, all of whom were lost.

In all the hard shocks mentioned the earth was horribly torn to pieces; the surface of hundreds of acres was from time to time covered over of various depths by the sand which issued from the fissures which were made in great numbers all over the country, some of which closed up immediately after they had vomited forth their sand and water, which, it must be remarked, were the substances generally thrown up. In some places, however, there was a substance resembling stone-coal or impure stone-coal thrown up with the sand. It is impossible to say what the depth of these fissures or irregular breaks were. We have reason to believe that some were very deep. The site of this town was evidently settled down at least fifteen feet, and not more than half a mile below the town there does not appear to be any alteration in the bank of the river, but back from the river, a small distance, the numerous large ponds, or lakes, which covered a great part of the country, are nearly dried up. The beds of some of these are elevated above their former banks, several feet, producing an elevation often fifteen or twenty feet from their original state, and lately it has been discovered that a lake (Reelfoot Lake) was found on the opposite side of the Mississippi in the Indian country, upward of 100 miles in length, and from one to six miles in width of the depth of from ten to fifty feet. It has communication with the river at both ends, and it is conjectured that it will not be many years before the principle part, if not the whole of the Mississippi will pass that way. We were constrained, by fear of our houses falling, to live twelve or eighteen months after the first shocks in little light camps made of boards; but we gradually became callous and returned to our homes again. Most of those who fled from the country in the time of the hard shocks have returned home. We have felt since their commencement in 1811, and still continue to feel slight shocks occasionally. It is seldom that we are more than a week without feeling one, and sometimes three or four a day. There were two this winter past, much harder than we have felt for two years before, but since then they appear to be lighter than they have ever been, and we begin to hope that ere long they will entirely cease.

I have now, Sir, finished my promised description of the earthquake, imperfect, it is true, but just as it occurred to my memory, many of the most of the truly awful scenes having occurred three or four years ago. They, of course, are not related with that precision which would entitle it to the character of a full confidence that it is given to a friend. And now, Sir, wishing you all good, I must bid you adieu.

Your humble servant,

ELIZA BRYAN.

The center of disturbance seems to have been in the vicinity of Little Prairie, as it was there the greatest damage was done. Mr. Godfrey Lesieur, then a boy living at that place, wrote a description of the phenomena, from which the following is condensed: The earthquakes spent their greatest force in Pemiscot County. The first shock occurred at 2 o'clock A. M., on December 16, 1811, and was very hard, shaking down log houses, chimneys, etc. It was followed at short intervals by comparatively slight shocks until about 7 o'clock in the morning, when a rumbling noise was heard in the west resembling distant thunder, and in an instant the earth began to shake and totter to such a degree that no one was able to stand or walk. This lasted about one minute. At this juncture the earth was observed to be rolling in waves of a few feet in height, with a visible depression between. Soon the swells were seen to burst, throwing upward large volumes of water, sand, and a species of charcoal, some of which were covered with a substance having a sulphurous odor. When these swells burst, large fissures were formed, running north and south, parallel with each other for miles. The rumbling noise and the waves seemed to come from the west and travel eastward. Slight shocks were felt at intervals until January 23, 1812, when the country was visited by another earthquake, equally as violent as the first, and characterized by the same frightful results. Then it was that the cry arose among the people, "sauze qui peut!" ("save who can"), and all but two families left the country.

After the terrible shock of the 7th of January slight ones were from time to time experienced, until the 7th of February, when another very severe one, having the same effects as the other occurred, and caused great injury to land, in forming more extensive fissures, sinking high lands, and forming it into lakes, and making deep lakes high land.

It is a remarkable fact that so few casualties occurred during these terrible convulsions. Among the citizens there were but two deaths. Mrs. Lafont died from fright, and Mrs. Jarvis received an injury from the fall of a cabin log, from which she died a few days later.

Several stories have been handed down of the curious freaks of the earthquake. One of the most remarkable incidents occurred ten miles below Little Prairie on Pemiscot River. An old man named Culbertson with his family lived on a short bend in the river. About an acre of ground lay between his house and the river, and in this space was situated the well and smokehouse. On the morning of the 16th of December, after the second hard shock had subsided, Mrs. Culbertson started to the well for water and to the smokehouse for breakfast meat, when, to her great astonishment, no well or smokehouse was to be seen. Upon further search, they were both found on the opposite side of the river, and a canoe was necessary to reach them. The swelling of the earth had formed a fissure across the bend wide enough to permit the whole volume of the water to pass through, and the great pressure upon the point thus isolated forced it to the opposite bank, when the next land wave appeared.

These earthquakes were felt all over the Mississippi Valley, but no serious damage was done beyond a radius of about one hundred miles from Little Prairie. The following letter, written from Cape Girardeau to the Louisiana Gazette, indicates the extent of the damage at that place.

CAPE GIRARDEAU, February 15, 1812.

The concussions of the earthquake still continue. The shock on the 23d ult. was more severe and longer than that of December 16, and the shock of the 7th inst. was still more violent than any preceding, and lasted longer, perhaps, than any on record (from ten to fifteen minutes—the earth was not at rest for an hour). The ravages of this terrible convulsion have nearly depopulated the district of New Madrid; but few remain to tell the sad tale. The inhabitants have fled in every direction. It has done considerable damage in this place by demolishing chimneys and cracking cellar walls. Some have been driven from their houses, and a number are yet in tents. No doubt volcanoes in the mountains of the west, which have been extinguished for ages, are now reopened.

The destruction of large areas of previously good land left many persons homeless and landless, who had obtained grants from the Spanish Government or had made entries under the United States. For the relief of such persons Congress, on February 17, 1815, passed a law, providing for the relocation of their claims. Persons who had lost lands to the amount of 160 acres or less were permitted to locate any amount not exceeding one quarter section upon any lands then open for settlement, but relocations of more than one section were not allowed to those who had lost a greater amount. This beneficent act in a great measure failed of its object. The manner of procuring a title under it was tedious and expensive, and the claims in most cases were purchased by speculators and land-sharks, in whose hands they became instruments of fraud.

The settlement did not extend much beyond Little River until between 1820 and 1830. The first settlement in what is now Stoddard County was made not far from the year 1825. At that time Benjamin Taylor and a married son, Jacob Taylor, came from North Carolina, and located about three miles east of Bloomfield. There were two other sons, Abraham and Isaac, who, after marriage, made settlements—Isaac, two miles northwest, and Abraham, four miles north of Bloomfield. Peter and Jacob Crites, about the same time, came from Bollinger County, and located a short distance southwest of Bloomfield; John and Jonas Eaker, from North Carolina. Absalom B. Bailey, William Wray, Ephraim Snider, Thomas Neale and Jacob Miller were also among the pioneers of the county.

In 1829 the territory afterward organized as Stoddard County was attached to Cape Girardeau County, and by the court of that county it was divided into two townships. The part east of Castor River was called Pike Township, and the part to the north, Castor Township. Joseph Chapman and Thomas Wylie were appointed justices of the peace, and Joel Ramsey, constable in the first, and Thomas Neale and John Eaker, justices of the peace, and William Hardin, constable in Castor Township. The first election in Pike Township was ordered to be held at the house of Jacob Miller, and in Castor at the house of John Wray. The settlement went on very rapidly between 1830 and 1840, and at the latter date the population numbered over 3,000.

Dunklin County formed a part of Stoddard prior to its organization. It was difficult of access, and its settlement was longer deferred than that of any other county in Southeast Missouri. One of the first persons to locate within its borders was Howard Moore, who, in 1829, built a small house four miles south of the present town of Malden. He was originally from Virginia, but had lived in Tennessee. In 1831 Moses Norman, a native of Alabama, located on West Prairie. He had previously lived near Marble Hill, however. At about the same time Jacob Taylor removed from his first location, near Bloomfield, to West Prairie. Within the next three or four years the following locations were made: Henry Meyers and N. W. Seitz on West Prairie; Hugh Shiply, four miles north of Kennett; Evan Evans, four miles south of Kennett; Adam Barnhart and Holcomb, on Grand Prairie; Pleasant Cockrum, James Baker and Hollis, in the vicinity of Cockrum postoffice; Russell and William H. Horner, at Hornersville; John Cude, at Cotton Plant, and George Sheppard and Thomas Varner, in the vicinity of Kennett.

Butler County was long the favorite hunting ground of Indians as well as whites, and it was not until about 1820 that any permanent locations were made. The first of which any exact information could be obtained was that of Solomon Kittrel. He came from Kentucky, reaching his location on Cane Creek in November, 1819. There were then some 200 or 300 Indians camped on the creek, and they remained there for about three years. He took up a large body of land, and subsequently opened a general frontier store, bringing his goods from Cape Girardeau with ox teams. He also built a distillery, and sunk a tanyard in which he did an extensive business. He died, at an advanced age, in 1872. Among the other pioneers were Daniel Epps, Sr., who lived on what was known as the "Military Road," on Ten Mile Creek, where he had a mill; Thomas Scott, who lived on Cane Creek; Malachi Hudspeth, also, on Cane Creek; Martin Sandlin, who lived on Little Black River; Samuel Hillis, William and Frank Whittington, Samuel Polk, James Brannam, and the Applebys and Vandovers.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION, COURTS, ETC.

Judiciary of Ste. Genevieve District.—The court of quarter-sessions of the peace for Ste. Genevieve District was organized at the house of Andrew Buat, on December 11, 1804. The judges present were Moses Austin, Jacques Guibourd, Benjamin Strother, John Hawkins and Francois Valle. There being no attorney for the United States present, William C. Carr was appointed prosecutor pro tem. Israel Dodge, sheriff of the district, returned the following venire: Joseph Spencer, William Hickman, John Price, Joseph Pratte, Andrew Henry, Paschal Detchemendy, Charles Smith, Robert J. Brown, John Stewart, Charles Bates, Thomas Alley, Abraham Baker, William Murphy, David Murphy, Francis Clark, Camille De Lassus, James Hunter, John Burget, Samuel Bridge and Aquilla Low. The Court then appointed constables as follows: Andrew Morris, New Bourbon; Peter Leural, Ste. Genevieve; Joseph Tucker, on the Saline; Thomas Donohoe, between the Saline and the Cape Girardeau line; John Paul, Belleview, and Bernard Foster, of Mine à Burton.

Israel Dodge was appointed to receive proposals for the building of a jail 25x15 feet, with double walls of timber one foot thick, the space between to be filled with rocks. The jail was to be built on the public square.

At this term the grand jury made no presentments. The next term was held in March, 1805, at which time, Nicholas and Gabriel Keith, James Hunter, Henry Dodge, Joseph Donohue and Jeremiah Able were indicted, and convicted of assault and battery.

At the September term the jail was reported finished. It was built by J. B. Valle. At the same time Henry Dodge qualified as sheriff. In December the judges present were St. Gem Beauvais, P. Detchemendy, Camille De Lassus, Charles Smith, Andrew Henry and J. Donohue. The judges changed frequently, and during the next year (1806) there appeared John Smith T., John Hawkins, J. B. Valle, Francois Valle, Nathaniel Cook, John Callaway, Isidore Moore, Amos Bird, John Perry and William James.

The tax levy for 1805 amounted to $1,171.94, for the whole district. The assessors were John Perry and Nathaniel Cook, for the settlements on Big River, the Mines, Belleview and the Murphy settlement, and J. B. Valle and Thomas Maddin for the settlements on the Mississippi and Apple Creek.

In 1807 the district was divided into six townships: Breton, Belleview, St. Michaels, Big River, St. Genevieve and Cinque Homme. In 1814 Saline Township was formed from the townships of Ste. Genevieve and Cinque Homme, including all of the south part of the present county of Ste. Genevieve and the west part of Perry County. At the same time Platin Township was laid out to include all of the district north of Isle au Bois Creek, and east of Big River.

No courthouse was built until 1821. The courts prior to that time had been held in various dwellings. In 1808 James Maxwell received $50 for the use of the parish house. The tavern of John Price was used frequently, and after 1814 the courts met regularly at the house of Henry Dodge. This building is still standing, nearly opposite the courthouse, and is occupied as a saloon.

Prior to the organization of the circuit court, courts of oyer and terminer were held from time to time, for the trial of felony cases. At one of those begun on July 9, 1810, the first conviction for murder occurred. The judges were Otto Shrader, Amos Bird, St. Gem Beauvais, William James, and Nathaniel Cook. The defendant was Peter Johnston who was indicted for the murder of John Spear, in Big River Township, on May 25, 1810. Edward Hempstead was the attorney-general, and Henry M. Breckenridge and James A. Graham were assigned to defend the prisoner. A verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree was returned, and the prisoner was sentenced to be hanged on the 3d of August. It was also ordered, as a part of the sentence, that the body be delivered after death to Dr. Walter Fenwick for dissection. The execution took place on the hill near the academy building in the presence of all the people of the town.

The second conviction for murder took place in the month of February, 1812, J. B. C. Lucas and Joseph Pratte being the judges. Charles Heath was convicted of the murder of Hugh Jones in the township of Breton. His attorneys were Richard S. Thomas and Andrew Scott. He was hanged on Academy Hill on March 9, 1812. These have been the only two executions in the history of Ste. Genevieve County. Many fatal encounters, however, have occurred, which excited great interest at the time. One of these took place in the year 1816. The parties were Auguste De Mun, a son of Jacques De Mun, captain of dragoons of St. Domingo, and an early settler in New Bourbon, and William McArthur, a brother-in-law of Lewis F. Linn. Both were candidates for the territorial House of Representatives. The former had repeated some slanderous statements concerning McArthur's alleged connection with counterfeiters, which, coming to his ears, caused him to send a challenge to De Mun, who refused to accept it on the ground that McArthur was not a gentleman. This incensed McArthur, and he denounced De Mun as a coward. The quarrel had now reached a stage where each proposed to kill the other on sight. They met on the stairway at the courthouse, De Mun going up and McArthur coming down. Both fired, and De Mun fell mortally wounded, while McArthur remained unhurt, and was never arrested or brought to trial.

A very tragical event occurred in the year 1811 in the form of a duel between Thomas T. Crittenden, and Dr. Walter Fenwick, both residents of Ste. Genevieve. Fenwick was one of four or five brothers, who came to Louisiana Territory about the beginning of the century. Three of them, Ezekiel, Thomas and James, lived in Bois Brule Bottom, in the neighborhood of Brazeau. Ezekiel did not bear the best of reputations, and had been tried for larceny at Ste. Genevieve. Crittenden was a lawyer, and a brother of Senator Crittenden of Kentucky. Dr. Fenwick was a very worthy citizen, a skilled physician, and held a high position in society, and originally had had nothing to do with the quarrel which led to the duel. The difficulty, the exact nature of which is not remembered, arose between his brother Ezekiel and Crittenden. Crittenden had acted as attorney-general in some cases, and perhaps had had something to do with the prosecution of Ezekiel Fenwick, but this is not certain. Whatever may have been the cause, Ezekiel Fenwick sent by the hand of his brother, the Doctor, a challenge to Crittenden. Crittenden refused to meet Ezekiel. This the Doctor took as a personal affront, and immediately offered himself in his brother's place, which was accepted. The meeting took place on October 1, 1811, on Moreau's Island opposite Kaskaskia. Gen. Henry Dodge and John Scott were the seconds. At the first fire Dr. Fenwick fell mortally wounded, and died the next day. Crittenden remained unhurt. Dr. Fenwick was buried in the old Catholic cemetery, and his grave, marked by a sandstone slab, bearing the inscription: "Doctor Walter Fenwick, born 1775, died Oct. 2, 1811," may still be seen.

In the year 1830 the famous John Smith T. was tried for murder. Smith came to Louisiana Territory about 1803 from Roane County, Tenn., where he had lived for several years, and had held a large tract of land in defiance of all other claimants. When he reached Missouri he located at Shibboleth, in what is now Jefferson County, and engaged in lead mining. At this time there was more or less conflict, over the title to the mines, and he championed the cause of the miners against the owners or claimants, and even went to Washington to look after the interests of the former class. There was nothing in his manner or his personal appearance suggestive of the desperado, and yet, it is said, that no less than fourteen men met their death at his hands. He was under the medium size, of slight, wiry build, and ordinarily was mild and courteous in his manner. He had a sort of mania for fire-arms, and kept his house stocked like an armory. He was a good mechanic, and two of his slaves were skilled workmen, and together they manufactured the fire-arms he used, which were of superior accuracy and finish. He was of a restless and adventurous disposition, and when Burr was about to make his contemplated invasion of Mexico, in company with Henry Dodge, he started to join it, but turned back upon learning of Jefferson's proclamation. He also organized a company to gain possession of the lead mines around Galena, but was driven away by the Indians.

The murder for which he was tried, as mentioned above, occurred in September, 1830. Smith had come to Ste. Genevieve, and was stopping at a tavern kept by William McArthur. There he met a young man named Samuel Ball, and drank with him several times. While the two were alone in the bar room they became involved in a quarrel, and Smith with his ever ready pistol, fired a shot, killing Ball instantly. He was arrested by Eloy Lecompte, then sheriff, without resistance, and at the November term of the circuit court was tried. He was ably defended by John Scott, who secured an acquittal. Ball was a young man and a stranger in the town.

The first county court under the State government met at Ste. Genevieve, on May 21, 1821. Joseph Pratte, James Austin and James W. Smith were the justices. Thomas Oliver was re-appointed clerk, and continued to hold the office until his death, five years later. At this time the county had become reduced to its present limits, and was divided into two townships, Ste. Genevieve and Saline. In 1827 Ste. Genevieve Township was divided, and the northern portion erected into the township of Jackson, and in 1832 Beauvais Township was formed from parts of Saline and Ste. Genevieve, and named in honor of St. Gem Beauvais. Two years later Jackson Township was divided, and Union Township formed from the western portion.

The present jail of the county was erected in 1875 by P. J. Pauley & Bro. at a cost of about $8,000. At the same time a fire-proof building for the clerk's offices was built at a cost of $2,500. In 1883 the present courthouse was erected, for which $10,000 was appropriated. It is a two-story, brick building, trimmed with free-stone. In 1880 a farm, consisting of 118 acres, was purchased from Jules F. Janis for a poor farm. It has since been greatly improved, and is now one of the best institutions of the kind in Southeast Missouri.

Judicial History Cape Girardeau District.—The court of general quarter-sessions of the peace for Cape Girardeau District was organized on the 19th of March, 1805, the following judges, commissioned by Gov. W. H. Harrison, presiding: Christopher Hays, Louis Lorimier, Thomas Ballew, Robert Green, John Guething, John Byrd, and Frederick Limbaugh. Joseph McFerron produced his commission as clerk of the court, and the sheriff, John Hays, returned the panel, of the grand jury, of whom the following appeared and were sworn: Henry Sheridan, James Earls, Joseph Waller, John Taylor, Daniel Harkelrode, Louis Lathem, John Patterson, Matthew Hubble, Elijah Whitaker, Ithamar Hubble, Martin Rodney, Samuel Pew, James Boyd, William Boner, John Abernathy, Samuel Randol, James Currin, Robert Crump, Samuel Bradley and Frederick Bollinger. Indictments were returned against William Harper for an assault "upon Raccoon, an Indian of the Delaware tribe," and against Baptiste Menie, for burglarizing the store of Waters & Hall. Both were tried and convicted at the next term of the court.

John Randol, Jeremiah Still, William Hand, William Ross,

Wm. Lorimier and Michael Limbaugh were appointed constables.

At the June term, licenses were issued to Louis Lorimier and Thomas W. Waters, to keep ferries across the Mississippi River, at their respective residences. Edenston Rogers was also licensed to keep a house of entertainment at Hubble's Mill.

A petition was received from the inhabitants of Tywappity bottom for a road from that settlement to Cape Girardeau. This petition was reported upon favorably, and the road was ordered to be opened to pass near Charles Finley's, and thence to Charles Lucas', to meet the road from New Madrid. Another petition was received for a road from Cape Girardeau, to Andrew Ramsey's and thence to Hubble's Mill. This was signed by the following persons: Samuel Bradley, Andrew Ramsey, Sr., Andrew Ramsey, Jr., Enos, James, and John Hannah, Joseph Thompson, John and Robert Giboney, Samuel Worthington, Charles Bradley, Joseph and James Worthington, William Lorange, Jeremiah Simpson, Jacob Jacobs, Terence Doyle, Morgan Byrne, Jacob Friend, William Bonner, David Harris, James Ramsey, Luke Byrne, Daniel Sexton, Solomon Thorn, John C. Harbison, Moses Byrne, Isaac Smith and Matthew Hubble.

A third petition was for an extension of the road from Ste. Genevieve, "to pass the Upper Delaware town, to John Byrd's; thence to William Daugherty's; thence to Jeremiah Simpson's, thence to the edge of the Big Swamp to meet the New Madrid road." Joseph Young, Abraham Byrd Jacob Jacobs, Charles Bradley, and Jeremiah Thompson were appointed "to view the ground and make return to the next court."

The rates of taxation were fixed as follows: On each horse, 25 cents; each head of neat cattle, $6\frac{1}{2}$ cents; each bond servant or slave, 50 cents; each able-bodied single man, who shall not have taxable property to the amount of \$400, 50 cents; each \$100 worth of taxable property, 25 cents.

In accordance with the following proclamation the first courts were held at Cape Girardeau:

BY WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Indiana Territory, and of the District of Louisiana.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, by my proclamation of the 1st day of October last, it was declared that the seat of justice for the District of Cape Girardeau should be at such place as should be thereafter determined upon, and

WHEREAS, I have not yet received sufficient information on the subject to enable me to determine upon the proper site for the permanent seat of justice, but as it is necessary a temporary one should be fixed upon, I have thought proper to issue this, my proclamation, notifying all whom it may concern that the Courts of Common Pleas, of General Quarter-Sessions, and the Orphans' Court for said district, shall, until otherwise directed, be held at Cape Girardo, upon the lands of Louis Lorimier, and for the purpose of enabling me to select the most eligible site for the permanent seat of justice, I do hereby appoint the justices of the Court of General Quarter Sessions, of the said District of Cape Girardo, commissioners for the purpose of receiving proposals from such persons as may be possessed of situations that are decided proper for the purpose, and to report the same to me in writing, together with their opinions respecting the same.

Given under my hand, and the seal of the Indiana Territory of Vincennes, this 1st day of January, 1805, and of the independence of the United States the 29th.

By the Governor,

WILLIAM HENRY HARRISON.

JOHN GIBSON, Secretary.

In accordance with the provisions of this proclamation propositions for the seat of justice were received from Louis Lorimier, William Daugherty and Jesse Cain. Dougherty proposed to locate it on what is known as the Russell farm, then owned by him, and adjoining the present site of Jackson. Cain wished it established on the farm now owned by August Henecke.

The proposition of Lorimier was accepted and was as follows: He promised to convey in fee simple to the district four acres of land, to be located on any part of his grant north of his dwelling-house; and also to furnish all the timber necessary for the public buildings to be taken off his land anywhere "between Thorn's Creek and the Shawnee path," and give $200 and thirty days' labor of a man toward the erection of the buildings. He further promised to reserve for the use of the inhabitants of the town "he means to lay off at Cape Girardeau" all the timber on that part of his land bounded on one side by a right line "from the mouth of Thorn's Creek to the intersection of his boundary line and the Shawnee path, and on the other side by the said town and the Mississippi River." The Governor issued a proclamation fixing the permanent seat of justice at Cape Girardeau, and on January 13, 1806, the court of quarter-sessions appointed the following commissioners to lay off the town, and locate the site of the public buildings: Anthony Haden, Edmund Hogan, Christopher Hays, Robert Hall and Benjamin Tennille. At the same time

John Guething, John C. Harbison and Pierre Godair were appointed to let the contract for the erection of a jail and courthouse. At the next term of the court Anthony Haden presented a plan of the town as laid off, and it was ordered that three acres of the public square be divided into lots and sold, which was accordingly done. Ezekiel Able bought Lot No. 1, for $62; John Scott, Lots Nos. 2 and 4 for $77 and $89, respectively; Joseph McFerron, Lot No. 5, for $62, and John Risher, Lot No. 6, for $69.

The public square consisting of one acre was cleared by Moses Byrne, for which he received $20.

The contract for building the courthouse and jail was let to Ezekiel Able. He completed the latter in December, 1806, but before beginning the courthouse, he became insolvent, and that building was never erected. The jail was a small log structure, built like most of the jails of that time, with a dungeon, and a somewhat more comfortable apartment known as the "debtor's room," in which persons held for debt or some minor misdemeanor were confined. It was twelve feet wide, twenty-five feet long, and nine feet high, the walls built of oak timbers one foot square. This building seems to have been badly constructed, as the sheriff protested against it from the first, and in 1812 the grand jury reported: "The present condition of the district jail is a great public grievance which deserves attention, and calls for relief from the competent authority. Prisoners have so frequently paid debts, or expiated or escaped punishment by passing through the jail, that the idea of imprisonment is publicly hooted at."

In 1813 the courts of common pleas and general quarter-sessions of the peace were superseded by a court of common pleas, whose jurisdiction was that of both—the former combined. At the same time Cape Girardeau County succeeded Cape Girardeau District, and a new seat of justice was established. From March, 1814, until the following year the courts were held at the meeting-house on the plantation of Thomas Bull.* In 1815 the courts of common pleas were abolished, and circuit courts established. The latter had a more extensive jurisdiction even than the former, and besides taking cognizance of civil and criminal causes, and transacting all the probate business, it administered the affairs of the county. The first session of this court was held in the north end of a house attached to what is now the residence of Mrs. Schmuke in May, 1815, by Richard S. Thomas, judge of the southern circuit.

The commissioners for the new seat of justice were John Davis, John Sheppard, S. G. Dunn, Abraham Byrd and Benjamin Shell, who, in February, 1814, purchased from William H. Ashley fifty acres of land lying in the waters of Hubble's Creek. The house in which the first circuit court was held had already been erected, and it was used as a courthouse until 1818, when a large barn-like frame structure was completed on the public square. It was built by John Davis for $2,450. The jail was erected some two years previous, at a cost of about $1,400. It was destroyed by fire some time in 1819, but was immediately replaced by a new one, erected by William L. Byrd at a cost of $1,994.

The town was laid off in 1815, and named in honor of "Old Hickory," who had just achieved his famous victory at New Orleans. The lots were sold at various times, and in May, 1820, the aggregate sales amounted to $9,008.76.

The first division of Cape Girardeau District for municipal purposes was made in 1806, when it was divided for the purpose of taxation by a line "commencing at the upper corner of the northern boundary line of Louis Lorimier's large tract of land on which he resides; thence by the said boundary line one mile; thence in a straight line to the old fording place to Cape La Croix Creek on the old road to Andrew Ramsey's; thence in a straight line adjoining, and above the plantation of Samuel Randol; thence to and adjoining the plantation of Thomas Ballew; thence to the plantation of James Randol; thence to the plantation of John Patterson; thence to the mouth of Byrd's Creek; thence due west to the western boundary of the district." Charles G. Ellis and Abraham Byrd were appointed assessors for the northern district, and John Abernathy and Frederick Bollinger of the southern district.

The next year the district was divided into five townships:

Tywappity, German, Byrd, Cape Girardeau and St. Francois. The following were the boundaries:

Tywappity, bounded on the east by the Mississippi River, on the north and west by the middle of the "Big Swamp," and on the south by the district line. Cape Girardeau, bounded on the east by the Mississippi River, on the south by the middle of the "Big Swamp" and on the north and west by a line, beginning at Joseph Wallers' ferry on the Mississippi; thence in a straight line to Benijah Lafferty's; thence along the road to William Williams'; thence in a straight line to where the roads intersect each other between James Randol's and William Daugherty's mill; thence down Hubble's Creek to the middle of the "Big Swamp." Byrd, bounded on the east by the line of Cape Girardeau Township, on the north by the district line, on the south by the "Big Swamp" and on the west by the White Water River. German, bounded on the north by the district line, on the east by White Water River, on the south by the middle of the "Big Swamp" and on the west by Turkey Creek. St. Francois, bounded on the north by the district line, on the east by Turkey Creek, on the south by the middle of the "Big Swamp," and to extend as far west as there are any settlements. By reference to a map, it will be seen that Tywappity Township included nearly all of what is now Scott County; German Township, nearly all of Bollinger and a small portion of Madison; and Cape Girardeau and St. Francois Township, the settlements in what is now Wayne County. The line separating Byrd and Cape Girardeau Townships began at what is Robertson's Landing, and ran in a very nearly direct course to a point on Hubble's Creek, two miles south of Jackson.

By the organization of Wayne and Scott Counties, in 1818 and 1822, Tywappity and St. Francois Townships were cut off. The others remained the same as before until 1822, when Randol Township was formed from portions of Byrd and Cape Girardeau. In 1824 Byrd Township was divided, and Apple Creek Township erected from the northern portion of it. At the same time Lorance Township was formed from the southern part of German Township. In 1840 a new township called Union was erected from portions of Apple Creek and German, and four years later all that part of Lorange Township south of the road running from Greenville to Jackson was made a new township by the name of Liberty. In May, 1848, the county court appointed to divide the county into municipal townships was composed of Snider, John M. Johnson and W. W. Horrell. They formed eleven townships: Lorange, Clubb, Union, German, Liberty, Hubble, Cape Girardeau, Randol, Shawnee, Byrd and Apple Creek, but three years later Bollinger County was organized, and the first four and a part of the fifth were cut off. The townships organized since have been White Water, in 1852; Welch, in 1856, and Kinder in 1872.

In August, 1837, the county court decided to build a new courthouse, and Edward Criddle, Nathan Vanhorn, Ralph Guild and Ebenezer Flinn were appointed commissioners to superintend its erection. It was built of brick and stone, forty-five feet square, two stories high with a cupola. It was occupied until 1870, when it was destroyed by fire. In November of that year the county court appropriated $25,000 for the building of the present handsome brick structure, which was erected by John Lansmann, of Cape Girardeau. The architect was E. D. Baldwin.

The jail built in 1819 was used by the county until 1849, when a stone structure two stories high and twenty feet square was erected upon the public square west of the courthouse. William McGuire was the superintendent, and Jacob Kneibert, the contractor. This building was so badly constructed that ten years later it was torn down, and the present brick jail erected.

Criminal Record.—The criminal record of Cape Girardeau County is a creditable one. During a period of nearly a century only three persons have been executed in the county. One of these was a slave, and another was brought from an adjoining county. The first conviction on a capital charge occurred in 1828. The case came from Scott County on a change of venue, and was that of the State against Pressly Morris for the killing of Zach Wylie. The homicide was committed at a public sale at Kelso's. Morris was a blacksmith, and some tools used in blacksmithing were up for sale, when Wylie said to him, "Buy them and they will make a full set with those you stole in Illinois."

Morris resented the insult, and during the altercation stabbed Wylie, inflicting a fatal wound. Morris was tried, convicted and hanged. The execution took place in Jackson just east of the cemetery, and was witnessed by an immense crowd. Public opinion was against the sentence of the court, which was considered too severe. The offense had been committed in the heat of passion, and under great provocation. Wylie was of good family and well educated, but was a dissipated and quarrelsome young man, while Morris was a quiet, industrious mechanic.

At the December term of the circuit court in 1832, an indictment was found against Isaac Whitson for the murder of John M. Daniel. He was convicted, and was hanged on the 30th of January, 1833. On the day on which the murder was committed, Whitson and Daniel had been drinking at a saloon in Jackson, and at night started for home together. Whitson was carrying a gun. The next morning the body of Daniel was found about a mile from town, with a bullet in it. Suspicion at once fell upon Whitson as the murderer, and he was arrested. The evidence against him was mainly circumstantial, but it was deemed conclusive.

The only other execution was that of a slave, who had killed another slave with an ax.

A case which created great interest came from Madison County on a change of venue. On February 1, 1834, Valentine Heifner shot and killed Peter Chevalier, in the town of Fredericktown. He was arrested and brought to Jackson for trial. The case was ably managed on both sides. The attorneys for the defense were John Scott and N. W. Watkins. The prosecution was conducted by Circuit Attorney Greer W. Davis, assisted by Johnson Renney. They were the four ablest lawyers in Southeast Missouri at that time. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter, and the penalty was fixed at thirty days' imprisonment and $300 fine. A new trial was secured with the same result, except that the imprisonment was increased to three months.

In 1831 there occurred two murders, which were not investigated by the courts. They are closely connected with the history of the family of John Dunn, Sr., which has in itself all the elements of a tragedy. John Dunn, Sr., was an early settler, and a man of large wealth, but he possessed an evil disposition, and was cordially hated by all who knew him. He was a bully, and, like the most of bullies, a coward. Whenever he left home he was attended by two well-armed and athletic negroes, who never lost sight of him. His first wife died, leaving four children: Samuel, William, John and Anna. He then married Elizabeth Neal, a very estimable lady, who, after bearing him twin children, was driven from his home, and subsequently divorced. This happened in 1825. It is said that the children by his former wife became jealous of their stepmother and her children, and brought false charges of conjugal infidelity against her. On the other hand it is related by one familiar with the incident that Dunn had become enamored of a younger woman, and himself plotted to secure the divorce. Be that as it may, he soon after married Nancy Snider, whom he is said to have abused most shamefully. He was a hard task-master, and one day, having climbed a tree to see if his negroes were at work, a limb fell upon him injuring his spine and paralyzing his lower extremities. He lived several months, but never again arose from his bed.

William Dunn was married three times. His third wife was a widow, formerly a Miss Renfroe, with whom he quarreled. They separated, and he applied for a divorce. Soon after, in September, 1831, while crossing Neal's ford on Hubble Creek, he was shot and killed, it was thought by John Renfroe, his wife's brother. The latter was arrested, and had a trial before a magistrate, but there was no evidence against him, and he was discharged. Two or three weeks later, he with his wife and sister were in a peach orchard gathering and eating peaches, when a gun was fired from the woods near by, and Renfroe fell, mortally wounded. His assassin was never discovered, but suspicion fell upon Samuel Bowlin, who, it was alleged, was bribed by John Dunn, Sr.

County Court Proceedings of New Madrid District.—The courts of New Madrid District were organized in March, 1805, with Richard J. Waters, Elisha Winsor, Henry Masters, John Baptist Olive and Michael Amoreaux on the bench. Joshua Humphreys was the clerk, and George Wilson, sheriff. As the earliest records of the court of quarter-sessions have been lost or destroyed but little is known of its transactions.

By an act of the Legislature approved December 31, 1813, New Madrid County was established with the following boundaries: On the north, by the south line of Cape Girardeau County, which was a line "commencing on the Mississippi River at the head of Tywappity Bottom at the upper end of a tract of land where James Brady now lives;* thence west to the south side of the Big Swamp; thence a direct line to the Shawnee village on Castor River; thence due west to the western boundary line of the Osage purchase;" on the east by the main channel of the Mississippi River; on the south by a line commencing in said river opposite the lower end of the island laid down in the navigator as No. 19; thence in a direct line to strike White River at the mouth of Little Red River; thence up Red River to the western boundary of the Osage purchase; thence northwardly on said line to the south line of Cape Girardeau County. By an act passed the previous August, Samuel Cooper, Thomas Windsor, Daniel Sparks, John Guething and John Tucker were appointed to locate permanently the seat of justice.

At the same time the court of common pleas was reorganized, and Thomas Neale, John Levallee, William Winchester and William Gray were commissioned judges. They proceeded to divide the county into townships and appoint judges of election as follows: The territory before embraced in the townships of Little Prairie and New Madrid was constituted New Madrid Township, and John E. Hart, George Tennille and Robert McCoy appointed judges of election, which was to be held at the house of Samuel Cooper. Big Prairie Township remained as before. Enoch Liggett, Samuel Phillips and Thomas Bartlett were appointed judges of the election to be held at the house of Samuel Phillips. Tywappity Township was bounded on the west by New Madrid and Big Prairie Townships, on the north by a line running so as to include "the place whereon Thomas Phillips now lives, known as the Lucas place;" thence to the river Mississippi so as to include Stephen Harris' ferry; thence with the meanders of the river until it strikes Bayou St. John at its confluence with the Mississippi. John Tucker, Drakeford Gray and John Brooker were appointed judges of election, which was to be held at the house of Edward N. Matthews. Moreland Township was bounded as follows: Commencing at Harris' Ferry and running with the Mississippi until it intersects the line of Cape Girardeau; from thence with said line until it strikes the Shawnee town on Castor; thence down Castor until it intersects the mouth of Castor; from thence an east course so as to strike the south line of Big Prairie. The house of Charles Friend was fixed on as the place of holding election, and John Ramsey, Hugh Johnston and Timothy Harris were appointed judges. All the remainder of the county was formed into a township called White River, and the house of Capt. Harris on Spring River fixed as the voting place. George Ruddell, Asa Music and Capt. Hines were appointed judges of election.

In March, 1814, the court convened at the house of Samuel Phillips in Big Prairie, and at the next term at the house of Jesse Bartlett. In November of that year the commissioners located the seat of justice on fifty acres of land donated by Stephen Ross and Moses Hurley, lying about one-fourth mile south of the present town of Sikeston. It was surveyed and laid off into lots by County Surveyor Joseph Story. Sales of lots took place on November 28 and December 21, and the money obtained from this source was used in the erection of a jail, which was completed in 1817. The courts were held at this place until the organization of Scott County, when New Madrid once more became the seat of justice. The old jail was then sold, and Mark H. Stallcup, John Shanks, Thomas Bartlett, Francois Lesieur and John Ruddell were appointed commissioners to erect a courthouse and a new jail. This they proceeded to do, and soon completed a log jail and a small frame courthouse, the first building of the kind erected in the county. The latter was used until 1854, when the present courthouse was built. A new jail was built in 1845. In 1822, the area of the county having been so greatly reduced, it was necessary to reconstruct the townships, which was done as follows: "All that part of the county north of a line to run in a westwardly direction through the county, passing north of the settlement at Rawl's old mill and the plantation of Thomas Hignight, and on westwardly to the western boundary of said county, shall be and constitutes the township of Big Prairie; and all that part of the county south of said line to a line beginning on the Mississippi River and running west on the line dividing the surveys of Robert McCoy and Joseph Vandenbenden, thence westwardly so as to include the plantations of R. G. Watson and Aaron T. Spear on Lake St. Ann, thence west to the western boundary of said county, shall be known and designated as the township of New Madrid, and all that part of the county south of the last said line shall constitute the township of Lesieur."

In 1829 Stoddard County was erected, and the territory in New Madrid County still further reduced, but there was no change in the townships until 1831, when St. John Township was formed from the eastern part of the county.

In 1834 Little Prairie Township was established with the following boundaries: "Beginning at the Mississippi River, at the south line of the land of Thomas Alexander; thence due west to the Little River, and down said river to the State Line; thence with said line to the Mississippi River." Pemiscot Township was formed in 1839 from that part of Little Prairie Township south of a due west line from Island No. 16. In 1842 the south part of Big Prairie Township was erected into a new township called Woodland; at the same time Big Lake Township was formed from portions of Lesieur and Little Prairie. In 1845 Woodland Township was dismembered, and one-half attached to Big Prairie and the other half to New Madrid. In 1851 New Madrid County was reduced to its present size by the organization of Pemiscot County, and no more townships were organized until 1874, when East and Portage Townships were formed.

Circuit Court Proceedings.—The circuit court for New Madrid County was organized by Judge Richard S. Thomas, in December, 1815, at the house of William Montgomery, in Big Prairie. The first important case tried was that of the United States against William Gordon for murder. He was convicted, and was hung just below the town of Winchester. The sheriff at that time was Col. John H. Walker, and the circuit attorney, Greer W. Davis. The circumstances of the murder have been forgotten, and the papers relating to the case destroyed. From that time for sixty years there was not a conviction of murder for which the death penalty was exacted. Perhaps the most closely contested and most interesting case which has arisen in the history of the county was tried on a change of venue in Madison County. On December 12, 1855, Robert G. Watson was shot and killed by Sullivan Phillips. Watson was one of the most prominent, as well as one of the oldest citizens of the county. Phillips was a youth about sixteen years of age, the son of Pressly Phillips, and nephew of John L. Ross, both men of considerable wealth. Phillips had been hauling timber through fields belonging to Watson against his protest. He went out to lay up a fence that had been thrown down for the passage of the teams, and, while at work, Sullivan Phillips, accompanied by his father and uncle, rode up. He carried a rifle, and, without waiting for a demonstration on the part of Mr. Watson, fired at him, inflicting a mortal wound. With this the party turned and galloped away. A hand, who had been assisting Mr. Watson, reported the bloody deed, and the citizens of New Madrid at once made up a posse, and started in pursuit of the murderers. Young Phillips and his companions took to the swamps, but were surrounded and captured. The feeling against them in all of the surrounding counties was so great that a change of venue to Madison County was granted. There, at the September term, 1858, Sullivan Phillips was tried and acquitted. The father and uncle were found guilty of murder in the second degree, and the penalty fixed at ten years in the penitentiary. The defense was conducted by Samuel Caruthers, Mason Frizzell, D. M. Fox and several others. A new trial was granted, and, upon various technicalities and pleas, it was postponed from time to time, until in 1863 it was still upon the docket. Frizzell had been appointed to the bench of the Ninth Circuit, and was incompetent to try it. It was, therefore, removed to Washington County, and finally was dismissed.

In 1881 a gang of desperadoes were found to have made their rendezvous in New Madrid County, and the attempt to arrest the outlaws resulted in the shooting of a citizen of New Madrid, the sheriff of Wayne County and his deputy, and, with one exception, in the extermination of the band. The gang had terrorized some families in the vicinity of their rendezvous, which was a short distance north of Bayne's store, and on May 9, 1881, Willie Knox had left his home, fearing an attack from them. When night came on his family became alarmed and started for the house of a neighbor accompanied by George Williams, a youth employed by Knox. Some of the gang were watching their movements, and, mistaking Williams for Knox, fired upon the company, wounding Williams in the thigh. The next day Knox went to New Madrid and swore out a warrant for Jesse Meyers, James Hamilton and Robert Rhodes. The sheriff, with a large posse, went in search of the desperadoes, and about noon found them at their rendezvous behind a fortification of logs. A fight ensued in which Robert La Forge was killed and two or three other members of the posse wounded. One of the outlaws was badly wounded, but the others made their escape. The wounded man gave himself up, but he either died soon after from the effects of his wounds or was disposed of by some of the posse. Another member of the gang, who gave his name as Lincoln Mitchell, was captured a day or two later and placed in jail. Vigorous efforts were instituted for the capture of the remaining members, and officers in adjoining counties were notified to keep a lookout for them. On the evening of May 19 two suspicious looking individuals were seen in Greeneville, Wayne County, and the next day Sheriff J. T. Davis and his deputy, J. F. Hatton, started in pursuit of them. They found them at breakfast at James Lee's, three and one-half miles west of Greeneville. They dismounted, approached the house stealthily and reached the door unobserved. They covered the two men with their revolvers, but the desperadoes, for such they proved to be, were too quick for them. Their cocked revolvers were lying in their laps, and, quick as lightning, they fired at the sheriff and his deputy, both shots taking effect. Davis was struck under the right eye, and Hatton over the left ear. Both men fell, and the outlaws again made their escape. The news of the shooting spread rapidly, and the whole population turned out to assist in their capture. The entire western part of the county was picketed. Capt. W. T. Leeper with three companions were stationed at Campbell's switch, and two other men at a switch two miles below. Those at Campbell's switch remained in an old station house during the night, and at daylight, as they were preparing to go for their breakfast, they saw two men coming around the curve toward the station, but, thinking they were the two men who had gone to the switch below, stood watching their approach, and it was not until they were almost opposite the station house that they recognized two of the outlaws. Both men cocked their guns and laid them on their left arms, but Capt. Leeper and one of his companions, Ambrose Beatty, who stood upon the platform, instantly fired, bringing both to the ground. They were discovered to be Jesse Meyers and James Hamilton, and both were thought to be dead. Meyers was shot in the left side, and Hamilton in the back and shoulder. The former soon recovered consciousness, and informed his captors that another member of the gang, Frank Brown, would be at Mill Springs at 9 o'clock, and a party was sent in pursuit. He was captured ten miles west of Mill Springs, and he and Meyers were taken to New Madrid, but to prevent lynching were sent to St. Louis. Hamilton's wound was fatal. On June 10, 1881, the grand jury of New Madrid County returned an indictment against Meyers and Brown, for the murder of La Forge, and one against Mitchell as an accessory before the fact. R. M. Darnall, C. P. Hawkins and H. C. Riley were appointed to defend the accused, while J. N. Morrison, prosecuting attorney of Wayne County, J. J. Russell, prosecuting attorney of Mississippi County, and Maj. R. A. Hatcher, assisted C. A. Laforge, prosecuting attorney of New Madrid County. Mitchell plead guilty to murder in the second degree, and was sentenced to thirty years in the penitentiary. Brown and Meyers were found guilty, as indicted, and hung on July 15, 1881. They made a full confession before their execution, stating that the gang, consisting of Frank Brown, Jesse Meyers, Robert Rhodes, James Hamilton and Lincoln Mitchell, was organized at Mill Springs in March, 1881, for the purpose of emulating Jesse James' band. They planned to commit a few robberies in Missouri, and then to remove farther west. They had prepared themselves with breastplates cut from a circular saw, but these were found too cumbersome to wear. All the members of the organization were from other States, and were uneducated young men of little intelligence.

Representatives.—The representatives from New Madrid County to the first Territorial Assembly in 1813 were John Shrader and Samuel Phillips. This assembly nominated four men from the county from whom the President chose a member of the Territorial Assembly. The four nominated were Joseph Hunter, Elisha Winsor, William Gray, William Winchester. The first named received the appointment. In the Constitutional Convention of 1820 the county was represented by Dr. Robert D. Dawson and Christopher G. Houts.

The first representative to the State Legislature was Richard H. Waters. The first senator was Stephen Ross, who defeated Mark H. Stalleup and R. D. Dawson. During its earlier history the county was quite evenly balanced between the Whig and Democratic parties. For several years the Whig candidate for the Senate was Robert D. Dawson, and the Democratic candidate Col. Abraham Hunter, and they alternated in holding the office. In 1842 the vote for senator was: George Netherton, Whig, 474; Abraham Hunter, Democratic, 248. For representative, H. P. Maulsby received 343 votes and Joseph Hilterbrand, 240.

The representatives for New Madrid County since 1840 have been as follows: H. P. Maulsby, 1840-44; F. C. Butler, 1844-46; John W. Walker, 1846-48; James Walker, 1848-50; R. A. 74; James S. Barnes, 1874-76; Ed. Newsom, 1876-78; William Dawson, 1878-84; A. J. Moore, 1884-87; Abraham Hunter, 1887.

Wayne County Organized.—In the year 1815 the Territorial Legislature passed an act dividing the county of New Madrid, and establishing the county of Lawrence with the following boundary lines: "Beginning at the mouth of Little Red River, on the line dividing said county from the county of Arkansas; thence with said line to the River St. Francois; thence up the River St. Francois to the division line between the counties of Cape Girardeau and New Madrid; thence with said last mentioned line to the western boundary line of the Osage purchase; thence with the last mentioned line to the northern boundary line of the county of Arkansas; thence with the last mentioned line to the place of beginning, is hereby laid off and erected into a separate and distinct county, to be known by the name of Lawrence County." Louis De Mun, William Robinson, William Hix, Sr., Morris Moore, Solomon Hewitt, Andrew Criswell and Isaac Kelly were appointed to locate the seat of justice. In December, 1818, an act was passed for erecting the southwest part of the county of Cape Girardeau and the eastern part of the county of Lawrence into a separate and distinct county, of which the boundaries were as follows: "Beginning at the southeast corner of the county of Madison, running southwardly on the ridge which divides the waters of Crooked Creek and Castor until it strikes the edge of the "Big Swamp," between Jenkin's Creek and Castor; thence west to the river Castor; thence down the main channel of the said river Castor until it strikes the New Madrid County line; thence south so far that a due west line will leave the plantation of Edward N. Mathews on the north; thence west to the Osage boundary line; thence north with said line so far that a due east line will intersect the place of beginning." The new county was named Wayne, and owing to its great size it was often spoken of as the "State of Wayne." The commissioners appointed to fix upon a site for the public buildings were Overton Bettis, James Logan, Solomon Bollinger, William Street and Ezekiel Ruebottom, and until the seat of justice was located the courts were ordered to be held at the house of Ransom Bettis.

In 1854 the records of the county were entirely destroyed by fire, and nothing could be learned concerning the organization of the courts.

The first courthouse was a two-story, hewed log building, which in 1849 was replaced by a brick structure that burned four years later. Immediately afterward $2,500 was appropriated to rebuild it, and Jeremiah Spencer and L. H. Flinn were appointed to superintend its construction. It was completed in 1856. The first jail was built of logs, and stood on the south corner of the public square. It was moved away, and in 1849 a brick one erected. In June, 1872, $9,000 was appropriated for a new jail, and 10 per cent. bonds for that amount were issued. The contract was let to Pauley Brothers, who turned over the building to the county in March, 1873.

The first clerk of the courts was Solomon R. Bowlin. Thomas Catron also filled the office, but was not the immediate successor of Bowlin. He resigned in 1849, and went to California. The office was then administered by Nixon Palmer for a short time, after which George W. Creath was elected. Wiley Wallis was one of the first sheriffs.

But few notable criminal cases have come up before the circuit court of this county. In 1848 or 1849 four brothers named Greene were tried for murder. Three of them were sent to the penitentiary, and one, a boy, to the house of correction. They had killed a man in what is now Bollinger County. About 1854 Joseph Upton was tried, on a change of venue from Ripley County, for the murder of Parsons Burrows. The case was decidedly against the defendant, and he was convicted; but Solomon G. Kitchen, his counsel, succeeded in provoking Judge Jackson into making unfair rulings against him, and thus, on writs of error, obtained two rehearings. Upton was convicted a third time, and pending an appeal died in jail.

Formation of Madison County.—The act for the organization of Madison County was passed on December 14, 1818, on the same day that the counties of Lincoln, Pike and Montgomery were formed. At that time the circuit court transacted all the county business.

Court Proceedings.—The first term was held at the house of Theodore F. Tong, on July 12, 1819, by Judge Thomas. Charles Hutchings performed the duties of clerk, but at the next term Nathaniel Cook received the appointment. The sheriff was Joseph Montgomery, who returned the following list of grand jurors: Jason Harrison, John White, Adam Ground, John Clement, Jacob Shook, Elisha Bennett, Thomas Cooper, Lee Pettitt, Nicholas LaChance, John B. Deguire, Alexander Fletcher, William Dillard, James Pettitt, Thomas Crawford, Peter Sides, John Best, John Sides, Henry Whitener, John Wright and E. Mitchell. They returned indictments against John Callaway, Samuel Strother, J. G. W. McCabe, Joseph Bennett, D. L. Caruthers, George and Jacob Nifong, Peter Chevallier, Moses Baird, Samuel Anthony, Thomas Craddock, George Robertson, John Bridges, Adam Henderson and Arthur McFarland for assault and battery; against "Fred. Mires" for horse stealing; against George Wear for "cow stealing;" against J. B. Stephens for larceny, and against William Stephens for hog stealing. In the assault and battery cases all were found guilty, and fined in various sums, except Bridges and McFarland. In the other cases there were no convictions.

Stephens was charged with having stolen a considerable sum of money from his neighbor, Caruthers, but there was not sufficient proof to convict, and the case against him was discharged. Soon after a man named John Duncan came to the county from Tennessee, and, hearing the reports of the robbery, planned to murder Stephens, secure the money which he was supposed to have stolen, and make his escape. He went to Stephens' house, two and one-half miles east of Fredericktown, and represented himself as a land buyer. Stephens was at work in the woods, not far away, with his sons, two young lads, and thither Mrs. Stephens sent Duncan. The latter by stratagem succeeded in securing the ax and gun which Stephens and his sons had, and murdered all three. He went to the house, killed Mrs. Stephens, spent some time in searching for the money, and departed, leaving two small children unharmed. He was arrested a day or two later, tried, convicted and sentenced to be hung on April 5, 1821. The execution took place in the northeast part of town, near the creek, at what is still known as "Duncan's Hole." People came from all the surrounding counties, and several hundred were present. Duncan made a full confession upon the scaffold, entirely exonerating two worthy citizens who had been indicted as accessories.

At the November term, 1827, Conrad Cotner was brought on a change of venue from Cape Girardeau County, and tried for the murder of Charles Hinkle. He was found guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced to imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of $500. To this the court added the following order: "It is ordered that said Cotner be put to labor in the blacksmith shop of Elisha Bennett in the town of Fredericktown, in the county of Madison, in the manner following: The said Cotner shall labor in said shop, chained to the anvil block therein, the first, third, fifth, seventh, ninth and eleventh months of the time for which he is to be imprisoned, the said Bennett furnishing the said Cotner with diet, and returning him to prison every night."

In February, 1844, A. W. Smith killed John Vincent. The two men, who were neighbors, had had a quarrel about some stock of the one breaking into the field of the other. Smith, who had previously borne a bad reputation, waylaid Vincent as he was returning home one night, and shot him. He lived only long enough to reach the nearest house and relate what had occurred. Smith upon trial was convicted, and was sentenced to be hung. His counsel took an appeal to the supreme court, and pending a decision an election was held in Fredericktown, at which several friends of the murdered man were present. After indulging very freely in whisky they proposed to take Smith from the jail and hang him, but this the sheriff with a posse of citizens prevented. After standing guard for about two hours the sheriff, to quiet the mob, proposed to vote upon the question of hanging, knowing that the majority present would sustain the law. This was agreed to, but no sooner had the guards left the jail than the lynchers made a dash, broke open the door, secured the prisoner, and, putting a rope around his neck, literally dragged him to the place of execution. Then they compelled a Methodist minister, Rev. Jesse P. Davis, to offer up a prayer for the condemned man, after which they proceeded with the hanging. Fourteen of the mob were subsequently arrested and indicted, but, with one or two exceptions, the entire number died within a year, and before any trial was had.

The county court of Madison County held its first meeting on February 12, 1821, at the house of J. G. W. McCabe, at which time William Dillon and Henry Whitener, justices, were present, and appointed Nathaniel Cook, clerk. At this time the county extended west to Black River, and was divided into three townships, Castor occupying the eastern part, St. Michaels the western, and Liberty the northern. Two new townships were now laid out. They were Twelve-Mile, which included all the southwest part of the county, and German Township, which adjoined it on the east. Election places were then fixed, and judges of election appointed, as follows: Liberty—at the house of John Renohue; Ephraim Stout, Anthony Sharp and Elisha Bennett, judges. St. Michaels—at the courthouse; Thomas Cooper, James Holman and Thomas Craddock, judges. Castor—at the house of William Anthony; Hugh Fulton, John White and David Ward, judges. German—at the house of the widow Whitener; John Bess, Michael Mouser and Anthony Clubb, judges. Twelve Mile—at the house of William Boren; William Boren, William Cravens and A. Johnston, judges. Other townships were subsequently organized—St. Francois in 1845, Arcadia in 1848, and Union in 1850. In 1857, by the organization of Iron County, Arcadia and the greater part of Union and Liberty were cut off. Liberty was then re-established and Polk Township formed.

Prior to 1822 the courts were held at private residences. In that year the present brick courthouse was completed. It is in a remarkably good state of preservation, and is the oldest structure of the kind now in use west of the Mississippi. A jail was completed a year or two before the courthouse. It stood on what is still known as the jail lot, and was built with triple walls of logs, in the middle wall the logs being placed upright. It was burned by an escaped prisoner named Mitchell. A brick jail was then built upon the public square. It met with the same fate as the first, and for over thirty years the county has been without a jail.

In 1822 the total receipts of the county were $249.42, and the expenditures $343.72. In 1859 the receipts were $4,542.01, and the expenditures $5,931.91. The indebtedness of the county was then $14,946.76, of which $12,850 was incurred in the construction of the Fredericktown and Pilot Knob gravel road. This indebtedness has been paid, and the county is now in a highly prosperous condition.

Perry County Organized.—The county court of Perry County was organized at the house of Bede Moore on May 21, 1821, by Lewis Cissell, D. L. Caldwell and Samuel Anderson, who appointed Cornelius M. Slatterly, clerk. The county was divided into three townships: Brazeau, covering the territory between Cinque Homme and Apple Creeks; Bois Brule, which embraced the northeast part of the county, and Cinque Homme including the remainder of the county. The voting places and judges of the first election were: For Brazeau, the house of Samuel Anderson; John G. Love, James Fenwick and Benjamin Davis, judges. Bois Brule—the house of Charles Ellis; William Flinn, William Sincey and H. P. Harris, judges. Cinque Homme—Thomas Riney, Joseph Tucker and Aquilla Hagan, judges.

Robert T. Brown qualified as sheriff, and Joseph Tucker was appointed assessor. Commissioners were appointed to locate the seat of justice, but no move was made toward the erection of a courthouse until 1825, when the contract for a two-story frame building was let to Thomas Hayden. This house was completed and occupied by the courts in August, 1826. A log jail had previously been erected in the northeast part of the town. It was used until 1839, when a brick jail, thirty-three feet long and twenty-two feet wide, was erected on the public square, near the courthouse.

The circuit court for Perry County was organized on June 4, 1821, by Richard S. Thomas. The grand jury was composed of the following citizens: Aquilla Hagan, Zachariah Layton, John Tucker, Peter Holster, Guy Elder, James Manning, Daniel McAtee, James C. Moore, John P. Adams, Bernard Brown, Benedict Riley, Michael Hagan and Henry McAtee. No indictments were returned, nor was there much business before the court for the first four or five years. The first important trial was that of Ezekiel Fenwick, indicted for the murder of William R. Bellamy, on March 29, 1824. Fenwick had had a store at Brazeau, and had failed to pay some of his debts. Bellamy, who was a constable, was sent to attach the goods, but when he found Fenwick, the latter had his goods upon a boat preparatory to removing them across the Mississippi. He attempted to tie up the boat, but Fenwick resisted, and in a struggle which ensued shots were exchanged, one ball taking effect in Bellamy's arm. Bellamy was a dissipated man, and, owing to bad treatment of the wound, it resulted in his death. Fenwick escaped to Cape Girardeau County, but, upon promise of being admitted to bail, surrendered himself. Judge Thomas, according to agreement, discharged him upon bail, and this afterward formed one of the charges in the impeachment case against the Judge. Fenwick, upon trial, was acquitted. At the July term, 1832, William Burns was tried for the murder of John Cummings, but was promptly acquitted on the ground of self defense.

The most atrocious crime ever committed in the county was the murder of Mary Layton by her husband, James Layton, in January, 1841. He was an habitual drinker, and very quarrelsome. He became enraged at his wife for not preparing his meals to suit him, and beat her to death with a billet of wood, in the presence of their little son, a lad eight or ten years old. Layton made his escape, but was arrested in Wayne County. He obtained a change of venue to St. Francois County, where he was convicted, and sentenced to hang on the 17th of June, 1843. At the appointed time several hundred people from Perry and St. Francois Counties assembled to witness the hanging, but, just before the hour of execution arrived, a reprieve was brought to the sheriff by the attorney for the defense, Ed. M. Holden. This greatly incensed the crowd, as the murder had been a most brutal one, and there was no doubt as to the guilt of the accused. The cry of "hang him anyway!" was set up, and spread through the crowd. A few advised allowing the law to take its course. It was therefore decided to take a vote upon the question. Accordingly all those in favor of immediate hanging betook themselves to one side of the public square, and those opposed to the other side. The party in favor of hanging carried the day by a large majority, and Layton was taken from the jail and hung to a beam placed across the "stray pen" on the public square in Farmington.

The present courthouse in Perry County was erected in 1859, when $8,000 was appropriated for that purpose, and John E. Layton was appointed to superintend its construction. It is still in a good state of preservation. The offices have been furnished with large fire-proof safes, and there are few counties in the State that have as complete or as conveniently arranged records.

Mr. Biehle.

St. Francois County Established.—St. Francois County was established by an act of the Legislature passed December 19, 1821, from portions of Ste. Genevieve, Washington and Jefferson Counties. The judges of the county court, James Austin, George McGahan and James W. Smith, held their first meeting on February 25, 1822, at the house of Jesse Murphy, but after electing John D. Peers, clerk, adjourned to meet on the same day at the house of David Murphy. The county was then divided into four townships, Perry, Pendleton, Liberty and St. Francois. For these townships the following appointments were made: Perry—William Hale, constable; John Andrews Jr., assessor; Thomas Hale, Archibald McHenry and John Baker, judges of election. Pendleton—Wesley Garrett, constable and assessor, and James Milburn, Absalom Dent and John Sherrill, judges of election. Liberty—Robert Hays, constable; James Dunlap, assessor, and Reuben McFarland, James Dunlap and Samuel Kincaid, judges of election. St. Francois—Benjamin Burnham, constable; Laken Walker, assessor, and Richard Murphy, John Murphy and D. F. Marks, judges of election.

Until 1824 the courts were usually held in the Methodist meeting-house, which stood on the hill south of town, where the cemetery is. In that year a brick courthouse was built on the public square. At the same time a log jail was erected on the site of the present jail. It was two stories high, with a dungeon beneath, which was entered through a trap door from the upper room. The walls of the dungeon were three logs thick. It was burned by an inmate, who hoped thereby to effect an escape, but was nearly smothered before he was rescued. In 1856 a new jail was built, at a cost of $4,400. It was used until 1870, when the present jail was completed, under the supervision of William Carter and L. D. Walker. The first courthouse was replaced by a second in 1850. The contract was let in December, 1849, to Henry H. Wright, for $8,000, and the building was formally received in December 1850. The contract for the present courthouse, which is the handsomest structure of the kind in Southeast Missouri, was let to James P. Gillick, of St. Louis, in July, 1885, for $13,980. It was received on October 7, 1886, the total cost, exclusive of the furniture, having been $15,560.41.

In August, 1836, a new municipal township called Marion was formed from the northern part of Perry, which had previously occupied all the north half of the county. In 1840 Black River Township was erected from that territory since cut off to form Iron County, and ten years later Iron Township was formed. Of the two remaining townships, Randolph was established in 1858, and Big River in 1863.

The circuit court was organized on April 1, 1822, by Judge N. B. Tucker, of St. Charles County. The sheriff, Michael Hart, returned the following venire: D. F. Marks, Archibald McHenry, G. Estes, Thomas George, John Baker, Hardy McCormick, George Taylor, William Spradley, William Gillespie, Dubart Murphy, Isaac Murphy, James Cunningham, Isaac Mitchell, John Burnham, Lemuel Holstead, Jesse McFarland, Eleazer Clay, Leroy Matkins, Vincent Simpson and Samuel Kincaid. They found no indictments. No court was held at the following term, owing to the absence of the judge. In August, 1823, Alexander Stuart was present and presided. The grand jury presented John Bequette for selling liquor without a license, and William, a slave of Jesse Blackwell, for stabbing Shadrach, a slave of James Kerr. The first important case was tried before Judge Cook, in July, 1825. It was that of the State against John Patterson and George Wilson for the murder of James Johnston, at Bequette's store, in March of that year. Patterson was a bully, and Johnston a small, quiet, unobtrusive man. Patterson sought a quarrel, and then took the opportunity to beat Johnston to death. Wilson was present and was tried as an accessory, but was acquitted. Patterson was found guilty and sentenced to be hung on August 31, following, but was released by some of his friends, and was never recaptured. There have been several other trials for murder, but executions have followed except the one mentioned in the sketch of Perry County.

Scott County Organized.—The territory now embraced in Scott County, during the Spanish domination was attached to the post of Cape Girardeau, and the proclamation issued by Gov.

Harrison, defining the boundaries of the districts of Upper Louisiana, in 1804, did not change the line between New Madrid and Cape Girardeau, but on June 7, 1805, Gov. Wilkinson, by proclamation, fixed the line as follows: "Beginning at an outlet of the river Mississippi, called the Great Swamp, below the Cape Girardeau, and extending through the center of the same to the River St. Francois, and thence until it strikes the present northern boundary of the district of New Madrid, and with the same westwardly as far as the same extends." This change proved very inconvenient to the people living in Tywappity Bottom, who had hitherto transacted all their business at Cape Girardeau, and in response to a petition from them the Governor, on August 15, 1806, issued a second proclamation fixing the boundary as follows: "The southern boundary of the district of Cape Girardeau shall form and, after the date hereof, be fixed and determined by a due west line, to be commenced on the right bank of the Mississippi adjoining to and below the plantation of Abraham Bird, opposite to the mouth of the Ohio." This remained the boundary between the districts of New Madrid and Cape Girardeau until the organization of the counties in 1813. The limits of New Madrid were then extended to include nearly all of what is now Scott County, but on December 28, 1821, the following act of the Legislature was approved:

AN ACT DIVIDING THE COUNTY OF NEW MADRID, AND ERECTING THE SAME INTO TWO SEPARATE AND DISTINCT COUNTIES.

The now county of New Madrid shall be and the same is hereby divided and erected into two separate and distinct counties, by a line running as follows: Beginning in the main channel of the river Mississippi, opposite a small creek or bayou, called James Creek or Bayou; thence in a direct line to the mouth of said creek; thence in a northwesterly course to a point in the swamp due north of the line between townships numbered 25 and 26 east of the fifth principal meridian, parallel with the northern boundary line of a tract of land situated in the upper end of the Big Prairie originally granted and confirmed to Moses Hurley, and where Mrs. Elizabeth Phillips now lives; thence running due west to the western boundary line of the said county of New Madrid; and that the said tract of country lying to the southward of said line shall be continued to be called and known by the name of New Madrid County, and the tract of country lying northwardly and eastwardly of said line shall be called and be known by the name of Scott County.

By the same act Enoch Evans, Abraham Hunter, Thomas Roberts, Joseph Smith and Newman Beckwith were appointed to locate the seat of justice for Scott County.

County and Circuit Court Proceedings.—The county court was organized at the house of Thomas Houts in February or March, 1822, at which time the judges were Andrew Ramsey, Richard Mathew and Thomas Houts.*

At this time the county contained but two townships, Moreland and Tywappity, the latter embracing all of what is now Mississippi County. Soon after the organization of the county court four new townships were formed—Richland, Kelso, Mississippi and Wolf Island. The judges of election appointed in 1830 were as follows: Mississippi—James Ramsey, Henry Clark and Thomas Hunter; Wolf Island—Drakeford Gray, Silas McBee and Alexander Mills; Kelso—John Byrne, William Hutson and Andrew Ramsey; Tywappity—W. B. Bush, John Weaver and A. McElmurry; Richland—John Evans, M. H. Stallcup and James Hunter; Moreland—Alexander Montgomery, Silas King and Thomas Houts. In 1836 Tywappity Township was divided, and St. James Township formed from the southern part. The voting place was fixed at McDaniel's Mill, and James Parker, N. G. Ferguson and A. B. McDaniel appointed judges of the next election. In 1839 St. James Bayou Township was formed, and the elections ordered to be held at the house of Jerry Cravens.

The first courthouse was a small log building erected on the public square at Benton soon after the town was laid out. A jail was not built until 1837, when $500 was appropriated for that purpose. Previous to that time prisoners were taken to Jackson. About 1844 the log courthouse was torn down, and a brick building erected in its place. It was so poorly constructed that in a few years it became unsafe, and was replaced by a frame building. By an act of the Legislature, passed January 26, 1864, the county seat was removed to Commerce, and the courthouse sold. A small appropriation then made by the county court was supplemented by the citizens of Commerce, and a substantial brick building erected. In 1866 the contract for a jail, to cost $3,800, was let, and the building completed the same year. In 1878, by a vote of the people, the seat of justice was returned to Benton, and in 1883 the present courthouse was built at a cost of $11,000.

*The county court records were nearly all lost or destroyed during the war, so that but little is known of its transactions.

The circuit court of Scott County was organized by Judge Thomas on February 11, 1822. Joseph A. Hopkins presented his commission as sheriff, and gave bond in the sum of $5,000 with John Hall and William Meyers as sureties. John P. Rutter was appointed clerk of the court, and was ordered to procure a seal. The court then adjourned until June, at which time the following grand jury was impaneled: L. R. Davis, John Ashley, Bartlett Conyers, John Wathen, Samuel Fowler, W. Benefield, Robert Wood, John V. Lucas, Edward Fowler, James H. Dudley, Thomas Moore, Thomas Whitaker, William P. Stidger, James Cardin, John Friend, James Purtle, Colburn Wiley, Silas Carpenter, Silas Risley, William Alexander, George Anderson, Solomon Hays, Bartholomew I. Evans. The first indictments were found against Samuel Glove and James Ramsey for assault and battery, Newman Beckwith for selling liquor to Indians, and Anthony Wills for vagrancy.

The first indictment for a capital offense was found against Pressley Morris in 1828, but he obtained a change of venue, and was tried in Cape Girardeau County. In February, 1836, Parmelia Yarber was indicted for the murder of her infant child. Upon being solemnly called, she failed to appear, and the judge declared her "outlawed and convicted of the crime whereof she stands charged in the indictment. It is therefore considered, ordered and adjudged that Parmelia Yarber be hung by the neck until she is dead." In 1854 or 1855 William Byrne was indicted for the murder of Thomas J. Calhoun, who was shot from ambush while plowing in his field. Byrne obtained a change of venue to Cape Girardeau County, was tried and convicted, but made his escape from the jail and was never recaptured.

The only person who has died upon the scaffold in Scott County was Travis Harris, who was convicted of the murder of his father-in-law, Squire Masterson, on November 7, 1872. One Miller was convicted of the murder of Frank Hamilton, and sentenced to be hung, but before the day for his execution arrived he succeeded in hanging himself to the door of his cell.

Organization of Stoddard County.—In 1829 the Legislature passed an act defining the boundaries of a new county to be called Stoddard, in honor of Capt. Amos Stoddard, and annexed it to Cape Girardeau County, for civil and military purposes. It thus remained until January 2, 1835, when an act was passed for its organization. By this act it was made to embrace all the territory between the St. Francois and Little Rivers, and south of Black Mingo and the "Big Swamp."

Court Transactions.—The first county court met at the house of A. B. Bailey, which stood in the southwest part of the present town of Bloomfield, on February 9, 1835. Jacob Taylor, Field Bradshaw and John Eaker were the justices, and Jonas Eaker the clerk of the court. Soon after a small brick courthouse was erected upon the public square, and a log jail southeast of the square. These buildings were used until 1856, when $10,000 was appropriated for the erection of a new courthouse, and Solomon G. Kitchen appointed as superintendent. At the same time a new jail was built by Daniel Kitchen. During Price's raid in September, 1864, the courthouse was burned by some stragglers, but fortunately the records had been removed. At the beginning of the war Maj. H. H. Bedford took the records into Arkansas, and concealed them, and, after the close of the war, returned them without the loss of a single book.

In 1867 the county court made an order for the rebuilding of the courthouse, and appointed William G. Phelan to superintend the work. The contract was let to George F. Miller and Samuel D. Henson, and the building was completed for occupancy in 1870. During that year the contract for a new jail was let to P. J. Pauley & Bro., for $8,000, and an order made for the issuance of 6 per cent county bonds to the amount of $10,000.

Upon the organization of the county it was divided into four municipal townships—Castor, Pike, St. Francois and Liberty. In 1850 a fifth township, Duck Creek, was added, and soon after four more townships were erected. They were Prairie, Clay, Benton and Fillmore. In 1853 the territory of the county was reduced. A strip nine miles wide was taken off on the south, and added to Dunklin County, and a similar amount from the north, and added to Cape Girardeau. The townships were then reduced to five, and relocated under the following names: Liberty, Richland, Duck Creek, Castor and Pike, to which was afterward added New Lisbon. In 1868 the county was again redistricted, and Elk Township formed.

The first circuit court for Stoddard County was held at the house of Absalom B. Bailey, on March 21, 1836, by John D. Cook, and continued but one day. The grand jury empaneled was made up of the following men: Samuel Lesley, foreman; Andrew Neale, Benjamin Taylor, Frederick Varner, Ephraim Snider, Jacob Crites, William V. Carlock, George Slinkard, Frederick Slinkard, Peter Proffer, Levi Baker, Henry Miller, Henry Ashbranner, William W. Hicks, Daniel Bollinger, Samuel Moore, Thomas Neale and Horatio Lawrence. They were charged by the judge and retired, but reported no business before them, and were discharged. The next term of this court was held in February, 1837. At the following June term indictments were found against John Summers for larceny, against Lucien Barnhart for the same offense, against Davis Revelle for selling liquor without a license, against Green Freeman for adultery, and against John Cockerell for arson, but none of them were prosecuted to conviction. The first person sent to the penitentiary from Stoddard County was Peter Jones, who was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for stealing $15 from William Henley. In 1843 Daniel Sanford and M. B. Koons were indicted for the murder of Samuel Chapman. The former was tried first and acquitted, and the indictment against the latter was then quashed. Sanford, Koons and Chapman were physicians practicing at Bloomfield, and considerable jealousy and enmity existed among them. Koons and Chapman met one day near where Maj. Bedford's office now is, and, after exchanging some words, engaged in a fight. Sanford, who happened to be present, laid hold of Chapman, who was a very high-tempered man, and attempted to stop the fight. At that Chapman struck at Sanford, but the latter being much the stronger man pushed him away. He then drew a dirk, stabbed Sanford several times, and turned and ran. Sanford drew a large pocket knife, and, overtaking Chapman, plunged it into his neck, inflicting a fatal wound. To avoid imprisonment, Koons and Sanford escaped to Texas, but returned at the next term of court, and were indicted as above stated.

The next trial that excited general interest was that of Sarah Buckner, brought on change of venue from Bollinger County in 1856. Mrs. Buckner had been twice married. By her first marriage she had two children, a boy and a girl, who, at the time of the trial were aged about ten and fourteen years, respectively. Her second husband was a boy only nineteen years old, who had been employed by her to work the farm, and who, through her blandishments, had first become criminally intimate with her, and then had been forced to marry her. She soon tired of him and drove him away, but, after the birth of their child, she sent him word to return and take it away, as she did not wish to care for it. He returned for the child, and while sitting in front of the fire waiting for his wife to clothe it properly, the latter ordered her daughter to kill him with an ax. The daughter obeyed so far as to strike him a blow, which rendered him insensible, but did not kill him. Mrs. Buckner then seized the ax and finished the bloody work. To conceal the crime, she tore up the floor of the cabin and attempted to bury the remains, but, finding this impossible, set fire to the house. Afterward the heart and some of the bones that had not been consumed were gathered up, taken to a slough, and stamped into the mud.

The disappearance of the young man soon led to an investigation, and the little boy, who had witnessed the murder, related the details of the horrid deed. Mrs. Buckner and her daughter were arrested. The latter was tried in Bollinger County, and sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment in the penitentiary, where she died a short time after her incarceration. Mrs. Buckner obtained a change of venue to Stoddard County, was convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to hang on July 18, 1856. An appeal was taken to the supreme court, and the cause was remanded for a new trial. This resulted as did the first, and the date of execution was fixed for February 5, 1857. A second appeal was taken, and, while pending, the jail at Bloomfield was broken open, and the prisoner rescued. At about this time the Civil War came on, and no attempt was made to recapture her.

Within the past twenty years, several persons have been tried in Stoddard County for murder, and three executions have taken place. At the March term, 1870, John H. Skaggs was brought on a change of venue from Dunklin County, and tried for the murder of Robert V. Richardson, whom he killed in Clarkton on January 6, 1870. He was convicted, and was hung on August 6, of the same year.

On October 2, 1876, William Shaw was shot and killed by some one in ambush, while working at Kapp's sorghum mill. Poindexter Edmundson was arrested for the crime, and the trial, which took place in March, 1877, resulted in the verdict, "guilty of murder in the first degree." He was sentenced to hang on May 15, 1877, but an appeal was taken, and the execution was postponed for a short time.

Soon after his imprisonment he and another prisoner overpowered the jailer, and made their escape, but were recaptured within a few days. He was hanged by Collin Morgan, then sheriff of the county.

In the autumn of 1879 Thomas Dixon and James McNabb, accompanied by a woman represented as the wife of Dixon, came to Stoddard County from Arkansas, and rented a farm two miles south of Essex. In March, following, McNabb disappeared. He was said by Dixon to have gone to Arkansas to arrest a man for whom there was a reward offered. A few weeks later he told several neighbors that McNabb had been killed in attempting to make the arrest. He appropriated McNabb's property to his own use, and, after making a crop, returned to Arkansas. Nothing more was thought of the matter for nearly two years. In February, 1882, a buyer of walnut timber came into the neighborhood, and the owner of the farm rented by Dixon and McNabb, remembering that Dixon had buried a large walnut log, decided to exhume it. He did so, and under it was the partially decomposed body of a man, which, by the clothes and some other articles, was identified as that of McNabb. Dixon was arrested, tried and convicted, and sentenced to be hung on May 18, 1883.

The evidence was purely circumstantial, but it was conclusive, and, although an appeal was taken, the supreme court refused to interfere, and Dixon was executed on May 2, 1884.

On July 30, 1880, John L. Ramsey killed Charles Flint at Jenkin's mill. Ramsey was a man of quarrelsome disposition and dissipated habits, while Flint was a reputable citizen. They had had some prior difficulty, when they met at the mill. There Ramsey sought a quarrel, and finally succeeded in engaging Flint in a fight, in which he cut him with a knife, killing him almost instantly. He was arrested and had two trials. The first resulted in a mistrial, and the second in conviction of manslaughter. He was sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary, but was soon pardoned by Gov. Marmaduke. Subsequently he was arrested for assaulting his wife, but escaped from the jail and left the State.

On September 6, 1881, John H. Harper killed Ambrose Snider in the road near Bloomfield. He escaped and went to East Tennessee, where he had previously resided. He was arrested there, and the officer had reached Charleston, Mo., with him on his way to Bloomfield, when he escaped. He went to Louisiana, and was finally recaptured at Vicksburg. He was tried, and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary, but has since been pardoned.

Formation of Mississippi County.—Mississippi County was formed by an act of the Legislature passed February 14, 1845, from the southern portion of Scott County. The county court was organized in Charleston on April 21, 1845, and was composed of William Sayres, presiding justice, and Absalom McElmurry and James M. Overton, associate justices. George L. Cravens produced his commission as clerk of the court, and was duly qualified. The following constables were then appointed: John A. Gardner, Wolf Island Township; Peter W. Mott, James Bayou, and Samuel D. Kennedy, Tywappity Township.

For the first five years no effort was made to erect any public buildings, with the exception of a clerk's office, which was completed in the summer of 1846, and is still standing. The county court was held in the storehouse of Henry G. Cummings, and the circuit court, in the Methodist Church. In December, 1837, it was decided to erect a jail on a lot tendered by John Sheppard, but he withdrew his offer, and nothing more was done until 1850, when the contract was awarded to William Sayres. Two years later the present courthouse was erected by James T. Russell.

At its organization the county was divided into five townships: Tywappity, Mississippi, St. James, James Bayou and Wolf Island. In June, 1847, it was ordered that all of Mississippi Township included in the following boundaries be erected into a new township, by the name of Ohio: "Commencing on the county line in the Mississippi River opposite Lake Bayou, and running down the river with said line to the line dividing Sections 19 and 30, in Township 26 north, Range 18 east; thence west with said section line until it strikes Clear Lake, north of Judge Henson's; thence northwardly with the line of Tywappity Township to the place of beginning." At the same time the boundaries of the other townships were readjusted. In June, 1858, Long Prairie Township was formed from portions of Tywappity and St. James.

The first indebtedness of the county was incurred in 1864, when bonds to the amount of $12,500, bearing 10 per cent interest, were issued to pay bounties to volunteer soldiers.

In June, 1872, $8,000 was appropriated to build a new jail, and F. A. Randol was appointed to superintend its construction.

Circuit Court Issues.—The circuit court for Mississippi County was organized on September 29, 1845, by John D. Cook. The first grand jury was composed of the following men: Charles W. Moore, Evan Shelby, William Shelby, T. S. McElmurry, Jesse Davis, Howell Brewer, Felix Harrison, Lewis Barker, John Dalton, I. Brewer, Thomas J. Harrison, James Braswell, O. S. Simmons and William Woodward. Only one indictment was returned. This was against William Dunham for shooting with intent to kill. In October, 1847, an indictment was found against John Dawson, who obtained a change of venue to Scott County. The most of the indictments, however, before the war were for minor offenses, and those were numerous. At the October term, 1849, forty-nine indictments were returned. Of these, thirty-one were for gaming and playing cards on Sunday, two for keeping a gaming boat, six for selling merchandise and liquor without a license, and nine for failing to work the roads. The first person sent to the penitentiary from the county was William Gatewood, who pleaded guilty to a charge of grand larceny in November, 1854, and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment.

The first legal execution in the county took place on December 8, 1882, when Alfred Sanders, a colored man was hanged for the murder of another colored man, Moses Wing, on the night of November 19, 1881.

A second execution took place on April 6, 1883. On that day Howard Underwood, colored, was hanged for the murder of his mistress, Belle Lucas, on August 6, 1881. He committed the deed in a fit of jealousy, and made his escape to Illinois. He was captured about a year later, brought back, tried and sentenced to be hung on September 22, 1882. An appeal was taken to the supreme court, where the judgment was affirmed, and the date of execution fixed at December 29, 1882. A rehearing was obtained, but there was no change in the decision of the court.

Dunklin County Formed.—Dunklin County was organized by an act of the Legislature of 1845 from the portion of Stoddard County south of the parallel of $36^{\circ} 30'$. To this territory, in 1853, was added a strip nine miles wide on the north. The county occupies a portion of part of the State which apparently belongs to the State of Arkansas. In 1804 Congress divided Louisiana into two Territories by a line running with the thirty-third parallel of north latitude. In 1812 the Territory of Missouri was organized from a portion of Upper Louisiana, and in 1819 Arkansas Territory was established. When, at this time, it was proposed to organize the State of Missouri, and the parallel of $36^{\circ} 30'$ was chosen as its southern boundary, there were many hardy pioneers on the Mississippi below that line, whose interests were linked with the settlements of the north, by ties both commercial and social, and they felt that by reason of their position, so far in advance of other portions of Arkansas Territory, they were entitled to all the privileges and immunities offered by a State government. Several of the leading citizens of this portion of the State, among whom were Col. John H. Walker and Godfrey Lesieur, by exerting their influence succeeded in having the line from the Mississippi to the St. Francois lowered to the parallel of 36° .

As the records of Dunklin County were entirely destroyed by fire in 1872, but little could be ascertained concerning the transaction of the courts prior to that date. The first county court is said to have been composed of Moses Farrar, Edward Spencer and Alexander Campbell. James S. Huston was the first clerk and Lewis Holcomb the first sheriff. Huston was succeeded by John H. Marsh, who continued in the office until 1861. The first courthouse was a log building erected in the middle of the public square in 1847. It was destroyed during or just after the war, and in 1870 the erection of a large frame building was begun. It was completed in 1872, and had been occupied but a short time when it was burned to the ground. Since that time the county has been without a courthouse. A log jail was built at about the same time as the first courthouse. It was subsequently replaced by a second structure of the same character, and in 1882 the present jail was erected.

The amount of crime committed in Dunklin County is no greater than that of other counties of Southeast Missouri, but the marked failure in the administration of justice by the courts, in one or two cases, has led to the administration of lynch law, by which three persons have met their deaths. In September, 1874, George Koons was taken from the jail, and hung for the murder of Bart. Reynolds. Koons was a worthless character, and had killed Reynolds while the latter was lying in a drunken stupor in front of Shelton's store in Kennett. About six months later a stranger was hung on the charge of horse stealing, and on September 10, 1886, Bowman Paxton was taken from the sheriff, while on his way with him from Kennett to Malden, about three miles south of the former place, and hanged to a tree by the roadside. For some trivial offense, he had shot and killed John McGilvrey, a blacksmith of Malden.

The most flagrant case of the failure of justice occurred at the December term of the circuit court, in 1883, when D. A. Smith, W. T. Barham and one Nash were tried for the murder of John C. Crawford, Smith having been indicted as principal and Barham and Nash as accessories. Barham was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and Nash pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary, but Smith, the principal, was acquitted.

Officials.—No list of the county officers could be prepared in the absence of all records prior to 1882. The sheriffs since 1864 have been Elam G. Rathbun, 1864; James H. Barrett, 1870; W. P. Nicholas, 1874; J. F. Donaldson, 1882; J. R. Allgood, 1886. Leonard T. Bragg, William G. Bragg, Sr., R. R. Roberts, T. E. Baldwin and William G. Bragg, Jr., have been clerks of the circuit court and recorders; C. R. Mills, 1882, and D. B. Pankey, 1884, have been the clerks of the county court. G. T. Sloan, W. F. Shelton, N. F. Kelly, T. E. Baldwin and F. J. Rice have filled the office of county treasurer. J. M. Waltrip, James M. Douglass, W. J. Davis, G. T. Smith, Virgil McKay, have been assessors. The present county court is composed of J. M. Waltrip, president, J. W. Baker and J. M. Douglas.

Representatives.—The county has been represented in the Legislature by H. D. Flowers, 1846; Russell Horner, 1848; John S. Huston, 1850; C. T. Jones, 1852; T. J. Mott, 1854; C. T. Jones, 1856; H. A. Applegate, 1866; J. H. Barrett, 1874; Jesse Long, 1878; William M. Harkey, 1880; John P. Taylor, 1882; J. T. Wilson, 1884; T. R. R. Ely, 1886.

Organization of Pemiscot County.—*Pemiscot County was organized by an act of the Legislature approved February 19, 1851, and included all of New Madrid County south of the following line: "Beginning in the middle of the main channel of the Mississippi immediately opposite Major's mill race, and running thence along said mill race to the Cushion Lake Bayou, thence along said bayou to the Cushion Lakes; thence along the middle of said Cushion Lake to a point opposite to the head of Collins Lake or Portage Bay; thence to the head of Collins Lake, or Portage Bay; thence along said lakes or bay to the junction with Little River, and thence due west to the eastern boundary of Dunklin County."

Court Proceedings.—The county court was organized at the house of James Eastwood, with James Eastwood as presiding justice, and Martin L. Stancil and Jonathan Scott, associates. Robert Stewart was the sheriff, and Theodore Case clerk of the court. The question of building county levees came up in 1853, and

*The data for the matter concerning Pemiscot County was obtained, principally, from Maj. G. W. Carleton and the files of his paper.

Judges Scott and Stancil resigned, and were succeeded by Ebenezer Oldham and Thomas Bartlett. Under the act of Congress of September 28, 1850, donating lands to the States to reclaim swamp lands within their limits, large bodies of these lands were ceded to the county by the State. The great majority of the people favored the building of the levee, and the taking of their pay for the work in lands at $1.25 per acre. This was opposed by ex-Judge Stancil, who contended that the land should be put up to the highest bidder, at a minimum price of $1.25 per acre, and the proceeds of the sales for cash appropriated to the work of leveeing and draining. He circulated a petition asking for the sale of the lands, which was signed by a few citizens, and presented it to the county court early in 1852, but it was not granted. William S. Mosely, then member of the Legislature from New Madrid and Pemiscot, took strong grounds against it. Judge Stancil also advocated the building of the levee on the west side of Cypress Bayou and Big Lake, in the upper end of the county, but in this, too, he was defeated, although subsequent events proved him right. The levee was built along the river front, and extended the entire length of the county, with the exception of about one mile above Gayoso, across Big Lake flats, and less than one-half mile across the bottoms below Gayoso. It was too near the river, and was long since washed away by the shifting current. Twenty cents per cubic yard was paid for most of the work. Payments were made in scrip which could be used in locating land at $1.25 per acre. W. T. Harbert was the superintendent of public works.

The first register and recorder of the land office was G. W. Bushey. His successors were Sandford Jackson, J. A. McFarland, A. C. Foust, Sandford Jackson and W. G. Gray.

The first courthouse was a small frame building erected on the public square in 1854. It was used until 1873, when it was moved away, and is now used by Maj. Carleton for a stable. An appropriation of $750 was obtained from the Legislature, to assist in building the new courthouse. It was completed, and was occupied until December, 1882, when it was destroyed by fire, with all its contents. Maj. Carleton, who was a member of the Legislature at that time, obtained another appropriation of $4,000, which was used in the construction of the present building. Two jails have been built, both of log. Both are still standing on a corner of the public square.

From 1862 to 1865 the county court did not convene. In April, 1862, the county records were taken to Memphis by Maj. Carleton, then clerk of the court, who returned them to the county again in August, 1865, with the loss of one or two unimportant books.

In March, 1863, T. J. O. Morrison secured the passage of a bill extending the jurisdiction of the courts of New Madrid County over Pemiscot County, and this arrangement continued until the reorganization of the courts.

The first circuit court for Pemiscot County was organized on October 25, 1852, by Judge Harrison Hough, at the house of Jonathan Scott, which was situated in Section 29, Township 19 north, Range 13 east, near the bank of the Mississippi. The term lasted but one day. The grand jury was composed of the following men: George M. Nolin, John G. Jacobs, James A. McFarland, John M. Wells, Mathew Wright, John G. Easley, Mexico Cole, Henry Houdischalt, Eblin Berry, C. S. Bush, John S. Wheeler, W. W. Mitchell, James A. Butler and John P. Foust. Six indictments were returned, mostly for selling liquor without license. The first clerk's office was built by Sandford Jackson, in his own yard. He made a rail pen, and ceiled it inside and out with cypress bark, and covered it with elm boards. This he occupied until October, 1854.

No circuit court was held from 1860 to 1868. In 1866 Judge Albert Jackson came to hold court, but, being strongly prejudiced against this section of the State, he sought some excuse to adjourn. This he found in the fact that the old seal had been broken, and a new one put in its place. He therefore decided that every instrument issued under the new seal was void, and went home without transacting any business.

During the war the county suffered greatly from guerrillas. They became so numerous in 1864 that the Federal commander at New Madrid issued an order declaring that, if the people of Pemiscot did not put them down, he would burn every house in the county. A company of home guards was organized to accomplish this. There were two gangs of the desperadoes, one headed by Lewis Powell, and the other by Pope Congers. In August, 1864, the guards attacked the Congers gang in the dry bayou east of Gayoso, and killed William Ingram, George Davis and one Nettles. In October, Powell, with about a dozen men, fortified himself in the same bayou, at the crossing of the road, and was there attacked by the home guards under Granville M. Hayes. Powell was killed, and his band dispersed. After the close of hostilities some of the guerrillas that had been driven away began to return to their old haunts, and on July 2, 1865, Capt. Alexander Barnes, with a squad of citizens, went in search of them. One, Turner Biggs, was overhauled, and in attempting to escape was shot. Pope Congers, after stealing some horses, fled to Arkansas, where he was killed by a man from New Madrid, who had followed him.

The most atrocious crime ever committed in the county was the murder of Mrs. James Atkinson and an infant child by her husband, on July 4, 1881. They lived about two miles below Stewart's Landing, near the river. There had been much domestic difficulty for some time prior to the tragedy, and Mrs. Atkinson had gone home to her father. She returned to her husband on the night of July 3, and was not again seen alive. On the 5th her body and that of her youngest child were found in the river. At the next September term of circuit court indictments were found against James C. Atkinson and his parents, Applegate Atkinson and Jane Atkinson. James was tried first, convicted and sentenced to be hanged on October 28, 1881. His father was then put upon trial as an accessory before the fact, convicted, and received the same sentence as his son. In the case against Mrs. Atkinson, a nolle prosequi was entered. The trial brought out the fact that James Atkinson, instigated by his father, had brutally murdered his wife and child, and then, attempting to give it the appearance of suicide, had put his wife's shoes on his own feet, carried the bodies to the river, and thrown them into the water. The tracks left were thus those of his wife, but her shoes were afterward found secreted in the house. The evidence against the accused, although largely circumstantial, was complete and convincing. Upon their conviction they were lodged in jail, with a strong guard around it, but in some way they managed to escape, taking with them the guns of the guards. The following May they were traced to Catahoula Parish, Louisiana, by Capt. Jerry Hutchinson, a mail agent on the Anchor Line, who, with a small posse, went in search of them. They were found at a remote farmhouse. The old man was captured and handcuffed. Hutchinson then entered the house to look for the son. As he ascended the stairs he was shot by him and mortally wounded. Knowing that he must die, he turned to the old man, and sent a bullet through his heart. James Atkinson escaped, and has never been recaptured.

Representatives.—The county was represented in the Legislature with New Madrid County until 1866, and during that time but one representative was taken from Pemiscot—Robert E. Cloud, elected in 1860. He was a strong southern sympathizer, and went south with Gov. Jackson. In March, 1862, he met with the remnant of the Legislature on board a steamboat, in the waters of Pemiscot County. Since 1866 Pemiscot County has been represented as follows: James A. McFarland, 1866–68; Jesse Huff, 1868–70; John P. Stancil, 1870–74; S. H. Steel, 1874–76; H. M. Darnall, 1876–78; George W. Carleton, 1878–86; H. C. Garrett, 1886.

Butler County's Organization.—The county of Butler was organized in accordance with an act passed February 27, 1849. The first county court met at the house of Thomas Scott on June 18, 1849. It was composed of John Stevenson, Solomon Kittrell and Jonathan R. Sandlin, of whom the first named was chosen president. Jacob C. Blount received the appointment of clerk, and qualified. After appointing various township officers, and granting a license to Gabriel Davis to keep a ferry across Black River, the court adjourned to meet at the house of Daniel Epps. The first court held in Poplar Bluff was in November, 1850. It is said to have met in a log house on the bank of Black River, at the foot of Vine Street. About two years later a small frame courthouse was erected on the southeast corner of the public square. In 1859 the contract for a new courthouse was let to D. B. Miller and S. G. Kitchen, who employed William N. Ringer to erect the building. This house was occupied until December 14, 1886, when it was entirely destroyed by fire. The present building was erected the following year, and is one of the best courthouses in Southeast Missouri. It occupies a beautiful site on an elevation overlooking the city. A jail was completed in 1885 by P. J. Pauley & Bro. It is a small building, but is substantially constructed, and is furnished with a steel cage.

At the end of the first year, after the organization of the county, the collector reported the amount of county revenue collected at $156.02, and the total State tax at $122.28. In 1887 the tax levied was as follows: On personal property, $4,760.50; on real estate, $13,889.44; and on railroads, $13,443.36; a total of $32,093.30. The rate of taxation was $1.70 per $100, State and county, and $.55 school tax. The indebtedness consists of $58,850 in outstanding bonds, and about $19,000 in outstanding warrants, mounting in the aggregate to about $77,850.

When organized the county was divided into two townships, Black River and Otter Creek. In 1850 the county court made an order dividing the county into four townships: Beaver Dam, in the southwest; Epps, in the northwest; Butler, in the southeast, and Mud Creek, in the northeast. A few months later the name of Mud Creek was changed to Black River, and at the same time Polk Township was formed from the southeast portion of the county. In 1856 the township of Ash Hills was established, and in 1860 Thomas Township was added. In 1866 the townships were relocated and established under the following names: St. Francois, Black River, Cane Creek, Epps, Beaver Dam, Thomas, Gillis Bluff, Ash Hills and Poplar Bluff. In 1871 Thomas Township was divided, and Neely Township formed. In 1886 Harviell Township was formed from a part of Beaver Dam.

Circuit Court.—The circuit court for Butler County was organized on September 15, 1849, by Judge Harrison Hough, at the house of Thomas Scott. No grand jury was empaneled until the next September term, when the following men were chosen: W. R. Griffith, William Hill, R. L. Brown, David Gower, Hamilton Scott, L. M. Byers, Jesse A. Gilley, William Ellison, William Whittington, S. R. Rutherford, Chris. Wright, L. L. Burgen, Exum C. Scott, Charles Appleby, James Cobb and John L. Davis. Several indictments were returned for selling liquor without a license, and one against Farmer High for assault with intent to kill. The sheriff at this time was Newton Wallace, who held the office until 1853, when he was appointed to draw $1,200 from the State treasury belonging to the road and canal fund. He obtained the amount and returned to Poplar Bluff, but the next day started for Tennessee for a niece of his, he said, and never returned.

There was very little legal business during the early history of the county. The records for ten years cover less than one hundred pages. The first person sent to the penitentiary was James Wingo, sentenced to two years for grand larceny. The first case coming before the court, which excited general interest, was that of the State against John L. and Richard Fitts for the murder of Tallman Rich, on May 19, 1860. Rich was a physician in Poplar Bluff, and John L. Fitts, a prominent citizen of the county, and the father of Richard Fitts. Dr. Rich had been paying his addresses to a daughter of the elder Fitts against the wishes of the other members of the family. On the morning of the day mentioned above Dr. Rich and the Fittses, father and son, met at Yancey Hotel, and, in a quarrel which ensued, Dr. Rich was fatally stabbed. The Fittses were arrested, and, when the case came up for trial, took a change of venue to Wayne County.

There, in October, 1860, they were convicted of murder in the first degree, but the verdict was set aside, and a new trial ordered. The war coming on soon after they were released and went to Kentucky, where they had previously lived. In the summer of 1876 a requisition was sent to the Governor of that State, and John L. Fitts was returned to Butler County, where, in November, 1877, he was tried and acquitted.

In 1870 James Reed was tried for the murder of one Hardin, in 1866. He was convicted, and his execution was fixed for November 11, 1870, but, while the sheriff was conveying him to the jail at Ironton, he made his escape, and very little effort was made to recapture him. The murder was committed about one-half mile south of Poplar Bluff. The difficulty grew out of the war, and was one of the many incidents of the disturbed condition of society just after that conflict.

For many years there existed a gang of robbers and outlaws, whose headquarters were in Clay County, Arkansas. They were accustomed to go on expeditions in various directions for the purpose of robbery, and not unfrequently committed murders. More than once they entered Butler County. On April 9, 1879, four or five of the gang visited the house of Capt. Charles F. Hendricks, in the southeast part of the county. They shot a nephew of Capt. Hendricks, Ferdinand Yeager, who attempted to resist them, severely injured Capt. Hendricks, who was sick, and took all the money they could find. None of the band were captured and returned to the county, but they were pursued for this and other crimes until they were finally exterminated.

Formation of Bollinger County.—The act for the organization of Bollinger County was approved on March 1, 1851. It was formed from portions of Wayne, Cape Girardeau and Stoddard. The county court was organized at the storehouse of John C. Whybark, on March 24, 1851, by Reuben Smith, John Stevens and Drury Massey, justices. Oliver E. Snider qualified as clerk, and William C. Grimsley as sheriff. The records of the courts were burned on March 2, 1866, therefore no account of their transactions prior to that time can be obtained.

Soon after the organization of the county a brick courthouse about thirty feet square and two stories high was erected. It was destroyed by fire, and a similar building was completed the same year, partly by private subscription and partly by appropriation. In March, 1884, it was also destroyed by fire, but it had previously been condemned as unsafe, and had been abandoned by all the officers except the circuit clerk. At the general election in the following November a vote was taken upon the proposition to remove the county seat to Lutesville, but the corporation of Marble Hill voted $1,000, and the citizens raised subscriptions to the amount of $1,620, for the rebuilding of the courthouse in that town, and the proposition to remove it was defeated by a vote of 1,266 to 750. The county court, appropriated $7,000, and the present courthouse was completed the following year under the supervision of J. J. Conrad.

The county is in a fairly good condition financially, the aggregate indebtedness amounting to only $9,535.15. In 1887 the expenditures amounted to $9,981.55, and receipts to $11,701.54.

Iron County Formed.—The county of Iron was erected from portions of the counties of St. Francois, Madison, Washington, Dent, Reynolds and Wayne, by an act of the Legislature approved February 17, 1857. Maj. John Polk, representative of Madison County (but a resident of the proposed new county), Conrad C. Ziegler, of Ste. Genevieve, member of the State Senate, and James Lindsay, enrolling clerk of the Senate, were instrumental in securing the passage of the act. Great difficulty was experienced in securing sufficient territory without reducing other counties below their constitutional limits, hence the peculiar shape of the county. At a special election ordered to held on the first Monday in June, 1857, J. V. Logan, John W. Miller and Moses Edwards were chosen members of the county court; John F. T. Edwards, clerk of the courts, and John Cole, sheriff. The county court held its first meeting in Arcadia, on August 4, 1857, when the county was divided into seven municipal townships, Dent, Kaolin, Iron, Pilot Knob, Arcadia, Liberty and Union, and the necessary officers appointed for each. At the same term Theodore F. Long was elected school commissioner, A. C. Farnham, treasurer, and Allen W. Hollaman, county surveyor.

By the act forming the county the county was made liable for its proportionate part of stock subscribed to the Fredericktown & Pilot Knob Gravel Road Company, incorporated February 5, 1855, and, accordingly, at the September term, it was ordered that the clerk issue bonds of the county to the amount of $6,666. In January, 1858, an order was made for the erection of a courthouse and the issuing of county bonds, bearing ten per cent interest, for $10,000. In April the contract for the courthouse was awarded to George S. Evans and William F. Mitchell for the sum of $14,000, and John V. Logan was appointed to superintend the work. The corner-stone for the new building was laid on the 4th of July, 1858, and in October, 1860, it was completed and occupied. In April, 1866, $10,000 was appropriated for the erection of a jail, and the contract for the building awarded to Thompson & Flynn for $8,972.50. The total debt of the county had now reached the sum of nearly $18,000, but from that time on it was steadily reduced. There is now no bonded debt, and during the year 1887, $4,958 was appropriated for the improvement of roads, in addition to the road tax. On January 1, 1888, there was a balance in the treasury, above all outstanding warrants, of $11,363.55.

The circuit court for Iron County was organized on May 17, 1858, by Judge John H. Stone. The members of the first grand jury were John F. Green, Elbridge Clayton, John Imboden, J. H. Russell, Joseph Sutton, George W. Young, James Sloan, John P. Hayden, Samuel Rice, William Boatwright, Michael Vineyard, Andrew Henson, Frank P. Smith, Joseph Beal. An indictment was returned against Malinda and Washington Brannum for grand larceny. The former was convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. The latter was acquitted. In 1860 William H. Young was arrested for the murder of his father, whom he had stabbed in a fit of intoxication. He obtained a change of venue to Reynolds County, and while out on bail was killed in a fight. There have been several convictions of murder in the various degrees, but none have paid the death penalty in Iron County.

RAILROADS.

The first movement toward railroad building in Southeast Missouri was made in 1853. On February 9, of that year, an act of Congress was approved, granting to the States of Missouri and Arkansas the right of way and lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Mississippi opposite the mouth of the Ohio River, by the way of Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, Ark. This grant gave to Arkansas and Missouri the right of way through all government lands, and also gave every alternate section of land designated by even numbers for six miles in width on each side of the track. It was to expire by limitation on the 9th of February, 1863.

On June 9, 1853, a meeting of the citizens of Charleston was held at the courthouse to take some action to secure the road. Judge Noah Handy was chosen chairman, and John C. Thomas, secretary. George Whitcomb, Harrison Hough, H. W. Molder, H. M. Ward, A. M. Bedford, John Bird and Felix Badger were appointed a committee to enquire into the probable cost of constructing a railroad across the swamp country upon the projected Cairo & Fulton route. On November 14 and 15 following a large convention of delegates from most of the counties of Southeast Missouri, and from Kentucky to Tennessee, was held at Benton, Mo., to discuss the building of railroads. Resolutions were passed advocating the construction of the Cairo & Fulton road by the way of Bloomfield, and urging the extension of the Iron Mountain road to meet it. Meantime, on September 12, 1853, certain citizens of Stoddard county had organized the Cairo & Fulton Railroad Company with a capital stock of 60,000 shares of $25 each. John M. Johnson was chosen president. Subscriptions of stock were then made as follows:

Stoddard County.....	$150,000
Butler.....	100,000
Dunklin.....	100,000
Scott.....	50,000
Ripley.....	19,500
Total.....	$419,500

These subscriptions were paid in lands at $1 per acre. On December 6, 1853, a mass meeting was held in Charleston to devise ways and means for the survey of the Cairo & Fulton Railroad. It was recommended that the county court appropriate $500 for that purpose, which was accordingly done, but the survey was not made. In January, 1853, the Legislature of Arkansas had incorporated the Cairo & Fulton Railroad Company; J. S. Williams was appointed chief engineer, and, after completing the survey of the road through that State, he proceeded to locate the line in Missouri, and made a report to the Legislature in February, 1855. On the 20th of that month the company in Missouri was incorporated, and an act was passed to issue bonds of the State to the road, equal to the amount that had been expended, but not to exceed $250,000. The Governor vetoed the bill, but it passed over his veto. In 1856 Orson Bartlett was elected president of the company, and a new survey was made, beginning at Bird's Point. In March, 1857, new officers were elected, and under the stimulus of the "Omnibus Bill," which granted $2 in bonds for every dollar expended by any railroad company, not to exceed $400,000, the work of construction was begun. During the summer contracts were let for the grading of the road from Bird's Point to Charleston, and on October 1, 1857, the contractor, Col. H. J. Deal, threw the first shovel of dirt. The work was pushed forward as rapidly as circumstances would permit, and on April 1, 1859, the first train drawn by the engine "Sol. G. Kitchen" entered Charleston. The formal opening of the road, however, did not take place until the 4th of July, when a grand celebration was held.

The work of construction was continued until 1861, when about thirty miles were in operation. It was then taken possession of by the Government, and much of the rolling stock removed or destroyed. In the fall of 1866, it passed into the hands of the State by a sale under a lien, and on January 7, 1867, it was sold to McKay & Co. for $350,000. They immediately transferred it to Thomas Allen, president of the Iron Mountain Railroad. It was extended to Poplar Bluff, and known as the Cairo, Arkansas, & Texas Road until 1874, when it was consolidated with the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad, and is now known as the Cairo branch of that system.

The building of a railroad through Cape Girardeau County began to be agitated during the latter part of the fifties, and in 1859 the Cape Girardeau, Pilot Knob & Belmont Railroad Company was organized, with William C. Ranney as president, to build a road from Pilot Knob to Belmont by the way of Cape Girardeau. All the necessary preliminaries were arranged, a large private subscription was obtained, and the county of Cape Girardeau voted to take stock to the amount of $200,000, but at this stage the Civil War began and put an end to all further operations until its close. The subject was then revived, and the Cape Girardeau & State Line Railroad Company was organized to build a road from Cape Girardeau to some point on the Arkansas State Line. On April 27, 1869, the following directors of the new company were chosen: G. C. Thilenius, John Albert, T. J. Rodney, Robert Sturdivant, John Ivers, A. B. Dorman, M. Dittlinger, L. F. Klosterman, William Woeleke, F. Hanney, M. M. Kimmel, A. D. Leech, H. Bader, C. Hirsch, William Regenhärdt, William Hamilton, J. Vasterling, and Casper Uhl. Subsequently G. C. Thilenius was chosen president, John Ivers, vice-president, and S. G. Kitchen, manager. The city of Cape Girardeau voted a subscription of $150,000, and the township of Cape Girardeau an equal amount. With this money the work of construction was begun, but through bad management the funds were exhausted before a single mile of road was completed. A contract was then made with Gov. Fletcher and others to build the road, for which they were to receive a deed to the road bed, provided twenty-five miles of the road were completed by December

1, 1871. Gov. Fletcher and his associates organized a company known as the Illinois, Missouri & Texas Railway Company, and issued bonds to the amount of $1,500,000, to secure which a mortgage on the property of the Illinois, Missouri & Texas, and the Cape Girardeau & State Line Companies was executed. This plan of procuring money to build the road failed, and nothing was accomplished. For ten years the road was abandoned. The wood-work decayed, and the road bed grew up to underbrush. In 1880 Louis Houck became interested in the road, organized the Cape Girardeau Railway Company, and on the condition of completing the road from Cape Girardeau to Delta, a distance of fifteen miles, by January 1, 1881, received a title to the property of the old Cape Girardeau & State Line Company. Mr. Houck, with characteristic energy, fulfilled the contract, and by August, 1881, had the road in operation to Lakeville, Stoddard County, eleven miles beyond Delta. In 1882 the name of the company was changed to the Cape Girardeau Southwestern Railway Company, and the road extended to Brownwood, a distance of four miles. In 1883 the road reached Idlewild, ten miles from Brownwood, and in 1884 was opened to Wappapello, in Wayne County, a total distance of fifty-one miles from Cape Girardeau. In 1886 the road acquired by lease the Brownwood & Northwestern, a railroad built by William Brown from Brownwood to Zalma, (Bollinger's Mill), a distance of nine miles. In 1887 the company constructed seven miles of road from Wappapello to Chaonia, and is now engaged in extending the road from Chaonia to a connection with the Current River Railroad, a distance of thirty-five miles, thus forming with the Current River Railroad a continuous rail route through Southern Missouri. The road is an exclusively Missouri enterprise, and owes its existence to Mr. Houck, who is the principal stockholder and manager of the road. Mr. William Brown, of St. Louis, also has a large interest in the road, and is entitled to much credit for the successful way in which the enterprise has thus far been managed.

In 1852 a survey for a road from St. Louis to Iron Mountain was made by J. H. Morley. In January, 1853, a board of directors was chosen for the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railway Company, and a new survey made. In 1857 the road was opened to Pilot Knob, which remained the terminus until 1871. The road received a large amount of aid from the State, and after its completion failed to pay the interest on its bonds. On September 22, 1866, it was sold at public auction, and was bid in for the State. It was managed by three commissioners until January 12, 1867, when it was again sold, McKay, Simmons and Vogel being the purchasers. They transferred it to Thomas Allen. Work was soon after begun on the Belmont branch, at both ends, and on August 14, 1869, the last rail was laid in the middle of the tunnel in Bollinger County, and the first train run through. In the fall of 1870 the work of constructing the road from Pilot Knob to the Arkansas line was begun, and on November 4, 1872, the whole road was completed. On April 2, 1873, trains began running regularly from St. Louis to Little Rock.

A short time prior to the war a charter was granted to what was known as the Blanton Plank Road Company for the purpose of building a plank road from Point Pleasant to Clarkton, and a large grant of land was made to it by New Madrid County. During the war the property was destroyed, and nothing was done toward restoring it until 1875, when Oscar Kochtitzky, register of the land office, and George B. Clark, State auditor, obtained the charter and franchises of the plank road company. They associated with themselves A. M. Shead, American agent of the Glasgow Ship Building Company. Instead of rebuilding the plank road it was decided to construct a narrow gauge railroad, and to this New Madrid County assented, transferring the grant made to the plank road company to the railroad company. Work upon the railroad was begun in October, 1876, and in February, 1878, it was completed between New Madrid and Malden. It was soon after rebuilt on the standard gauge, extended to Cairo, and now forms a part of the St. Louis, Texas & Arkansas Railroad, which was opened, and through trains put on in 1882.

BENCH AND BAR.

Judicial Circuits Formed.—Prior to 1803, the Territory of Louisiana was governed by the civil law, modified by the law of France and the colonial regulations of Spain. The judicial power was vested in the district commandants, the lieutenant-governor and the governor-general.

The extent of the jurisdiction of the commandants was not the same in all districts. Some were invested with less and some with greater authority, but usually in civil causes it extended to all suits in which the amount involved did not exceed $100, and in criminal cases to all offenses, except those for which the penalty was death. They received no salaries except an allowance of $100 per year for stationery, but if they belonged to the army as they usually did, their fees supported them comfortably. Appeals lay from district commandants to the lieutenant-governor, and from him to the governor-general.

There were few lawyers. Forensic disputations were excluded from their tribunals, and their judicial decisions resulted entirely from the law and the written evidence produced. There were no jury trials, but frequently in minor causes the whole matter was referred to a committee of arbitration. The acts of Congress of 1804 and 1805 continued all the laws in force in the Territory at the time of their passage except such as were inconsistent with these acts or the acts of the territorial judges. On October 1, 1804, the Governor and judges of the Indiana Territory passed sixteen acts for the government of the new Territory. One of these was for the establishment of a court of quarter-sessions of the peace, and a court of common pleas, both presided over by the same justices. These courts consisted of a presiding justice and four associates, appointed and commissioned by the Governor. The first transacted county business, and had jurisdiction over all misdemeanor cases. The latter transacted the civil business. For the trial of felony cases, courts of oyer and terminer were held, presided over by one of the territorial judges, and one or more of the justices of the court of quarter-sessions.

On June 4, 1812, Congress passed an act reorganizing the territorial government. The judicial power was vested in a supreme court, an inferior court and the justice of the peace. The superior court consisted of three judges, who held their office for four years, and had original and appellate jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases. The Legislature was also authorized to require the judges of the superior court to act as circuit judge, and as such to hold regular sessions in all the counties of the Territory, but this was not done. A court of common pleas, consisting of three judges, was established for each county, with about the same jurisdiction as the courts of quarter-sessions and common pleas combined had previously exercised.

In 1815 circuit courts were established. The State was divided into two circuits, a northern and a southern circuit. Richard S. Thomas was appointed judge of the southern circuit. This court had original jurisdiction in all criminal and civil cases, and also transacted all county business.

On January 19, 1816, the Territorial Assembly passed an act by which the common law of England and the statutes of England framed prior to the fourth year of the reign of James I, of a general nature, were adopted as the law of Missouri Territory, provided that they did not conflict with the constitution and laws of the United States and the statutes of the Territory. This act, however, did not expressly abrogate the Spanish laws, and they were not entirely abolished until 1825.

Upon the organization of the State Government the counties of Southeast Missouri were constituted the Fourth Judicial Circuit. In 1837 the State was redistricted. The counties of New Madrid, Scott, Cape Girardeau, Madison, Stoddard, Wayne and Ripley were constituted the Tenth Circuit, and the counties to the north of these the Ninth Circuit. In 1854 the Fifteenth Circuit was formed from the counties of Wayne, Ripley, Reynolds, Shannon, Oregon, Butler, Dunklin and Stoddard. In 1864 the old Ninth Circuit was broken up, and the counties of Washington and Jefferson attached to the Fifteenth Circuit, while Ste. Genevieve, Madison, Perry and St. Francois were constituted the Twentieth Circuit, to which has since been added Bollinger County. In 1870 the Fifteenth Circuit was divided, and the counties of Dunklin, Stoddard, Butler, Ripley, Carter and Wayne were constituted the Twenty-third Circuit. Two years later the Fifteenth Circuit, which was then composed of the counties of Jefferson, Washington, Iron and Reynolds, was made the Twenty-sixth Circuit.

Judges.—The judges of the courts of common pleas and quarter-sessions of the peace, like the judges of the county court at the present time, were not often lawyers by profession, but were usually farmers, mechanics or merchants. Richard S.

Thomas, the first circuit judge of South Missouri, at the time of his appointment was a resident of Ste. Genevieve County. He was a native of Virginia, and had lived in Ohio, where he married. He came to Ste. Genevieve about 1810. His name first appears on the records of that county in 1811 as counsel for the defendant in a murder case. Upon receiving his appointment as judge he removed to Jackson, where he remained until his death. He did not rank high as a lawyer, and became so unpopular with the bar that in January, 1825, he was impeached. The charges against him seem to have been somewhat trivial. The first article of impeachment charged him with conducting himself in a manner highly arbitrary, oppressive and unjust, first, in refusing to recognize John Juden, Jr., as clerk of the circuit court for Cape Girardeau County, under the pretense that the office was vacated by the amendments to the constitution of the State made in 1822; second, in declaring "his own son," Claiborne S. Thomas, to be clerk of the said court, and in demanding that the records and papers of the office be delivered up to him; third, in ordering, on the first day of the April term, 1823, the court to be adjourned, and refusing to transact the business of the court on the pretense that the office had been vacated, and that Juden had refused to deliver up the records to Claiborne S. Thomas. Another article charged him with partiality toward his son in a suit between his son and Charles G. Ellis, and a third charge was that he had corruptly agreed with the counsel of Ezekiel Fenwick, charged with murder, to admit him to bail provided he would surrender himself to the sheriff. The result of this trial could not be ascertained, but, as his successor was appointed soon after, he must have been convicted, or else resigned the office. He resumed the practice of law at Jackson, but his career was short. While on the way to attend court at Greenville he was thrown from his horse, and sustained injuries from which he died in a few hours. He was very unfortunate in his domestic relations. His son, Claiborne S., and a daughter, Sebrina, both became insane.

Judge Thomas was succeeded by John D. Cook, who had been one of the first supreme judges. He began the practice of law in Missouri, at Ste. Genevieve, about 1817, and represented that county in the constitutional convention of 1817. After his appointment to the bench he removed to Jackson. He was an excellent judge. He had a judicial mind and was thoroughly imbued with the principles of the common law, and it was a rare thing for one of his decisions to be reversed by the supreme court. But he was lacking in energy, and it is said that on more than one occasion he adjourned court to go a fishing. In ugliness of features he is said to have been equaled by only one other member of the profession on the circuit, Johnson Ranney, and their comparative ugliness afforded the theme for many a joke between them. He retired from the bench in 1849.

The next judge of the Tenth Judicial Circuit was Harrison Hough, of Mississippi County. He was a native of Hardin County, Ky., and in youth had learned the blacksmith's trade. His inclination and ambition carried him into the law, where his brilliant intellect and sound judgment soon placed him in the front rank of his profession. He was a fine conversationalist and a pleasant companion, and was popular with the bar and the people. Upon the breaking out of the war he retired to his farm in Wolf Island Township, in Mississippi County, where his death occurred in 1864. He was a Union man, and a member of the Peace Conference which met at Washington in 1861.

During the greater part of 1861 and 1862 the courts were suspended. In the latter part of 1862 Mason Frissell, a nephew by marriage of Judge Cook, was appointed judge of the Tenth Circuit. He had been engaged in practice in Washington County for several years, but now removed to Cape Girardeau. He remained upon the bench only until 1865. Thomas B. English was appointed his successor, but was thrown out by the Drake constitution.

Judge Albert Jackson, of Cape Girardeau, was then appointed to fill the vacancy. Jackson was an Eastern man, and had received a part of his education at West Point. He came to Missouri about 1835, and began the practice of law at Jackson. He was soon appointed circuit attorney, and in 1854 was made judge of the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit. He filled that office until the suspension of the courts in 1862, and was judge of the Tenth Circuit from 1865 to 1869. He was a man of good address, and a good declaimer, but he was possessed of strong prejudices, and upon the bench was very tyrannical. These latter qualities brought him into disfavor, especially with the bar, and in 1859 he was impeached upon various charges of tyranny, oppression and favoritism. The case was taken up on the 6th of June, 1859, and was conducted on the part of the House of Representatives by James P. Knott and C. H. Hardin. He conducted his own defense, and after a trial lasting sixteen days he was acquitted. Almost the entire bar of the Fifteenth Circuit were summoned as witnesses, and the published record of the proceedings fills a large volume. While on the bench of the Tenth Circuit he was even more arbitrary than he had previously been. He was prejudiced against the people of Southeast Missouri, and convened and adjourned court to suit his own convenience. After retiring from the bench he resumed his practice at Cape Girardeau, where he died in poverty in 1878.

The successor of Judge Jackson was D. L. Hawkins, of Scott County, who continued upon the bench for two successive terms. He is a native of Vermont and a graduate of Dartmouth College. He came to Missouri in 1847, and, after serving some time as a telegraph operator, began the study of law under Thomas B. English. He was licensed to practice in 1857, and in 1863 located in Scott County.

From 1880 to 1886 the courts of the Tenth Circuit were presided over by Judge John D. Foster, of Scott County, a sketch of whom appears in another portion of this work. His successor and present incumbent is H. C. O'Bryan, of Mississippi County.

The first judge of the Ninth Judicial Circuit was James Evans, who is mentioned elsewhere. He was succeeded in 1839, two years after his appointment, by David Sterigere, of Boone County. In 1844 John H. Stone, of Boone County, was appointed, and remained upon the bench until 1862. His successor was James W. Owens, of Franklin County. In 1864 William Carter was appointed judge of the Twentieth Circuit, and was afterward continued upon the bench by appointment and election until 1873, when he resigned. He is a graduate of the Louisville Law School, and practiced at Potosi from 1855 to 1862, when he removed to St. Francois County. John B. Robinson, who succeeded Judge Carter, began the practice of law at Ste. Genevieve in 1863. Two years later he was appointed circuit attorney for the Twelfth District, and in 1868 was a presidential elector. He removed to Perryville in 1865, and to Fredericktown in 1876. He died September 11, 1878, while still upon the bench. He was a sound lawyer and an able and impartial judge. The vacancy occasioned by the death of Judge Robinson was filled by the appointment of William N. Nalle, then living at Fredericktown. He was admitted to the bar in 1854, and had served as circuit attorney for a short time in 1867 and 1868. At the election in November, 1878, John H. Nicholson was chosen to fill out the unexpired term. In 1880 J. D. Fox, of Madison County, was elected to the office, and re-elected in 1886. He is a native of Madison County and a son of D. M. Fox. He was admitted to the bar in 1866, at the age of nineteen.

The first judge of the Fifteenth Circuit was Albert Jackson, of whom mention has been made. In 1863 John W. Emerson, of Ironton, was appointed to preside over the courts of this circuit, but soon resigned, and was succeeded by James H. Vail, also of Ironton. Vail was a Republican, and was not popular. He was appointed by the Governor in 1866, to hold until his successor should be duly qualified. Two years later he became a candidate for the office against Louis F. Dinning, of Washington County. The latter received the greater number of votes, but the Governor declared him ineligible, and gave the commission to Judge Vail. Dinning instituted legal proceedings to oust Vail, but meanwhile the latter continued to hold the office, and in 1872 the Legislature changed the number of the Fifteenth Circuit to the Twenty-sixth, and commissioned Philip Pipkin to preside over its courts. Judge Vail protested against this proceeding and the supreme court decided that the change in the number of the circuit did not deprive him of his office, but in 1873 the same tribunal decided that Judge Dinning had been lawfully elected in 1868, and issued an order of ouster against Judge Vail. In 1874 Judge Dinning was re-elected, and remained upon the bench until 1880, when he was succeeded by Judge John L. Thomas, of Jefferson County, the present incumbent.

Upon the formation of the Twenty-third Circuit Ira E. Leonard, of De Soto, was appointed to hold the courts until the next regular election, when Reuben P. Owen, of Stoddard County, was chosen to the office. He was a very popular judge, and was continued upon the bench until 1885, when he resigned. In 1886 John G. Wear, of Poplar Bluff, was chosen to succeed Judge Owen.

Legal Talent in Southeast Missouri.—The practice of law in Missouri is very different from what it was fifty years ago. It was then customary for the lawyers of a circuit to attend all the courts, and to go from one county seat to another as regularly as the judge. Thus the lawyers of Ste. Genevieve, and even of St. Louis, were as well known in New Madrid and Scott as though they had been residents of those counties. The number of lawyers was small as compared with the present, and a half dozen of them controlled the greater part of the practice. As the supreme court held sessions at Jackson, and as that place was near the center of the Fourth Circuit, it was the home of an unusually large number of the prominent attorneys. The most conspicuous of the early members of the bar in this portion of Missouri, however, was a resident of Ste. Genevieve. John Scott came to Ste. Genevieve in 1806. He was born in Hanover County, Va., in 1782, graduated at Princeton College, and in 1805 removed with his parents to Indiana. His superior education and ability, united with an aggressive nature, soon placed him in the front rank of his profession. In 1813 he was appointed a member of the Territorial Council, and in 1817 became a candidate for the office of delegate to Congress, and was elected. At the end of his term he was re-elected, and after the admission of the State to the Union became its first representative. He was three times elected a representative, but in 1825 cast his vote for John Quincy Adams for President, much against the wishes of his constituents, and at the end of the third term he was retired. He was never again elected to office. He became a member of the Whig party, and was an ardent admirer of Henry Clay. He was a thorough lawyer, and a strong, logical and impressive but not showy speaker. He was very rapid in his enunciation, and quick in all his movements. He was very eccentric in dress, always wearing a cloth cap and very large pantaloons. He always went armed with revolvers and knives, yet was never known to use either. He was habitually profane, and when, a short time before his death, he was urged by friends to seek religion replied, "I have served the devil all my life, and it wouldn't be right to desert him now." He was not a bad man, however, and always enjoyed the respect of those who knew him best. He died about the beginning of the Civil War.

Nathaniel Pope and Thomas T. Crittenden were both residents of Ste. Genevieve for a short time. The former went to Illinois, and in 1809 was appointed secretary of the Territory. The latter remained some two or three years longer, when he left on account of the duel mentioned on another page. About 1820 Beverly Allen began the practice of law at Ste. Genevieve, and continued some eight or ten years. He was succeeded by Conrad C. Ziegler, who, after studying with John Scott, was admitted to the bar about 1833. He was a man of talent, but was not strong, physically. He became interested in the iron business, and to a great extent abandoned legal business afterward. He died in 1863. In 1849 Lewis V. Bogy removed from St. Louis to Ste. Genevieve, and remained until about the beginning of the Civil War, when he returned to the former city. He was the son of Joseph Bogy, and was born in Ste. Genevieve on April 13, 1813. He studied law with Judge Pope, of Kaskaskia, and afterward at Lexington, Ky. In 1835 he began practice at St. Louis, where he remained until coming to Ste. Genevieve. In 1854 he was elected to the Legislature, and in 1867 was appointed commissioner of Indian affairs by President Johnson. The Legislature, in 1872-73, elected him to the United States Senate. He died in 1877.

Gen. F. A. Rozier graduated in law in 1848, and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession at Ste. Genevieve, but has given considerable attention to other matters. He established an academy in 1854; in 1856 represented the county in the Legislature; in 1858 became the president of a bank, and in 1872 was elected to the State Senate. His brother, E. A. Rozier, was admitted to the bar at Ste. Genevieve in 1838, and for many years was one of the leading attorneys of the county. Another brother, C. C. Rozier, was clerk of the circuit court from 1854 until the close of the war, and has since been engaged in the practice of law. Jesse B. Robbins, who served as clerk of the court from 1842 to 1847, was also long a member of the Ste. Genevieve bar. In 1856 a court of common pleas was established, and he received the appointment of judge of that court. He continued in the office until it was abolished, three years later.

Gen. Firmin A. Rozier, Charles C. Rozier, H. S. Shaw, Ed. Rozier and Joseph Flynn constitute the present bar of Ste. Genevieve.

The first attorneys to locate at Cape Girardeau were James Evans, John C. Harbison and Anthony Haden. Haden remained but a short time, and Harbison soon left the law for the ministry. Evans remained in the county for many years, and at one time was one of the most popular lawyers at the bar, but he yielded to the seductive influences of the wine glass and became a mental, as well as a financial wreck. In 1837 he was appointed judge of the Ninth Judicial Circuit. He had not practiced for years, and, owing to habitual intoxication, he was totally unfit for the position, but his term of office was short, and he was appointed by the Governor to avoid political complications. During the latter part of his life he resided at Perryville, but finally went to Kentucky, where he died.

Johnson Ranney, who came to Jackson in 1815, was one of the ablest of the early lawyers. He was a native of Connecticut, and had been a teacher in early life. "Yankees" were not popular in Jackson at that time, and he met with much opposition, but he went quietly on, overcame it all, and acquired a large practice. He was not a brilliant or impressive speaker, but he was a thorough student, and labored indefatigably in the interests of his clients. He served one term in the Legislature, and was a major-general of militia. He died in Jackson on November 11, 1849.

In 1819 Gen. Nathaniel W. Watkins, a half-brother of Henry Clay, began the practice of law at Jackson. He was a man of fine appearance, and in his bearing resembled Clay. He was a natural orator, and before a jury was very strong, especially when upon the defense. He was not, however, a close student, and was a better advocate than lawyer. He served several terms in the State Legislature, and in 1850 was speaker of the House of Representatives. Upon the breaking out of the war he espoused the cause of the Southern Confederacy, and became a brigadier-general in the State Guard service. He soon resigned, and went to Scott County, where he resided until his death in 1876.

Timothy Davis located at Jackson in 1818, and remained about eighteen months. He then went to Ste. Genevieve, and thence to Iowa, from which State he was sent to Congress. Greer W. Davis, his nephew, came with him to Jackson, from Kentucky, and two years later was admitted to the bar. He was soon elected circuit attorney, and held the office over seventeen years. He was careful and painstaking, very attentive to business, and succeeded in accumulating a large amount of property. He was a fluent, logical and impressive speaker, possessing the power of condensation in a high degree. For more than half a century he was one of the most conspicuous figures before the bar of Southeast Missouri. He ended a life full of years and honor at his home in Jackson on February 25, 1878.

In 1818 or 1819 Alexander Buckner, a lawyer from Kentucky, came to Cape Girardeau County with his mother and five sisters, and located on a farm on Randol's Creek. He was a man of ability, and enjoyed a good practice. He was a member of the State Senate in 1822, and again in 1830. In 1831 he was elected to the United States Senate, but died from cholera in 1833.

Among the early attorneys of Jackson, of less note, were John Payne, Gustavus A. Byrd, Benjamin Wright, Alexander Anderson and Jasen Chamberlain. The first named was a Virginian by birth, somewhat pompous in his manner, but withal a sensible young man. He died in 1824. Wright was one of the best young lawyers in Jackson at the time he practiced there, ranking with Davis, Watkins and Ranney, but in a short time he immigrated to Florida. Chamberlain came from some of the Eastern States about 1820. He was well read, laborious and indefatigable, but his career was cut short by death. Anderson was a Virginian by birth, and a man of fine acquirements. He went to California, where he met with success.

Thomas B. English was a native of Louisiana. He came to Cape Girardeau in 1817 with his uncle, Simeon English, and was educated at St. Mary's College. After his marriage he studied law with Johnson Ranney, and was admitted to the bar in 1834 or 1835. He soon took high rank in his profession. He was modest and conciliatory in manner, and possessed untiring energy. He was a popular member of the Democratic party, served a term as circuit attorney, and in 1860 was elected a member of the State Senate. In 1865 he was made judge of the Tenth Circuit, but was ousted by the Drake constitution. He died in 1866.

About 1835 Samuel A. Hill located at Jackson, for the practice of law. He was a successful advocate and a popular man. He was a Democrat, and served three or four terms in the Legislature. During the latter part of his life he lived at Cape Girardeau.

Robert Brown was a licensed attorney, but practiced very little. For some years he was editor of the Southern Advocate, published at Jackson. He was a native of Maryland, and a brother of Wilson Brown. This latter gentleman may, with propriety, be mentioned in this connection. He came to Missouri in 1827, and in 1836 represented Scott County in the Legislature. From 1849 to 1853 he was auditor of the State, and from the latter date until his death, in 1855, he was lieutenant-governor.

M. H. Moore was located at Cape Girardeau during the "fifties." During the war he went south and never returned.

At the close of the war Lewis Brown located at Cape Girardeau, and was engaged in the practice of the profession until his death in 1886. He was a good criminal lawyer, but his standing with the public was not high.

Jacob H. Burrough located at Cape Girardeau in 1853, and was engaged in the practice of law at that place until his death, thirty years later. He was a native of Philadelphia, and had practiced in Tennessee, St. Louis and Iowa. He rarely entered the courtroom as an advocate, but was a successful solicitor.

The following are the members of the bar in Cape Girardeau County at the present time, with the year in which they were admitted: Linus Sanford, 1860; Robert L. Wilson, 1868; J. B. Dennis, 1869; Louis Houck, 1869; Wilson Cramer, 1870; R. H. Whitelaw, 1873; R. G. Ranney, 1873; Samuel M. Greene, 1873; R. B. Oliver, 1877; W. J. Roberts, 1878; W. H. Miller, 1879;

Ed. D. Engelmann, 1879; J. W. Limbaugh, 1879; R. P. Wilson, 1880; M. Cramer, 1881; B. F. Davis, 1883; J. A. Snider, 1885; F. E. Burrough, 1885; Thomas D. Hines, 1886.

In 1851 the Legislature passed an act establishing a court of common pleas at Cape Girardeau, of which William C. Ranney was appointed judge. He continued in the office until 1864, when he was succeeded by George H. Greene. In 1866 James McWilliam, who had previously been circuit attorney, was elected judge of this court, and served for four years. His successor was H. G. Wilson, who was re-elected in 1876. In 1882 Robert L. Wilson, the present incumbent, was elected.

One of the first lawyers to locate in Perry County was Edward M. Holden, an Irishman, who came about 1840. He had little education, and bore a bad reputation for honesty and truthfulness. It is said that in his pleadings he covered up his ignorance in bad penmanship, and when not sure of the right word, made an indefinite character that might stand for anything. He belonged to a species that, unhappily, is not yet entirely extinct.

In 1843 J. W. Leal, a talented young lawyer, was admitted to the bar at Perryville, and remained until the Mexican War. He then joined the army, and was captured and killed by the Indians at Taos.

Elijah Bell located at Perryville about 1844. He was an able lawyer, and might have won distinction had he not given himself up to dissipation. Of similar character was Henry L. McArthur, who came to the county some time between 1845 or 1850 and remained several years.

One of the ablest lawyers ever at the bar of Perry County was John W. Noell. He came to the county from Virginia in 1831, when he was seventeen years of age. He began the practice of law somewhat late in life, after having served for several years as clerk of the circuit court. In 1850 he was sent to the State Senate, and in 1858 was elected to Congress as a Douglas Democrat. He was re-elected in 1860 and again in 1862. He was a staunch Union man, and supported the war measures. He was a strong, forcible and logical speaker, and was attentive to the interests of his client in court, and of his constituents in Congress. He died in March, 1863, and was succeeded in Congress by his son, Thomas E. Noell. The latter began the practice of law in Dubuque, Iowa, but soon formed a partnership with his father. When elected to Congress he held the rank of captain in the Federal army. He died on October 3, 1867; at the age of thirty-one.

Col. J. C. Killian was for a long time one of the leading lawyers of the county, and during the war served as circuit attorney.

The attorneys of Perryville at present are John H. Nicholson, James C. Noell, John V. Noell, Ed. Robb, Charles A. Killian, J. J. Seibel, William Robb and John B. Davis.

The leading lawyers of St. Francois County prior to the Civil War were Ignatius G. Beale, William D. McCracken and Walter K. Brady. Beale came from Kentucky early in the "forties." He was not an eloquent or fluent speaker, but was a sound lawyer, and was very successful. McCracken was more of a politician than lawyer. He was secretary of the State Senate two or three times, and in 1856 was a presidential elector on the Democratic ticket. He was rewarded for his services by a consulship to one of the South American States, and died on board of an American man-of-war off the coast of Cuba, while on his return home.

Brady came to the county from Murfreesboro, Tenn. He died just prior to the war, and while a comparatively young man.

St. Francois County now has one of the ablest as well as one of the largest bars in Southeast Missouri. The members are William Carter, William R. Taylor, F. M. Carter, H. B. Ledbetter, M. R. Smith, George M. Wilson, K. W. Weber, John F. Bush, Merrill Pipkin, J. J. Brady and Jasper N. Burks.

In Madison County the lawyers who, prior to the Civil War, remained long enough to gain a reputation, were William M. Newberry, Samuel Caruthers and D. M. Fox. Newberry was born in Frankfort, Ky., in the year 1800, and at the age of eighteen came to Missouri, and engaged in teaching school. His name appears on the roll of attorneys as early as 1826, and from that time until his death, in 1876, he was engaged in the practice of his profession. He was a good lawyer, and a fair speaker, but, although he lived to an advanced age, he was never very strong, physically.

Samuel Caruthers was born in Madison County. He was a nephew of Robert L. Caruthers, of Tennessee, and obtained his legal education in Cumberland University. His tastes ran more in the direction of politics than law, and in 1852 he was elected to represent the Southeast Missouri District in Congress. He possessed a whole-souled, genial disposition, was a fine campaign speaker, told a good story well, and was an adept in all the arts of the politician. These qualities, combined with the fact that his district was supposed to be largely composed of swamps, won for him the sobriquet of the "Swamp Fox." He was twice re-elected, and died soon after the expiration of his third term.

D. M. Fox was the father of Judge James D. Fox. He was educated for the priesthood, but his health became impaired, and he subsequently, about 1845, began the practice of law. He was possessed of fine legal ability, and was a successful practitioner. S. C. Collier, John F. Edwards and J. D. Perkins have more recently been members of the Madison County Bar. Collier died about 1875. Edwards recently located in Kansas City, and Perkins is now a resident of Carthage, Mo. B. B. Cahoon, Robert A. Anthony, O. K. Clardy, Medford Cahoon and E. Anthony constitute the present bar.

Bollinger County may be said to have had no resident bar prior to about 1868. The first lawyers to locate there were A. C. Ketchum and Alexander Barrett. The former had practiced in several different States, and was of a roving disposition. He continued only six or eight years. Barrett came from North Carolina, and remained until his death, about 1876. James H. Wilson located at Lutesville about 1872, and served a term or two as prosecuting attorney. He died of consumption. The members of the present bar are Moses Whybark, W. K. Chandler, George E. Conrad, C. P. Caldwell, S. W. Meeks and J. W. Caldwell.

The first lawyers of Stoddard County are still in active practice there. They are Col. Solomon G. Kitchen and Maj. H. H. Bedford. The former came to the county in 1838, and began the practice of law some four or five years later. He removed to West Prairie in 1843, but returned to Bloomfield in 1849, and is now a resident of Dexter. Maj. Bedford is a native of Tennessee, and a brother of the late A. M. Bedford, of Charleston, Mo. He began the practice of law at Bloomfield in 1847.

About 1850 Richard Wall and William G. Phelan were admitted to the bar at Bloomfield. The former came from Illinois, and a year or two after his arrival located on a farm in the west part of the county. Phelan was a well-educated Irishman, witty and quick at repartee. He was a good speaker, and was very successful before a jury. He remained in the county until his death. James V. O'Dell, an attorney from Illinois, came to the county about 1857 and remained until 1869, during which time he served two or three terms in the Legislature. A short time before the war C. B. Crumb came from New York, and was employed as a teacher in the academy. He had previously graduated in law, and at the close of hostilities, he began the practice of his profession. He was not an eloquent speaker, but was a thorough lawyer, and especially was a good pleader. He served as both probate judge, and public administrator.

The attorneys of Stoddard County at present are H. H. Bedford, R. P. Owen, George Houck, Thomas Connelly, J. L. Fort and W. F. Ford, of Bloomfield, and C. L. Keaton, S. G. Kitchen and George N. Broughton, of Dexter.

The first lawyer to locate at Poplar Bluff was Daniel L. Jennings, who came from Kentucky soon after the organization of the county. He was energetic and witty, but superficial. He removed to Stoddard County, where he died soon after the close of the war. About 1858 James D. Dennis, a Tennessean located at Poplar Bluff for the practice of law. In 1870 he was elected prosecuting attorney, but died before the end of his term. His successor was Andrew Giboney, who had come to this county about 1870. He was well educated, and was a good speaker, but his career was closed by death before reaching mature years.

The first lawyer to locate in Mississippi County was John C. Thomas, who began practice about 1842. He was a successful advocate and a good lawyer, and when, in 1849, a common pleas and probate court was established he was commissioned judge of that court. The court was abolished in 1857, and he soon after removed to Texas, where he is still living.

Judge Hough, who is mentioned elsewhere, came to the county soon after its organization. About 1848 Henry F. Porter located in Charleston. He was a lawyer of only moderate ability, and soon left the town in disgrace.

In 1851 or 1852 A. M. Bedford came from West Tennessee, and located at Charleston, where he remained until his death in 1872. He was a fairly good lawyer, but gave more attention to speculation and trading than to his profession.

Messer Ward, Joseph C. Moore and Leroy Keesee were all admitted to the bar at about the same time. Ward was a fine speaker, with a good, legal education, and had he applied himself closely to his profession would have ranked among the best lawyers of the State. He was a native of Calloway County, Ky., and died in Charleston in 1884. Moore began practice as a partner of Ward, but extensive business interests have occupied the greater portion of his attention. He is now a resident of Nashville, Tenn. Keesee was a young man of good ability, and a student of Judge Hough's. During the war he was taken prisoner for some alleged disloyalty, and confined at Alton, Ill., where he died.

C. C. Kalfus came to Charleston about 1856. He was a native of Kentucky, and had studied law with Judge Purtle, of St. Louis. He died in 1868.

E. D. Bigger, Samuel C. Moore and N. E. Quimby all practiced for a short time at Charleston during the latter part of the "fifties."

The oldest member of the bar in Mississippi County at the present time is Robert Waide, who was admitted to practice in 1852. The other members are Joseph J. Russell, Geo. S. Elliott, J. T. Wilson, J. A. Boone, Alonzo Hawkins, W. N. Randolph, H. J. Cantwell, E. J. Deal.

The first resident lawyer at Benton was Alvan Cook, a brother of John D. Cook, who began practice at that place about 1831 and continued until 1849, when he started for California by the overland route, but died before reaching there.

John Cook, a nephew of Alvan, located at Benton, about 1840, and went to California in 1849. Contemporary with John Cook were Alexander Giboney and John Chapman. The latter was an Eastern man and died in 1845. Giboney came from Cape Girardeau County and also died young.

Levi S. Green, a native of New York, came to Missouri in 1850, and located at Benton. He had been a teacher, and was an excellent lawyer. He retired from practice several years ago, and has since been living at Sikeston.

Charles D. Cook, a son of Judge John D. Cook, located at Benton about 1850. He was a fine lawyer, but only a moderate advocate. His forte was special pleading. As treasurer of the county he became financially involved, and died from sickness brought on by care and anxiety, soon after leaving the office in 1866.

The amount of legal business in Wayne County has never been large, and the number of resident attorneys has been correspondingly small. Among the first were Joseph White and Henry B. Barnhart. The former came from Kentucky about 1850, and after remaining a few years went to Ripley County. Barnhart lived on a farm on Bear Creek. He had some practice, but it was mostly before justice's courts. Shortly before the war W. T. Leeper was admitted to the bar, and has since been one of the most successful lawyers of the county. Among the other attorneys at the present time are E. P. Settle, of Greenville, and C. D. Yancey, S. R. Brown, William N. Nolle and John H. Rainey, of Peidmont.

The first resident attorney in Iron County was Philip Pipkin, who had previously lived in Jefferson County. He located in Arcadia at about the time the county was organized. He was a very able lawyer, but of a somewhat irascible disposition. In 1872 he was appointed judge of the newly constituted Twenty-sixth Circuit, but, as related elsewhere, it was decided there was no vacancy. He subsequently returned to Jefferson County, and finally removed to Farmington, where he died.

John W. Emerson, now United States marshal, came to Missouri from New England as a millwright. He studied law with Judge Pipkin, and has been a very successful advocate. He was a Union man during the war, and at its close served for a short time as judge of the Fifteenth Circuit. Among others who have been engaged in practice in Iron County may be mentioned Thomas Sandford, James H. Chase, J. P. Dillingham and Bernard Zwart, J. S. Jordan, J. B. Walker and W. R. Edgar, who constitute the present bar.

Asahel Smith, popularly known as "Counselor Smith" was one of the first lawyers of New Madrid. He came from one of the Eastern States some time in the twenties and remained until his death, about 1842. He was a man of good legal attainments, but was unable to make an effective speech.

Hezekiah P. Maulsby, a son of Lemuel Maulsby, a pioneer of New Madrid County, began the practice of law about 1830, but during a large part of his life was engaged in filling some official position. He served several terms in the Legislature, and at the time of his death in 1853 was clerk of the circuit court.

William S. Moseley was admitted to the bar at New Madrid about 1841. He was a native of this county and married Eliza LaForge. He was State auditor under Gov. Jackson, but did not go south with the other State officials. Subsequently he removed to Texas, where he died. He was well educated, and was a good speaker, but was somewhat lacking in energy.

Robert A. Hatcher came to New Madrid in 1848, and took a position as clerk on the steamer "Selma," of which William S. Moseley was captain. The boat was sold for debt, and he began the study of law with Moseley. In 1850 he was elected to represent the county in the Legislature. In 1852 he engaged in a mercantile business with F. V. Lesieur, but in a short time sold out and began the practice of his profession. He was very successful, and soon had a very good practice. During the war he espoused the Southern cause, and was elected to the Confederate Congress. After the war he continued to practice at New Madrid until 1872, when he was elected to the United States Congress, in which body he held a seat for four years. In 1877 he removed to Charleston, where he recently died.

John T. Scott came to New Madrid from Union City, Tenn. in 1846, and published a newspaper until 1850. From that time until his death he was engaged in practicing law. He was a self-made man, and a lawyer of moderate ability. In 1866 he was elected to the Legislature.

John C. Underwood, like Scott, was from Tennessee, and was an editor as well as lawyer. After the war he was engaged in merchandising for a short time, and subsequently removed to one of the States farther south.

The present bar of New Madrid County consists of the following attorneys: H. C. Riley, M. J. Conran, C. A. LaForge and Henry Bishop.

Until within the past ten years the greater part of the legal business of Dunklin County was done by lawyers from other counties, but it now has a large and able bar, composed of the following attorneys: T. R. R. Ely, C. P. Hawkins, S. P. and Julian Tribble, R. M. Finney and W. D. Penny, of Kennett, and Henry N. Phillips, J. L. Downing, Robert C. Vincent, H. C. Young and J. A. Barlow, of Malden.

The first resident lawyers in Pemiscot County were Joseph Crablebaugh and E. G. Walker, who came in 1856 and remained about two years. The former was from Ohio and the latter from Mississippi.

John E. Averill came from New Madrid in 1857. He entered the Confederate army in 1861, but resigned in a short time. He was a fine lawyer and a good speaker, and remained in the county until his death, in December, 1884.

E. G. Hill came from Tennessee in 1858, but returned to that State in 1862.

Since the close of the war the leading attorney of the county has been Maj. G. W. Carleton. The remaining members of the Pemiscot Bar at the present time are William A. Moore, F. J. Roberts, H. J. Wilkes, B. F. Barcroft, of Caruthersville, and Samuel B. Dennis, of Coutre.

CITIES, TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

Ste. Genevieve.—The history of Ste. Genevieve as an incorporated town begins with 1808, when the court of quarter-sessions defined its boundaries, which included New Bourbon, and passed an order of incorporation. The first board of trustees consisting of James Moore, John B. Valle, Aaron Elliott, John B. Pratte and J. B. St. Gem, met on August 19, 1808, and elected John B. Pratte, chairman, and Nathaniel Pope, clerk. Parfait Dufour was chosen syndic, and Francois Janis overseer of roads. Ordinances were passed regulating the Big Field, prohibiting the sale of liquor to Indians, and prescribing the duties of citizens in regard to fires. Every citizen was required to provide himself with a leathern bucket, a ladder and a large vessel to hold water, and at the outbreak of a fire he was to run with all possible haste to it. August Obuchon, Louis Buat, Julian Pratte and Bartholomew St. Gem were appointed fire wardens. At the next election, which took place in 1810, the trustees elected were Judge Otto Shrader, Camille De Lassus, Charles Gregoire, Francois Janis and Vital Beauvais, all prominent citizens of the town at that time.

Of the towns on the Mississippi above New Orleans, Ste. Genevieve was at this time second only to St. Louis. Up to the transfer of the government in 1804, these two towns were very nearly on an equality in point of trade and population. By the census of 1799 Ste. Genevieve, not including New Bourbon, had a population of 949, while St. Louis at the same time had 925. The commerce consisted chiefly of lead and peltries, either of which passed current as money. There was a large profit in the trade with the Indians, and some of the merchants became very wealthy. It is related by Gen. Rozier that on one occasion Thomas Maddin, one of the richest of the American settlers, laid a wager with Louis Bolduc, an old merchant, that he could show more wealth than Bolduc, but he quickly acknowledged that he had lost, when Bolduc requested him to bring a half bushel to measure the silver money he had in his cellar.

Among the leading citizens of Ste. Genevieve between 1810 and 1820 were Charles Gregoire, Ferdinand Rozier, Joseph Pratte, Jacob Phillipson, Joseph Bogy, Julian and Ed. Depestre, L. and J. B. Valle, J. B. Bossier and Vital St. Gem, merchants; Louis Guignon and Walter Fenwick, physicians; John Scott, lawyer, and William Shannon, Aaron Elliott and Nathaniel G. Wilkinson, who in the records of the courts are styled "gentlemen."

Ferdinand Rozier came to Ste. Genevieve about 1812 in company with Audubon, the naturalist. They were both natives of Nantes, France, had both served in the French navy, and had come to America together. Mr. Rozier engaged in trade immediately upon his arrival, and continued in business until within a few years of his death. He was an enterprising merchant, and established branch stores at Perryville and Potosi. When he first began business he made six trips to Philadelphia on horseback to buy goods. Keel boats were about the only means of transportation by water, and nearly all of the commerce was carried on on the Mississippi and the Ohio. With these boats it was not very difficult to descend the river. They glided swiftly and smoothly along with the current, but to bring a loaded boat up the stream was a very different matter, especially where the current was strong. It was necessary to keep close to the bank, and work the boat along with set poles, or the slow and tiresome process of cordelling. Except under the most favorable circumstances could much progress be made with oars.

On August 1, 1817, the first steamboat, the "General Pike" commanded by Capt. Jacob Reed, arrived at Ste. Genevieve, and was received with great demonstrations of joy. In September a second boat, the "Constitution," Capt. R. T. Guyard, arrived, and during the following year several boats made trips up the river, but it was not until about 1824 that regular steamboat navigation began. This revolutionized river transportation, and added to the importance of the towns along the Mississippi. Ste. Genevieve became the point from which was shipped all the lead, iron and copper from the whole mining region, and after the opening of the furnaces at Iron Mountain and Pilot Knob these shipments were very large. This period, from 1846 to 1858, when the Iron Mountain road was completed to Pilot Knob, marks the high tide of the prosperity of Ste. Genevieve. It is still a very beautiful little city, but its commercial prestige has gone for a time at least.

In 1822 was established the first newspaper published at Ste. Genevieve, and the second south of St. Louis, it having been preceded by the "Patriot" at Jackson. It was called the Correspondent and Record, and was edited by Thomas Foley. The second journalistic enterprise in Ste. Genevieve was the State Gazette, established in 1833, and edited by William B. Baker. This was followed by the Missouri Democrat, published by P. G. Ferguson. In 1849 the Pioneer was established by Concannon & Lindsay, and the following year was transferred to James H. Dixon. In 1850 Charles C. Rozier began the publication of a second paper, the Creole, which in one year was moved to St. Louis. Then followed the Inde- pendent, in 1854, published by Amable Rozier, and the Missouri Gazette in 1859, by E. K. Eaton. In February, 1860, O. D. Harris issued the first number of the Plain Dealer, which, about a year later, was suppressed by the provost-marshal. In 1865 the Representative was established by Halleck & Bro., and in 1868 the News and Advertiser, by G. M. Setto. In June, 1872, S. Henry Smith began the publication of the Fair Play, and continued it until about 1880. He was succeeded by Valle Harrold from 1880 to 1884, and Henry S. Shaw, 1884-86. The present editor is Joseph Flynn, one of the best journalists in Southeast Missouri. In 1872 a German paper, the Freie Presse and Freie Blatter, was established by Frank Kline. Two years later it was succeeded by the Freie Presse, edited by Kline & Earnst, and the Freie Presse, by Dr. C. F. Carson. In 1882 the Ste. Genevieve Herald was established, and is edited and published by Joseph A. Earnst. It is printed one-half in English and the remainder in German, and is very popular in the county.

On June 21, 1808, the governor and judges of the Louisiana Territory incorporated the Ste. Genevieve Academy, with the following board of trustees: Rev. James Maxwell, J. B. Valle, Jacques Guibourd, St. Gem Beauvais, Francois Janis, J. B. Pratte, Dr. Walter Fenwick, Andrew Henry, Timothy Phelps, Aaron Elliott, Nathaniel Pope, Joseph Spencer, John Scott, William James, Thomas Oliver, Joshua Penneman, William Shannon, George Bullitt, Henry Dodge and Henry Diel. During the same year a large stone building was erected on a beautiful hill overlooking the town and the river, but it was not entirely finished, and the academy was not opened until 1818, when Bishop Dubourg employed Man. Butler, the historian of Kentucky, as a teacher, and began a school which, however, was of short duration. In 1815 Joseph Hertich opened a school in the country, ten miles from Ste. Genevieve, called the "Asylum." The school soon gained a high reputation, and from that time until it was closed, some twenty-five years later, it was the place at which nearly all the male youths of Ste. Genevieve were educated. Among its students were three who afterward reached the United States Senate. Mr. Hertich was a native of Switzerland, and a thorough scholar.

In 1854 Firmin A. Rozier completed the old academy building, and on February 1 opened a school, which developed into a flourishing institution under his management. It was continued until 1862, when it was suspended on account of the war, and was not again reopened. The building remodeled is now occupied by Gen. Rozier as a residence. In June, 1837, a flourishing house of the Loretto Sisters, called "Our Lady of Mt. Carmel" was established in the building known as the Detchemendy House. Here the girls of Ste. Genevieve received instruction until 1858, when the St. Francois de Sales Academy was opened by the Sisters of St. Joseph. This institution at first occupied a frame building, but about 1872 a large four-story brick structure was erected.

In 1846 the first board of directors of common schools was elected. The members were Eloy S. Lecompte, Felix Valle, Francis C. Rozier, Eugene Guibourd and Ichabod Sergeant. No schools, however, were opened for about ten years. The first was taught in what was known as the "Old Fort." In 1860 the building now occupied by the colored schools was erected and was used by the white schools, until 1874, when the present house was completed. It is a two-story building with a basement, and cost $6,000. At first one teacher taught all the pupils, now three teachers are employed for the white school, and one for the colored. In September, 1887, A. S. Coker was installed as principal, and the schools were more thoroughly graded than they had before been. The present board of education is as follows: John S. Whitlock, president; Joseph N. Simon, vice-president; Charles C. Jokerst, secretary; William W. Weber, treasurer; E. C. Lelie and William H. Bantz.

Ste. Genevieve now has a population of about 2,000 souls. The business interests are represented as follows; John L. Boverie, Rozier & Jokerst, Wilder Bros., Charles H. Biel, Mrs. J. Falk & Son, and C. A. Herter, general merchandise, Dr. Charles F. Carson and Dr. R. F. Lanning, drugs; P. V. Jaccard and Mrs. Louisa Kempf, jewelery; Gottlieb Kammerer, K. A. Mueller, H. Okenfuss, stoves and tinware; H. Lelie & Son, harness; Hoffman & Sucher, agricultural implements. The manufacturing consist of two large flouring mills, the Cone Mill and the City Mill. The former was built by Elay S. Lecompte in 1856, and run by him for about fourteen years. It has since been greatly enlarged and improved, and is one of the best mills in Missouri. It is owned by Mauntel, Borgess & Co., and run by Joseph B. C. Lecompte as manager. The City Mill was built about four years ago by Wehner & Bolle.

St. Marys.—St. Marys is a town of about 500 inhabitants, situated on the Mississippi River a short distance below the mouth of Saline Creek. It was originally known as "Camp Rowdy," and was at one time the home of Gen. Henry Dodge, who lived in a double log house in what is now the lower part of the town. Later it became the shipping point for Perryville and Mine La Motte, and a store was opened by Kent & Sparrow. They had come from some of the Eastern States, and the village then became known as "Yankeetown." Kent & Sparrow were succeeded by Miles A. Gilbert, and at about the same time a second store was opened by Richard Bledsoe. The town then received its present name. In the year 1857 or 1858 a flouring mill was built by John F. Schaaf, but after running a short time it was burned. It was rebuilt by Henry L. Caldwell, and began running again in the fall of 1860. It has since changed owners two or three times, and has been greatly enlarged and improved. It now has a capacity of 300 barrels per day, and is owned by Fath & Ewald of St. Louis. The mercantile interests of the town are now represented by the following firms: Jules Rozier & Son, Philip Karst, William H. Hoffman, J. A. Townsend, J. E. Cissell and Anton Lenz, general merchandise, and E. S. Lawbaugh, drugs.

Cape Girardeau.—Cape Girardeau was surveyed and laid off into streets and lots some time in February or March, 1806, by Bartholomew Cousin, under the direction of the proprietor, Louis Lorimier. As then surveyed its limits were North Street on the north, Williams Street on the south, and Middle Street on the west. The cross streets within the area were of the same number and width as at the present time. The first lots were sold at private sale at the uniform price of $100 each. John Risher purchased Lot No. 5, Range D; John Randol, Lot No. 6, Range D; Solomon Ellis, Lot 10, Range E; William Ogle, Lot No. 11,

William H. Coerver

CAPE GIRARDEAU CO.

Range E; Ezekeil Able, Lot No. 14, Range E; John C. Harbison, Lots No. 8 and 9, Range F; William White, Lot No. 9, Range B; Charles G. and Solomon Ellis, Lot 5, Range F. Besides the above there were among the earliest residents of the towns D. F. Steinbeck, Robert Blair, Dr. Erasmus Ellis, Anthony Haden, James Evans, Frederick Gibler, Levi Wolverton, Robert Worthington, Frederick Reinecke, Joseph McFerron and George Henderson. Louis Lorimier lived in a long low frame house, which he built three or four years before the town was laid out, on the lot now occupied by St. Vincent's Academy. It was subsequently known as the "Red House," and was thought by the superstitious to be haunted. The Ellises came from Georgia about 1805. There were some four or five brothers of whom those mentioned above located in the town. Charles G. erected a large, two-story log house on the site of the present Turner Hall, where he kept the leading hotel in the town until his death, which occurred in 1831. He also kept a stock of goods, and carried on a general mercantile business for a number of years. In 1826 he assisted in organizing the Cape Girardeau Mill Company, which erected a small mill in the upper end of town. It was built out over the river, and was propelled by a screw turned by the force of the current. Erasmus Ellis was a physician. He lived in a two-story log house on the site of the Baptist Church. Solomon Ellis lived in a brick house near the corner of Lorimier and Bellvue Streets.

D. F. Steinbeck, a son-in-law of Louis Lorimier, lived on the corner now occupied by the Sturdivant Bank until 1810, when he removed to Cape La Croix Creek. In partnership with Frederick Reinecke he opened one of the first stores in the town. Garah Davis and William Ogle also opened a store in 1806. From the books of this old firm it is found that calico then sold for \$1 per yard; linen, 75 cents per yard; pins, 31 $\frac{1}{4}$ cents per paper; sugar, 25 cents per pound; note paper, 50 cents per quire; and other articles in the same proportion. The senior member of the firm was a cousin of Charles G. Ellis, and a native of Georgia. Ogle was from Maryland, where he had held the position of collector of internal revenue. The partnership was abruptly brought to an end by the death of Ogle, as related below, but the business was conducted by the surviving partner two or three years longer.

Robert Blair was a judge of the court of quarter-sessions and common pleas. He was a native of Ohio, and came to Cape Girardeau about the time the town was established. He died in December, 1810, and the following year his widow married George Henderson. The latter was one of the earliest settlers in Cape Girardeau District, and a man of considerable prominence. From 1807 to 1813 he was judge of the probate court, recorder, and auditor, and upon the organization of the county was appointed treasurer. Subsequently he served several terms as a judge of the county court. He died about 1835.

Joseph McFerron was the first clerk of the courts of Cape Girardeau District. He was an Irishman by birth, and a man of fine sense, and superior education, but in appearance he was unprepossessing. His face bore a hard and stolid expression, and his eyes were overhung by long, projecting eyebrows. He was very reserved in his manner, but by those who knew him best he is said to have been a genial and pleasant companion. His chirography was very peculiar, presenting a beautiful appearance, but being almost indecipherable. In the autumn of 1807 a duel was fought between him and William Ogle. The cause of this duel is not now remembered, but tradition says that Ogle was somewhat of a bully and had repeatedly insulted McFerron. The latter at last struck Ogle in the face, and at once received a challenge from him. McFerron was no craven and promptly accepted it. The preliminary arrangements were made, and pistols chosen as the weapons. It is said that McFerron had never fired a pistol, but at once obtained one, and spent the interval before the duel in constant practice. At the appointed time they met on a sand bar in the Mississippi, not far from Cape Girardeau, and at the first fire Ogle fell dead with a bullet in his brain, while McFerron remained unhurt. He at once gave up his office, but public sympathy was with him, and he was soon reinstated, and remained in that position until his death in 1821. Upon the removal of the county seat he bought six acres of land adjoining Jackson on the north, where he lived the remainder of his life.

James Evans was a lawyer, as were also at that time John

C. Harbison and Anthony Haden. Ezekiel Abel, a native of Maryland, was also prominent among the early settlers of Cape Girardeau. He was a blacksmith by trade, but was chiefly engaged in trading in land and land grants. He obtained the contract for erecting the first public buildings for Cape Girardeau District, but before completing them he became bankrupt. Subsequently, however, he succeeded in acquiring large wealth. He built the first brick house in Cape Girardeau. It was completed in 1811, and was badly injured by the earthquakes. Mr. Able was the father of four sons, Wilson, John, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, and two daughters, Mary, who married Gen. W. H. Ashley, and Elizabeth, the wife of W. J. Stephenson.

In 1808 the village of Cape Girardeau began to feel itself of sufficient importance to become an incorporated town, and the following petition was presented to the court of common pleas:

LIMITS OF THE TOWN OF CAPE GIRARDEAU.

The town of Cape Girardeau extends in front 3,058 feet 9 inches from Botany Street (North street), the northern boundary, to the street of Fortune (Williams Street), the southern limits, inclusively, and its depth is 1,773 feet 2 inches, exclusive of Water Street—that is, from the front of the easternmost to the street of Honor (Middle Street), inclusively, containing 126 acres and $\frac{1}{2}$ nearly, the divers parts and divisions of the town to be more particularly designated in the plan of the same.

July 23, 1808.

LOUIS LORIMIER.

FREDERICK GIBLER,

JOHN VANGILDER.

The petition was granted, and an election for five trustees was held on August 13, 1808, at which time Joseph McFerron, Anthony Haden, Robert Blair, Daniel F. Steinbeck and Isaac M. Bledsoe were elected. The town continued to prosper and grow until the organization of Cape Girardeau County, when it was dealt a severe blow in the removal of the seat of justice. During the next twenty years very few improvements were made. In 1818 it was described as a village containing two stores and about fifty houses. About this time a tanyard, which afterward became an enterprise of considerable importance, was established by Moses McClean on the site of the "Bee Store." A similar business had been put in operation on the place where John Painter now lives, in 1810, by William Scripps and his son, John. It was purchased in 1826 by the Painter brothers, Aaron, Louis, John, Wilson, Mason and Hiram, who carried on an extensive saddler's shop in connection with the tannery.

During this period, too, Levi L. Lightner built and operated a "still house" just north of town. He erected and occupied the house now the residence of Rev. Mr. Mooney, and for a time was engaged in business with Charles G. Ellis.

In 1818 the commissioners appointed to divide the estate of Louis Lorimier made an extensive addition to the town, and sold the lots at public auction. The first, which took place on November 22, was widely advertised, and largely attended. Many lots sold at prices that even now would be deemed extravagant. Ninety-three lots sold for an aggregate of $34,733, and twenty-one outlots for $26,923, a total of $61,656. Cape Girardeau, however, did not assume a position of much importance until about 1835, when the great increase in the steamboat business on the Mississippi gave it a decided impetus, or, in modern parlance, a "boom." Its superior location soon made it the metropolis of Southeast Missouri, and the shipping point for a portion of Arkansas also.

Among the leading merchants of the town, from this time until the Civil War, were Andrew Giboney, James P. Fulkerson, Alfred P. Ellis, I. R. Wathen, H. L. Sloan, Robert Sturdivant, Thomas J. Rodney, A. D. Leech, T. & W. Johnson, Joseph Phillipson, Albert Bros., Eugene Garaghty and C. T. Gale. In 1853 the third branch of the State Bank was removed from Jackson to Cape Girardeau, and went into operation with Ignatius R. Wathen as president, and A. T. Lacey, cashier. In 1857 Mr. Lacey became the president, and was succeeded as cashier by Robert Sturdivant. The following statement of the condition of the bank on September 30, 1859, is an index to the extent of the business interests of the town at that time:

During the war business was necessarily at a standstill, but at the close of hostilities it soon regained its wonted activity, and the population of the town was augmented by a considerable influx of German immigrants. In March, 1867, the business and manufacturing interests were summed up as follows: 27 dry goods stores, 3 hardware stores, 12 grocery and provision stores, 5 drug stores, 5 furniture stores, 1 notion store, 14 shoe shops, 5 tinshops, 2 jewelry stores, 11 blacksmith shops, 7 tailor shops, 5 hotels, 3 livery stables, 3 flouring mills, 1 saw mill, 5 breweries, 1 distillery, 2 tanneries and 2 cotton-gins. Three years later the population of the town was found to be 3,640. At this time the completion of the Iron Mountain Railroad had cut off a large territory previously tributary to Cape Girardeau and the river commerce had begun to decline. It therefore became more necessary than ever before to secure better transportation facilities. The Cape Girardeau & State Line Railroad was projected, and, as related elsewhere, its construction begun. A subscription of $150,000 by the city, and a similar amount by Cape Girardeau Township, were voted by large majorities, and the subsequent failure of the road resulted most disastrously to the city. The heavy indebtedness thus recklessly incurred did not present an inviting aspect to manufacturers and other capitalists. The next decade, therefore, was not one of great prosperity. But the opening of the Cape Girardeau Southwestern Railroad, and the funding and reduction of the bonded debt, have placed the city once more in a condition for rapid growth. The commercial interests of the town at the present time are represented by the following individuals and firms: Otto Buehrmann, H. P. Peironnet, Ed. D. Engelmann, David A. Glenn, L. F. Klosterman & Co., William Burgess, Bernard Bremmerman, William C. Bergmann, W. V. Leech, F. Himstedt & Co., Henry Brandes, Doyle Bros., George Hirsch, John C. Ludwig & Co., Herman Noeninger, Henry Nussbaum, John H. Sanders, William Woeleke and William Hutters, dry goods and general merchandise; S. Albert & Co., Henry Stratman, P. H. Dempsey, John St. Avit & Son, Charles McDonald & Co., Hobbs & Co., Henry Meysted, John F. Schwepker and Joseph Fuerth, groceries and commission merchants; Dr. William B. Wilson & Co., Rider & Schwepker, Dr. William N. Finney and William Curver, drugs; Ed. S. Lilly & Co., Thiessen & Hauenschild and B. Bahn & Co., hardware; William Williams, boots and shoes; Henry A. Pott, Herman Steinbach and C. Klagus, harness and saddles; H. S. Doyle, hats and caps; James Carroll, John M. Cluley, August Walters, furniture; Louis Hendricks, Herman Willer, John Gawronski, jewelry; William H. Vogel, A. Leager, Henry Lehr and John Gawronski, stoves and tinware.

The first manufacturing establishment of much importance erected in Cape Girardeau was a steam flouring mill, built by James Reynolds and B. M. Horrell. A few years later I. R. Wathen erected the Marble City Mill, and about 1862 the Union Milling Company was organized to operate both of the above mills, but in 1866 the latter was closed. The company continued to run the Union Mill until 1880, when it was transferred to Robert Sturdivant, the present proprietor, who in 1884 made it a roller-mill, with a daily capacity of 300 barrels. In 1866 George C. Thilenius erected a large flouring mill on Harmony Street, which was recently burned, and in 1877 F. W. Pott built the Planter's Mill, which he still operates.

The remaining manufactories now in operation are the Cape Girardeau Foundry, owned by Albert & Klosterman; the Cape

City Woolen Mills, owned and operated by L. F. Klosterman; an extensive brewery, owned by Caspar Uhl, and cigar factories by Geo. H. Cramer, August Bierwirth and Louis Roth.

The branch bank of the State at Cape Girardeau was discontinued in 1866. Its assets and effects were then purchased by Robert Sturdivant, who established a private bank, which he conducted until 1884. In that year the institution was incorporated under the name of the Sturdivant Bank, with a capital of $30,000. The stockholders and officers are Robert Sturdivant, president; L. J. Albert, cashier; Louis Houck, L. F. Klosterman and E. S. Lilly.

The Cape Girardeau Patriot was established in 1836 by Edwin White, who, the following year, sold the office to Robert Sturdivant. Mr. Sturdivant continued the publication about two years, after which it was conducted successively by Robert Renfroe and Charles D. Cook until about 1842 or 1843. It was an advocate of the Whig party, and was succeeded by another Whig paper, the South Missourian, which was edited by John W. Morris. The paper, however, which became an institution in Cape Girardeau was the Western Eagle, afterward the Cape Girardeau Eagle, which was founded by W. R. Dawson in 1847, and continued by Moore & Herr and Ben F. Herr until 1861. It was established as a Whig paper. In the campaign of 1860 it supported the Bell and Everett party, but after the election advocated disunion. Finally the editor entered the Confederate army, and the press was destroyed by the Federal soldiers.

During the war there was no regular publication of a paper, but the soldiers stationed in the town issued a small sheet for a time. In November, 1866, the Marble City News was established by A. M. Casebolt, who continued its publication, changing its name in 1874 to Cape Girardeau News, until 1878, when he sold the office to C. E. Barroll and J. A. Coker. Up to this time it had been published in the interest of the Republican party, but its politics have since been Democratic. Barroll & Coker conducted the News about a year. The former then sold his interest to T. J. Sylvius, and about three years later Coker sold to Thomas E. Penny. Penny & Sylvius in a few months were succeeded by W. D. Penny, who continued the publication but a short time.

In January, 1885, D. L. Hoffman purchased the office, and has since been the editor and proprietor.

Before the close of the war the Cape Girardeau Argus, a Democratic weekly, was established by William M. Hamilton, who continued it until 1869, when it was consolidated with the Missouri Democracy. The latter was established by Wallace Gruelle, in 1868. It was a radical Democratic sheet, and about two years later was removed to Clarkton. The Westliche Presse was established by Charles Weidt, in 1871. After about two years he began the publication of an English edition, and continued both the German and English editions until 1876, when, owing to financial embarrassment, they were suspended. About 1878 the Courier, a Democratic paper, was established by Ex-State Auditor George B. Clark. It was afterward conducted successively by Green Bros., Green & Franklin, A. S. Coker, Adams & Hoffman and John A. Wall.

On July 1, 1876, Ben. H. Adams issued the first number of the Cape Girardeau Democrat, which he has successfully conducted for a term longer than any other newspaper in the county has continued under one management. A few other publications have existed for a short time, among which may be mentioned the Cape Girardeau Expositor, published early in the "fifties"; the Mississippi Valley Globe, established in February, 1872, and Cape Talk, in 1886.

The first schools in Cape Girardeau were taught in a small log house, which stood somewhere near the present site of the St. Charles Hotel, in an orchard. But little is known of the early teachers, as they were usually transients, who taught only a few months. These schools were usually of an elementary character, and the instruction not always of the best, as children were frequently sent from the town to the Mount Tabor school. In 1830 George Henderson, Abner Vansant, Ezra J. Dutch, Alfred P. Ellis and Levi L. Lightner were elected trustees to purchase a lot and build a schoolhouse. They obtained a lot at the corner of Fountain and Meriwither Streets, and erected a small, brick building, which was used for several years. In February, 1843, Cape Girardeau Academy was incorporated, with Hiram L. Sloan, P. H. Davis, W. S. Watson, E. B. Cassilly, I. R. Wathen, Thomas J. Rodney and B. M. Horrell as trustees. Six years later a charter was granted to the Washington Female Seminary. The trustees of this institution were George Trask, Edward Dobbins, Noah Handy, John B. Martin, John D. Cook, Wilson Brown and Samuel A. Hill. Both of these institutions were very creditably maintained until the Civil War, since which time the public schools and the Normal School have taken their places. The principal teachers in them during their existence were Lyman B. and L. F. Andrews and J. J. Gardiner. They both occupied the old Ellis Hotel building.

Another institution which has done much for education, not only in Missouri but the entire Southwest, is St. Vincent's College, which was founded in the year 1843. At the same time it was chartered by the Legislature of Missouri, and empowered to confer all the degrees usually granted by the universities of this State or the United States. Rev. John Timon, afterward bishop of Buffalo, N. Y., was the first president. From its very inception up to the Civil War it was the great educational rendezvous for the Catholic youth of the Southern States that border the Mississippi. Many of its graduates held prominent public positions, especially in Louisiana, and not a few of them held distinguished places in the armies of the Confederacy.

In 1849 the college buildings were seriously injured by the explosion of the steamboat "Sea Bird," which, with her cargo of 1,500 barrels of gunpowder, was ice-bound in the river, just in front of the college. In 1851 a tornado carried the entire metal roof off the main building, and hid it from view beneath the muddy current of the Mississippi.

In 1859 St. Vincent's was made exclusively an ecclesiastical seminary, and for twenty years it was the alma mater of the Catholic clergy of a great part of the West. The seminary is still continued in connection with the collegiate department, and there are always a number of young men in the advanced classes of philosophy and theology, preparing themselves for the ministry. There are three distinct courses of study—theological, classical and commercial—each independent of the other.

The college has a beautiful location commanding a view of the Mississippi for miles up and down. The faculty number from ten to twelve regular professors, with a long corps of assistants. The present president is Rev. P. V. Byrne, C. M.

One of the best conducted and most useful institutions in the State is the Southeastern Missouri Normal School, which was established in accordance with an act of the Legislature, approved March 22, 1873, with the following board of regents: John Monteith, superintendent of schools; E. F. Weigel, secretary of State, and H. C. Ewing, attorney-general, ex-officio members, and George W. Farrar, Jacob H. Burrough, T. J. Morrison and C. C. Rozier. The first step was to secure a location, and for this purpose bids were received from Byrd Township, Cape Girardeau County, Cape Girardeau and Iron County. The first was not considered, as it depended upon an enabling act of the Legislature, and of the other two that of Cape Girardeau was considered the most advantageous, and was accepted. Fifty thousand dollars in bonds was voted by the city, and private subscriptions to a considerable amount were made. The hill known as "Fort B" was chosen as a site for the buildings, and the contract for their erection was soon after let to William E. Gray, for $39,000. Meantime, by arrangement with the trustees of the public schools of Cape Girardeau, the Normal School was opened in the high school rooms, in December, 1873. The faculty was as follows: L. H. Cheney, principal and professor of pedagogics; R. P. Rider, professor of language and mathematics; F. A. Cheney, professor of history and geography; G. T. Lemmon, professor of natural history and drawing, and L. C. Scheich, instructor in German. The school opened with thirty-five pupils, but increased during the year to fifty-seven.

In April, 1875, the architect, C. B. Clarke, reported the new building completed. It is of the early Renaissance order of architecture, and is two hundred feet in length; the main building is seventy-two feet wide and four stories high, and the wing forty feet wide and one story high. It contains seventeen commodious class rooms, four large halls and a magnificent auditorium. Altogether it is the finest building in Southeast Missouri. The site is a most beautiful and commanding one, offering an extended view of river and country. The old campus, embracing ten acres, has been graded, terraced, and made beautiful with trees, shrubs and flowers. To this an addition of seven acres has recently been made.

Prof. Cheney remained at the head of the institution until 1877, when he was accidentally killed while making some explorations in Kentucky. His successor was C. H. Dutcher, who remained until 1881. Since that time the school has been under the able management of R. C. Norton, LL. D., formerly of the Warrensburg Normal.

The following has been the attendance since the organization: 1873-74, 57; 1874-75, 164; 1875-76, 229; 1876-77, 230; 1877-78, 236; 1878-79, 261; 1879-80, 184; 1880-81, 229; 1881-82, 225; 1882-83, 269; 1883-84, 248; 1884-85, 279; 1885-86, 278; 1886-87, 299. The alumni at the close of the school year in 1887 numbered 58. The following is the present faculty: Richard C. Norton, LL. D., president, professor of mental and moral philosophy, political science and didactics; John S. McGhee, A. M., professor of mathematics; Alexander E. Douglas, A. M., professor of English language and literature; Frank Puryear, A. M., professor of natural science; A. Kate Shoot, M. S. D., professor of history and geography; Anna Bates, A. B., assistant in mathematics; Annie Mehaffee, assistant in English language and literature; W. J. Spillman, A. B., assistant in science; Otto Eckhart, professor of music.

In addition to the large number of parochial schools and academies Cape Girardeau has an excellent free school system, which has been in existence about twenty years. In pursuance of an act authorizing any city or town to organize for school purposes with special privileges a number of the leading citizens published a notice, calling an election for January 24, 1867, to vote upon the adoption or rejection of the act. The proposition was carried unanimously, and a convention was then held to elect a board of trustees. George H. Cramer, H. G. Wilson, M. Ditlinger, G. G. Kimmel, N. C. Harrison and J. M. Cluley were chosen. Preparations were at once made for the opening of schools. F. M. Grove, county school commissioner, was employed as principal teacher, and Misses E. Wooden and H. Cluley as assistants, and on April 1, 1867, the schools went into operation in the basement of the Presbyterian Church. In September following another room was rented from Henry Nussbaum, on Goodhope Street, and four assistant teachers were employed. The next year the number of teachers was increased to eight, including a teacher of a colored school and a German teacher. The superintendent was William G. Provines, who continued in that position until 1870, when he was succeeded by D. L. Morrison. The accommodations for the schools were very inadequate, and the erection of a school building soon became a necessity. In the spring of 1871 a large lot was purchased from William Cross, and the contract for a building, designed by E. D. Baldwin, was let to D. F. Tiedeman, at $15,000. The alterations and delays, which so frequently occur in the erection of public buildings, took place, and it was not completed ready for occupancy until September, 1872. James Barkley was then elected superintendent. In 1874 arrangements were made with the regents of the Southeastern Normal School by which a portion of the building was occupied by that institution, and the high school pupils were taught by its faculty. This plan was followed until the completion of the Normal School building, when J. B. Scott became superintendent. His successors have been as follows: Mrs. Hope, 1876-78; J. Q. A. Kimmel, 1878-81; W. T. Carrington, 1881-83; James H. Van Amburgh, 1883-85; A. V. Hamilton, 1885-87; T. E. Joyce, 1887.

Until 1880 the colored schools were taught in the hall of the Union Aid Society. They were then transferred to the old Lutheran Church, and since that building burned they have occupied the colored Masonic hall.

The district now has an outstanding bonded debt amounting to $22,000. The rates of taxation are, for school purposes, four-tenths of one per cent; for interest fund, two-tenths of one per cent, and for sinking fund, two-tenths of one per cent. The debt is thus being reduced at the rate of about $2,000 annually.

The secret order first to establish a lodge in Cape Girardeau was the Masonic fraternity. In June, 1847, Jacob Ingram, William R. Dawson, John Cross, Samuel H. Ford, Nathaniel W. Watkins, James McClean, James Bellamy, Alexander Criddle and Thomas Neal were granted a dispensation to form a lodge of A. F. & A. M., which they worked under, adding to their number

Giles T. Clark, John W. Morris, Alfred T. Lacey, John H. Stokes, Elijah W. Horrell, Wilson Brown, Edgar Mason, B. M. Horrell, Thomas M. Horrell, E. B. Bridgeforth, J. W. Gayle, George M. Beattie, William E. McGuire and Amaso Alton, to whom, on October 14, 1847, was granted a charter to organize St. Mark's Lodge No. 93, A. F. & A. M., with Jacob Ingram as W. M.; John Cross, S. W.; W. R. Dawson, J. W.; A. T. Lacey, Treas.; John W. Morris, Sec.; Edgar Mason, S. D.; G. T. Clark, J. D., and John H. Stokes, Tyler. The organization took place on October 28, at which time the petitions of Samuel A. Hill, Alexander Waugh and W. C. Ranney were presented. From that time until 1860 the lodge continued to work under favorable auspices, and, unlike many other lodges of the State, it was not disrupted by the Civil War. This was in a large measure due to the firm and conservative course of the Worshipful Master, Dr. W. B. Wilson. In 1871 the lodge room was remodeled, refitted and refurnished. The present membership is seventy-one. Since 1860 the office of Worshipful Master has been filled by Dr. W. B. Wilson the greater portion of the time, and in recognition of his services to the order the Royal Arch Chapter was named in his honor. This chapter was organized under a dispensation on April 5, 1872, by Henry M. Rhodus, of Belfontaine, R. A. C., No. 25, with the following officers: W. B. Wilson, H. P.; J. H. Rider, E. K.; R. T. Henderson, E. S.; E. A. Kimmel, C. of the H.; J. S. Jordan, P. S.; C. D. Rowe, R. A. C.; W. Gessner, M. 3d V.; L. S. Mitchim, M. 2d V.; H. L. Jones, M. 1st V., and D. Richardson, Guard. The charter was received on October 22, 1872, at which time there were twelve members. Dr. Wilson continued as High Priest until 1885, when he was succeeded by F. W. Pott. The present membership is fifty-nine.

Cape Council No. 20 was opened July 13, 1876, by Allen McDowell. W. B. Wilson, William Bonner, H. A. Pott, J. C. Lewis and H. A. Astholz were introduced as Royal Masters, and at the next meeting given the Select Master's degree. The council worked under a dispensation until October 6, 1876, when a charter was granted. The first officers were as follows: Dr. W. B. Wilson, T. I. M.; E. A. Kimmell, D. I. M.; F. A. Kage, P. C. W.; Henry Pott, C. G.; J. Graham, Treas.; J. H. Rider, Rec.; William Bonney, C. C.; J. C. Maple, Sec., and H. A. Astholz, Steward. The members now number twenty-four.

Cape Lodge No. 62, I. O. O. F., was instituted on October 21, 1853, with J. F. Scheifer, N. G.; Z. M. Lapierre, V. G.; Cyrus Eversole, Sec., and M. Goodchild, Treas. The first members initiated were R. E. McNeely, Amasa Alton, D. E. Y. Rice and Jacob Ingram. The lodge was successfully maintained until 1862, when, owing to the unsettled condition of society, the charter was forfeited. August 6, 1872, a reorganization was effected, with J. M. Cluley as N. G.; W. Bader, V. G.; A. Yeager, Sec., and H. Bader, Treas. Since that time the lodge has been uniformly prosperous, and now numbers forty-three members.

Justi Post No. 173, G. A. R., was organized on June 21, 1884, with thirty-five charter members. The officers were H. A. Astholz, Post Commander; Henry Kopper, Senior Vice Commander; F. A. Kage, Junior Vice Commander; Christ. Allert, Adjutant; Henry Thiessen, Quartermaster; Dr. W. N. Finney, Surgeon; F. W. Pott, Chaplain. The present membership is nearly 180.

Uhland Lodge No. 343, German Order Harugari, was organized in 1881, with fifteen members, of whom William Bleckwendt was Ober Bahn. The membership has now increased to forty. B. Buehrmann is O. B. and Otto Eckhardt, Sec.

An institution of great importance to Cape Girardeau and Southeast Missouri is the Southeast District Agricultural Society, which was first incorporated in 1855, and comprised at that time all the counties in the congressional district. The act of incorporation named Gen. N. W. Watkins as president for the first year, and fixed Cape Girardeau as the place of meeting; at the same time an appropriation of $3,000 was made to assist in defraying expenses. A fair was held the first year, but on a rather limited scale. The next year Judge W. C. Ranney became president of the society, and continued in that position until 1860. Under his management the grounds were improved, and better fairs were held each year. In 1861 the grounds were taken possession of by troops, and all the improvements destroyed. In 1870 an act was passed reviving the society, and in August of that year it was reorganized, with M. M. Kimmel as president. No fair, however, was held until October, 1871. Since that time annual fairs have been successfully held.

Cape Girardeau was incorporated as a city by a special act of the Legislature in 1843. By this act the corporate powers were vested in a mayor and seven councilmen, and at the first election E. Mason was chosen mayor, and W. S. Watson, Thomas J. Rodney, J. Rigby, John Ivers, J. Litton, E. F. Evans and E. B. Cassilly, councilmen. The usual routine of municipal affairs was broken by no very important event until 1869, when the proposition to subscribe $150,000 stock in the Cape Girardeau State Line was submitted to a vote of the people, and carried. Bonds to the amount, bearing 8 per cent interest, were then issued. In 1873 this indebtedness was increased by a donation of $50,000 in 8 per cent bonds to the Southeastern Missouri Normal School.

To pay the interest on this debt soon became burdensome. The railroad, to secure which so large a part of the indebtedness had been incurred, remained uncompleted. The bonds had been purchased by the holders at a heavy discount, and the city had received no benefit from them. It was, therefore, thought by a majority of the taxpayers that a considerable reduction in the railroad debt should be made, and in 1877 an ordinance was passed providing for the refunding and settlement of the debt on a basis of 50 cents on the dollar, in bonds bearing 6 per cent interest, due in fifteen years, and payable at the option of the city. This was afterward modified to permit the mayor to negotiate for the outstanding bonds at the best rates obtainable. By this means this portion of the debt has been refunded and reduced until it now amounts to less than $50,000, and the entire bonded indebtedness to less than $100,000.

The mayors of the city since 1843 have been as follows: G. W. Juden, 1844-45; E. Mason, 1845-46; Thomas Johnston, 1846-49; P. H. Davis, 1849-51; Alfred T. Lacey, 1851-52; Thomas Baldwin, 1852-53; John C. Watson, 1853-54; Amasa Alton, 1854-55; C. T. Gale, 1855-57; John Ivers, Jr., 1857-60; John Albert, 1860-62; George H. Cramer, 1862-67; G. C. Thilenius, 1867-73; Edward D. Engelmann, 1873-77; Leon J. Albert, 1877-79; George H. Cramer, 1879-86; Leon J. Albert, 1886.

Jackson.—As has been stated, Jackson was laid out in 1815.

At that time the surrounding country had become quite compactly settled, and the site of the town itself formed part of an improved plantation, which was purchased from William H. Ashley, who had obtained it by marriage with the daughter of Ezekiel Able. Adjoining on the west was the farm of Col. William Neely, on the north that of Joseph Seawell, and on the south that of William Daugherty. Soon after the sale of lots was begun the town received a considerable population, numbering in 1818 some 300. It was described by a writer at that time as "a considerable village on a hill, with the Kentucky outline of dead trees and huge logs lying on all sides in the fields." The population consisted of a heterogeneous assemblage of people, young men predominating, gathered from almost every State in the Union. There were three or four small stores, a few mechanics' shops, several taverns and boarding-houses, one or two tanyards, a printing office, a frame courthouse, a log jail and a little log schoolhouse.

Society was in a rather chaotic state, and some of the restraint and much of the refinement of older communities were lacking, yet many of the early residents were people of intelligence, whose influence was not bounded by county lines. The following extract from one of the letters of Rev. Timothy Flint, who visited the town in 1819, is to be taken with many grains of allowance, for Mr. Flint was a "Yankee," and Yankees were not then the most popular class in Southern Missouri. It is hinted, too, by those who knew him, that his character was not immaculate, and that his dislike of the people was most heartily reciprocated by them. He says: "Among these people I sojourned and preached more than a year, and my time passed more devoid of interest, or of attachment, or comfort, or utility than in any other part of the country. The people are extremely rough. Their country is a fine range for all species of sectarianism, furnishing the sort of people in abundance who are ignorant, bigoted, and think by devotion to some favored preacher or sect to atone for the want of morals and decency, and everything that appertains to the spirit of Christianity."

The first store in Jackson is said to have been opened by a Mr. Eckhardt, a Virginian, who in about a year sold out to Clifton and Charles Mothershead. They remained but a short time. Samuel Cupples, who married a daughter of Judge Thomas, was also one of the first merchants. About 1817 Joseph Frizel, a son-in-law of Col. George F. Bollinger, opened a store on the lot now occupied by H. H. M. Williams, where he continued until his death. David Armour formed a partnership with John Juden, and began business on the opposite corner. They employed Robert Morrison to drive a team to Baltimore for goods, a trip which was accomplished in about three months. George H. Scripps, a brother of Rev. John Scripps, had a store on the lot now occupied by the jail. Nathan Vanhorn and Dr. Thomas Neale, both prominent citizens of Jackson for many years, also opened stores in the early history of the town. The former occupied the lot where Dr. Pace's drug store now is, while the latter did business on the corner of Main Street and the public square. A tanyard in the edge of the town was owned by Col. William McGuire, a popular and influential citizen, and once a member of the Legislature. He came to Jackson from Kentucky in 1818. At about the same time Caleb B. Fylenwider located just west of town, where he had a "stillhouse." He was for several years a judge of the county court, and subsequently became clerk of that court. John Delap had a shop near where Howell's mill now stands, and was engaged in making bells for cattle, sheep and hogs, which were in much demand at that time. The first persons licensed to keep houses of entertainment in Jackson were James Edwards, Thomas Stewart, William Sheppard and John Armstrong. They were succeeded by Samuel Lockhart, John Brown, William Sublett and Ignatius Wathen. Lockhart kept the principal tavern in a log building standing where the Jackson House now is.

The first physicians were Dr. Zenas Priest and Dr. Thomas Neale. The former came from New York about 1807, and for many years was one of the leading physicians of the county. Dr. Neale, who is mentioned above as a merchant, was a Virginian by birth, but came to Jackson from New Madrid. Drs. Gantt, Posey, Slaughter, Ellis and Cannon were also among the early residents of Jackson, but only Dr. Franklin Cannon remained permanently. He was a native of North Carolina, and married a daughter of Gov. Dunklin. He was prominent, both as a physician and citizen, and in 1836 was elected lieutenant-governor on the Democratic ticket. Dr. Edward S. Gantt was an elderly man, who came from Maryland, and after a short residence in Jackson removed to Alabama.

Among the other early residents of the town may be mentioned Louis Painter, a saddler; John Glasscock and Samuel Mitchell, blacksmiths; Edward Criddle, a hatter; William Surrell, a cabinet maker; Scarlet Glasscock, a carpenter; William Hand, a tanner; C. G. Houts and E. De Lashmutt, merchants, and Peter R. Garrett, first clerk of the chancery court, and afterward clerk of the county court. There were also several lawyers, who are mentioned elsewhere.

For the first few years Jackson grew quite rapidly, and somewhat retarded the growth of Cape Girardeau, but when steamboats began plying regularly on the Mississippi the superior location of the latter place enabled it to distance its rival. Among the principal merchants of Jackson prior to the Civil War, besides those mentioned, were William T. Graham, Ralph Guild, Charles Welling, H. L. Sloan, John W. Gayle, A. H. Brevard, Jacob Kneibert, George M. Beattie, John Albert & Bro., J. J. Turnbaugh and J. M. McGuire.

Graham began business about 1822 or 1823, but in 1826 sold out to Guild, who displayed the finest stock of goods brought to Jackson up to that time. After several years he returned to New Jersey, his native State.

Mr. Welling came to Jackson in 1831, and for nearly fifty-seven years, with various partners, carried on a business on Main Street, opposite the Jackson House. He is now the postmaster at Jackson.

Brevard & Gayle occupied the building where Hoyt's saloon now is. They were succeeded by Beattie.

In 1841 a third branch of the State Bank was established at Jackson, with A. H. Brevard as president, and Thomas B. English, cashier. In 1844 it reported a capital of $120,000, and a circulation of $93,660. It did a large business until 1853, when it was removed to Cape Girardeau.

At the close of the war Jackson, in population and commercial importance, stood about where it had thirty years before, but since that time there has been a marked improvement. It now contains two large flouring mills, one of which has a capacity of 300 to 400 barrels per day, and gives employment to some seventy-five men. The mercantile interests are represented by the following firms: H. H. M. Williams & Son, Boss & Huffman, B. Weil and Wiggington & Howard, general merchandise; J. H. Schaefer, hardware and groceries; D. T. Pace and H. L. Jones, drugs; Kneibert & Wessel, furniture; Mrs. Ella Dormeyer, Obermiller & Co. and William Wagner, groceries; S. D. Williams, hardware and machinery; H. Frederichs, stationery. In October, 1884, a branch of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad was completed from Allen-ville to Jackson, and now runs two daily trains.

The first printing press in Jackson was set up in 1819, by T. E. Strange, who published the Missouri Herald. He was succeeded by James Russell, who changed the name to the Independent Patriot. It was a medium size, five-column folio, and for a little frontier town was a very creditable paper. Mr. Russell sold the office to William Johnson, who published the Jackson Mercury and Cape Girardeau Farmer. He continued it until March, 1831, when he sold out to G. W. Davis and R. W. Renfro, who, three years later, removed the press and office material to Rushville, Ill. Under their management the paper was known as the Jackson Eagle. About that time the Southern Democrat was removed from Cape Girardeau to Jackson, and was edited and published by Robert Brown until January, 1845. It was a six-column folio, and was a strong advocate of democracy. Its successor was The Review, also a democratic sheet, published by Niedner & McFerron. The next newspaper established was the Southern Democrat, the first number of which appeared on December 21, 1849. Its name implies its politics. Its motto was, "The Constitution in its purity—the bulwark of American liberty." It was edited and published by J. W. Limbaugh, until his death in 1852. The name was then changed to the Jeffersonian, and as such was published until November, 1853, when it was succeeded by the Jackson Courier, Joel Wilkinson, editor and proprietor. This was the last newspaper published at Jackson prior to the Civil War.

The Missouri Cash-Book was established in 1871, the first number appearing on August 4, 1871. It was founded by W. L. Malone, who continued its publication until June, 1875. It was then conducted by the Cash-Book Publishing and Printing Company until the following November, when it was purchased by D. D. Hampton, who died one year later. It was then published by A. S. Coker and Coker & Honey until January, 1882, at which time F. A. McGuire purchased Coker's interest. In June, 1883, McGuire became the sole proprietor, and the Cash-Book has since been under his management.

On March 11, 1886, Rev. Fred. Kies began the publication of the Deutscher Volks Freund, a weekly newspaper printed in the German language, which he has successfully continued.

Jackson has twice suffered severely from epidemics of cholera. It first made its appearance in the county in June, 1833, in a family living about five miles south of the town, and spread rapidly northward, exciting terror and dismay. Drs. Cannon, Priest and Davis worked incessantly, but were powerless to stay the progress of the dread disease. It attacked the family of Col. Alexander Buckner, and soon himself, wife and two servants were cold in death. Altogether the deaths numbered 128. There were a few cases in 1849, but only one death resulted. On June 10, 1852, a case of cholera was declared to exist in a house near the jail, which then stood on the public square; thence it spread quickly through the town, baffling the best skill of the physicians. Before the third week nearly every person able to do so had fled, scarcely enough remaining to care for the sick and bury the dead.

The following secret societies in the place are well sustained: Acacia Lodge No. 95, A. F. & A. M., was chartered by the Grand Lodge on December 13, 1847, with the following officers and members: George M. Beattie, W. M.; Edward Criddle, S. W.; James McClean, J. W.; Samuel A. Hill, S. D.; W. C. Ranney, Sec.; William E. McGuire, Tyler; W. W. Gitt, N. W. Watkins and R. H. Lawton. At the first meeting petitions were received from A. T. Search, Andrew Summers, and Jason Watson, all of whom were received into the lodge. Meetings were held in the second story of a brick building on Main Street, owned by Dr. Neale. For the first two or three years the lodge was very prosperous. It then led a somewhat precarious existence until 1858, when it was disbanded. The Worshipful Masters during its existence were George W. Ferguson, 1848-49; A. T. Search, 1849-50; G. Dennison, 1850-51; George M. Beattie, 1851-54; William E. McGuire, 1854-55, and George M. Beattie, 1855-58.

On February 17, 1872, Excelsior Lodge No. 441, A. F. & A. M., was organized under a dispensation issued to N. C. Harrison, W. M.; James F. Edwards, S. W.; and Leo Russell, J. W. At the first meeting Jacob Tobler was installed as Secretary; John V. Priest, Treasurer; C. H. Friedrichs, S. D.; J. P. Isbell, J. D.; and F. M. Williams, Tyler. A charter was granted October 16, 1872, and the lodge entered upon a prosperous career. On August 7, 1879, the corner-stone of a large, two-story masonic hall was laid with appropriate ceremonies, attended by many members of the Grand Lodge and delegations from Marble Hill and Lutesville lodges. The building was completed and occupied in January, 1880.

An Odd Fellows lodge was in existence in Jackson some time prior to the Civil War, but no record of it can now be found. The present lodge, Sylvan Lodge No. 379, I. O. O. F., was chartered May 23, 1875, and J. H. Schaefer was elected the first Noble Grand. The membership has never been large, and now numbers about twenty-five.

Jackson Lodge No. 138, A. O. U. W., was chartered June 11, 1879, with the following officers: B. F. Wiggington, P. M. W.; A. S. Coker, M. W.; Henry Boss, G. F.; John Hart, O.; H. W. Recorder, Recorder; James W. Cannon, Financier; Charles H. Macke, Receiver; Henry Wagner, G.; Uz. McGuire, I. W.; Henry Scherer, O. W. This lodge has experienced an unusual degree of prosperity, and now owns a large, two-story brick building, in the upper part of which is a well-furnished lodge room. On March 26, 1883, a legion of Select Knights of A. O. U. W. was established, with J. R. Jenkins as Senior Commander.

Major A. B. Carroll Post No. 310, G. A. R., was organized on February 19, 1887, with the following officers and members: J. H. Schaefer, 1st Neb. Inf., P. C.; E. S. Templeton, 29th Mo.

Inf., S. V. C.; D. J. Hamilton, 30th Ill. Inf., J. V. C.; C. H. Hoffmeister, 2d Mo. Inf., Adj.; A. Grotehen, 2d Ill. Artillery, Q. M.; A. Obermiller, 82d Ill. Inf., Surgeon; T. C. Moss, 60th Ill., Chaplain; W. A. Campbell, 29th Mo. Inf., O. of D.; Adam Sander, 1st Mo. Inf., O. of G.; Henry Koehler, 2d Ill. Artillery, S. M.; Thomas Rose, 2d Mo. Artillery, Q. M. S.; Jacob Loos, 29th Mo. Inf.; August Jordan, 2d Ill. Artillery; C. Koehler, 2d Ill. Artillery; Fred Arnfeld, 29th Mo. Inf.; H. B. Sands, 13th Mo. Inf.; Henry Mogler, M. S. M.; D. W. Anderson, 29th Mo. Inf.; Fred. Sternberg, 1st Mo., Engineer; John W. Savers, 5th Cav. M. S. M.; E. Wetherford, 10th Mo. Cav. The post now numbers fifty members.

The first schoolhouse in Jackson was a small, log building erected upon the site of the present school lot soon after the town was established. This lot was conveyed by the commissioners of Jackson, in accordance with a special act of the Territorial Assembly, passed January 30, 1817, to Joseph McFerron, Zenas Priest, Thomas Neale, Joseph Seawell and Thomas Stewart, trustees appointed by the act. Three years later Jackson Academy was incorporated, with David Armour, Joseph Frizel, Dr. Thomas Neale, V. B. De Lashmutt, and William Surrell. No action toward putting this institution into operation seems to have been taken by these trustees, and the charter was allowed to lapse. Meanwhile there were private subscription schools, of various degrees of excellence. The first grammar school was taught by Henry Sanford, afterward, for thirty years, clerk of the circuit court. Dr. Barr was another early teacher. Primary schools were taught by Mrs. John Scripps, Mrs. Edward Criddle, Mrs. Wathen and Miss Rhoda Ranney.

In the latter part of the thirties a two-story brick building was erected, and in January, 1839, Jackson Academy was again incorporated, with P. R. Garrett, Edward Criddle, Nathan Vanhorn, John Martin, Johnson Ranney, Charles W. Welling and N. W. Watkins as the first board of trustees. J. G. Gardiner was installed as principal, with Miss Elmira Gregory, assistant. Under Mr. Gardiner's management the school became one of the leading educational institutions in this portion of the State. He remained for five or six years, and was succeeded by D. E. Y.

Rice. From that time until the Civil War the changes in teachers were numerous, and for a time the academy was conducted under the auspices of the Methodist Church. After the close of the war the school was reopened, but the building and grounds were soon transferred to the trustees of the public schools.

The public schools of Jackson were established in 1867. Charles Welling, Jacob Kneibert, Jacob Tobler, James W. Cannon, Charles M. Slack and C. H. Friedrichs composed the first board of directors, or trustees. They met on August 20, 1867, and elected Charles Welling, president, and J. W. Cannon, secretary. James Alderson was employed as principal teacher, and the schools were opened in the following September. The next year Dr. A. W. Millster was elected principal, and Margaret A. Goode and Rev. Fred. Kies, assistants. In 1870 a colored school was established. The white scholars were taught in the old academy building until 1881, when it was determined to erect a new building. The contract was at once let, and in January, 1882, the present substantial and commodious brick building was completed. It is two stories high, with a basement, and contains six schoolrooms.

Five teachers are now employed in the white schools and one in the colored school. The following is a list of the superintendents of the schools since their organization: James Alderson, 1867-68; A. W. Millster, 1868-69; Rev. James Reid, 1869-71; James Barkley, 1871-72; M. Barkley, 1872-74; A. S. Coker, 1874-75; J. A. H. Francis, 1875-76; A. S. Coker, 1876 to January, 1877; A. R. Byrd, 1877-79; H. D. Walker, 1879-81; A. S. Coker, 1881-82; James A. Brooks, 1882-84; T. M. Wilson, 1884.

Jackson was first incorporated by the county court in April, 1819, when an order was made defining the limits of the town, and appointing William G. Gantt and Joel Blount to hold an election for trustees. No other mention is found of this incorporation until 1828, when Nathan Vanhorn, Franklin Cannon, G. W. Davis and Edward Criddle met and organized by electing Nathan Vanhorn, chairman, and C. S. Thomas, clerk. Several ordinances were passed, and rules for the government of the board adopted, but no more meetings were held until 1831, when George W. Juden was made clerk, and Welton O'Bannon, town constable. From that time until 1847 only one meeting was held. The incorporation was then revived, and N. W. Watkins, Charles Wellington, A. H. Brevard, Jason Watson and Cyrus Walker elected trustees. The board then met quite regularly until 1859, when a special charter was granted by the Legislature. The first board of trustees elected under this act was composed of Thomas B. English, John W. McGuire, Jacob Kneibert and Charles Litterer. With the exception of four years, during the war, the municipal government was maintained under this charter until December, 1884, when, by popular vote, it was decided to incorporate Jackson as a city of the fourth class. The first election for officers under the new government was held on April 7, 1885. J. W. Limbaugh was elected mayor, and A. Hoffman, J. V. Priest, J. H. Schaefer, and C. H. Macke, aldermen. Mr. Limbaugh continued mayor until 1887, when he was succeeded by R. P. Wilson.

Oak Ridge.—There are several villages of more or less importance in Cape Girardeau County. One of the largest is Oak Ridge, which was settled about 1852. It is situated in Apple Creek Township, about ten miles northwest of Jackson. It has a population of about 300. Mystic Tie Lodge No. 221, A. F. & A. M., meets here. It was chartered May 30, 1861, with G. C. Pepper, W. M.; Henry Bruhl, S. W.; Morris Hatler, J. W., and Charles F. Schneider, Secretary. Its present membership is thirty-five. Oak Ridge Lodge No. 228, A. O. U. W., was chartered September 10, 1881, with J. T. Ford, P. M. W.; O. S. Harris, M. W.; W. K. Hart, Foreman; G. D. Statler, Recorder; James Day, Receiver; Dr. J. H. Walker, O.; James Davenport, Financier; Wm. L. Horn, G.; A. C. Ford, I. W.; H. Goodwin, O. W. The lodge is now in a highly prosperous condition, with a membership of fifty-seven. There are also three church organizations, which are mentioned elsewhere.

Appleton, situated on Apple Creek, north of Oak Ridge, was settled in 1824, by John McLane and John Scholtz. The first store was opened by Kimmel & Taylor in 1829. They were succeeded at a later date by George Clodfelter and W. H. McLane. A mill was built by Alfred McLane in the early history of the town. The village acquired a considerable population, and was an active business point during the "fifties," but it has now declined somewhat.

Pocahontas was settled about 1856, and was laid out as a village in 1861. It has a Masonic lodge—Wilson Lodge No. 191, which was organized on August 17, 1878, from members from Mystic Tie Lodge, of Oak Ridge. The officers were R. T. Henderson, W. M.; J. L. Morton, S. W.; E. L. Hope, J. W.; T. A. Wilson, Treasurer, and L. N. Torrence, Secretary. The lodge is now in a very prosperous condition, and owns a good hall.

Shawneetown was established soon after the war, at which time a large woolen mill was erected. This mill has since been in operation, and constitutes the leading industry of the village. Shawneetown Lodge No. 379, A. O. U. W., was organized March 31, 1887, with David E. Hope, P. M. W.; Eli Abernathy, M. W.; E. O. Cowan, O.; E. L. Hope, Financier; C. C. Hines, Foreman; L. N. Torrence, Recorder; H. C. McCain, Receiver, and E. H. Neuenhahn, Guide. There are sixteen members, and the lodge is financially in good condition.

Burfordsville is located at the site of Bollinger's Mill, on Whitewater. It has a mill, a store or two, a Baptist Church recently organized, and a lodge of A. O. U. W. The last was chartered February 15, 1887, with S. R. Buford, P. M. W., and G. W. Bast, M. W., and now has a membership of thirty-two. There is also a lodge at Gravel Hill, which was organized January 16, 1882, with S. J. Lassley, P. M. W., and W. K. Chandler, M. W.

Allenville, at the junction of the Jackson branch with the Belmont branch of the Iron Mountain Railroad, was laid out in 1869, and Gordonville, a station on the Jackson branch, in 1878. Both are small villages.

Millersville is a little village in White Water Township, containing two churches—Baptist and Methodist—and two lodges. West View Lodge No. 103, F. & A. M. was chartered June 2, 1866, with John J. Miller, W. M.; W. C. Talley, S. W.; J. R. Talley, J. W., and Levi Welty, Secretary and Treasurer. It was organized under a dispensation on May 26, 1865. The present membership is twenty-nine. Millersville Lodge No. 232, A. O. U. W., received its charter October 21, 1881. N. P. Stearns was

P. M. W.; J. T. Wood, M. W.; J. W. Miller, Foreman; J. H. Miller, Overseer; John R. Hendricks, Recorder; David Hendricks, Financier; G. G. Harp, Receiver.

New Madrid.—New Madrid, la Nouvelle Madrid, as it was known to our grandparents, was laid out by Pierre Foucher, the first commandant, in 1789. It occupied an irregular piece of ground lying between Bayou St. John and Bayou Desroches, or "Coulee Cipriere," and fronted the river on the southeast. The streets were laid off perpendicular to the river or parallel with it, and were consequently at an angle of about forty-five degrees from a meridian line. Beginning on the northwest and going toward the river the streets were named as follows: Ste. Mary, St. Guillaume, St. Ignace, D'Espagne, Dauphine, Royale, St. Joseph, St. Charles, St. Antoine, St. Ramor. In the southwestern part of the town there were several short streets extending between the river and Bayou Desroches, which streams run nearly parallel for a considerable distance. Beginning on the southwest there were De Portell, Roderique, St. Bernard, Ste. Isabella, St. Philip, St. Martin, St. Jean Baptiste and Ste. Etienne. Next to these, and running back the full length of the town, were St. Pierre, Ste. Eulalie, St. Louis, St. Narcisse, St. Andre, St. Laurent and St. Roch. There were also several irregular streets, Ste. Catherine, Ste. Felicite and Ste. Marguerite. The lots were laid off to contain one arpent each. On an open space on the river front was built Fort Celeste. A short distance to the northeast of the fort was a slough, "Terrein Mowille," which during high water was connected with Bayou St. John by an arm of the latter, thus making the northeast part of the town an island. To the north of the town was a branch of Bayou St. John, called Bayou St. Thomas, which has now entirely disappeared.

Since the settlement of the town the Mississippi has made annual encroachments upon it, sometimes greater, sometimes less, but always considerable, until now the original site lies, perhaps, a mile from the bank upon the Kentucky side. Addition after addition has been made only to be swallowed up. The old fort, the queer old French houses, the old church and convent, the old cemetery, la grand cole, all the old landmarks, with their sacred memories, have succumbed one by one to the devouring current, and the New Madrid of to-day has nothing about it that would suggest its origin.

Most of the first residents of the town have been mentioned in another chapter. The greater portion of the business was in the hands of Richard J. Waters until his death. Joseph Michel came from Bonne Terre, La., soon after the town was established, and opened a store. He continued until his death, which occurred in 1811. He was then succeeded by his nephew, Matteo Bogliolo, who came from Marseilles, France, and continued in business for many years. In 1793 B. Tardiveau, Louis Vandenbenden, Pierre Audrain and two others formed a company to supply the garrisons of Upper Louisiana with flour, bread and other provisions. They built two mills on Bayou St. Thomas, north of the town, on what became known as Prairie du Moulin (Mill Prairie). They operated extensively. They had an agent at Pittsburgh to buy wheat, and had mills or bakeries in Ste. Genevieve. In a few years the company became insolvent, and a long litigation ensued, a record of which is at New Madrid. In 1804 Robert G. Watson, for half a century one of the leading merchants of the town, arrived in New Madrid. He was born in Inverness, Scotland, and, with an elder brother, came to America in 1802. He remained with an uncle in Detroit for about a year, and then set out for New Madrid to take charge of a business established by his uncle and managed by Gabriel Hunot. He bought large quantities of furs, and once each year made a trip with them to Detroit, going up the Ohio to the Wabash, up the Wabash to Little River, up Little River as far as it is navigable, then by land to the Maumee at Fort Wayne, and thence by river and lake to his destination. At that time Detroit was the chief market for furs, as New Orleans was for produce.

In November, 1808, New Madrid was incorporated with the following metes and bounds: "Beginning at the bend formed by the junction of the Bayou St. Thomas and Bayou St. John, to the upper corner of the land claimed by John Lavallee; thence on a southeast course, running on the most westwardly line of John Lavallee's tract, on a course toward Lake Ste. Marie, and on to said lake, to exclude the plantation belonging to the heirs of John B. Barsaloux; thence down said lake to its junction with Bayou St. Martin (Cipriere); thence down said bayou to the Mississippi; thence up the Mississippi to the beginning." But although it was thus dignified by an incorporation, Mr. Bradbury, the scientific explorer, who visited New Madrid in 1811, says of it: "I was much disappointed in this place, as I found only a few straggling houses situated round a plain of from 200 to 300 acres in extent. There are only two stores, and those very indifferently furnished."

It is not probable that the town improved very much until after 1822. In that year the seat of justice was permanently located, and the county commissioners laid out an addition to the place. At that time there were three merchants licensed to sell goods at New Madrid: Robert G. Watson, Robert McCoy and Matteo Bogliolo. The next year George G. Alford opened a store, and continued in business until about 1840, when he went to Texas. These merchants were succeeded in the "forties" by H. D. Maulsby, Napoleon Lesieur, B. Powell, R. J. Waters & Samuel Allen, W. B. Harper and Thomas Dow, and from a Missouri directory of 1856 the following list of merchants is taken: Allen & Waters, R. A. Hatcher & Co., Hunter & Watson, F. V. Lesieur, T. J. O. Morrison, Warrington & Purnell, and A. Audibert. The first physician in New Madrid was Samuel Dorsey. He was succeeded by Dr. Robert D. Dawson, a prominent citizen and a skillful physician. Among the other members of the profession, resident at New Madrid prior to the war, were Drs. Martin, Bennett, Kirkwood, Horrell, Smith and Lindsay, and W. W. Waters.

The first newspaper published in New Madrid was the Gazette, established in 1846 by John T. Scott, a lawyer who came from West Tennessee. He was succeeded in 1850 by a Mr. Barber, who, in about one year, sold out to Hopkins & Nash. They continued the publication until 1854, when they were succeeded by John C. Underwood, who changed the name to the Times, which he published until the Civil War. After the close of the war Albert O. Allen began the publication of the Record, which he has since owned with the exception of a few months, when it was under the control of Frank Jones. In 1886 Mr. Allen was appointed swamp land commissioner, and since that time the paper has been edited by E. A. Wright.

A newspaper known as the Chronicle was published by Masterson & Mulkey for about eighteen months, about 1872.

New Madrid was re-incorporated by the county court in 1834, with William Pierrepont, George G. Alford, Dr. Robert D. Dawson, Ashael Smith and Alphonse Delaroderie as trustees. How long this incorporation was maintained is not known, but in 1868 the county court again made an order incorporating the town, and appointed L. A. Waters, James H. Howard, L. J. Harris, John E. Powell and John A. Mott, trustees. In April, 1878, New Madrid received a charter as a city of the fourth class, and the municipal government was organized, with John W. Brownell as mayor, and H. C. Latham, T. H. Digges, John E. Powell and F. Kopp, aldermen.

The present business interests of New Madrid are represented by the following firms and individuals: Howard & Block, Joseph Weigle, S. Levi and Mann Bros., general merchandise; Gus. V. Lesieur and Sheehy & Cooke, groceries; H. C. Latham, M. G. Hatcher and Powell & Hummel, drugs; Hunter & Mathewson and — Michaels, furniture; Lilburn Lewis and Parks & Akin, hardware; Leo Jasper, bakery and confectionery; Henry Jasper and T. H. Digges, warehouse and commission men. Parks & Akin are also extensively engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements, especially plows. They have the largest establishment of this kind in Southeast Missouri. Henry Broden and Henry Digges own and operate a large corn mill, and Zenas G. Lewis a cotton-gin.

Point Pleasant.—The old village of Point Pleasant was founded in 1815 by Francois Lesieur, the first settler of "L'anse a la graisse" and of "La Petite Prairie." He opened a store, which he conducted in partnership with his son Godfrey until his death in 1826. A hotel and store were also kept at this place by John Woodward. The formation of a sand bar prevented the landing of steamboats, and the business was transferred to the present town, about one mile below the original site. Here a wood yard had been established by Alphonse Delaroderie in 1817. The new town was laid off in 1846 by William Summers. The first buildings erected were warehouses, built by John Woodward and Pleasant Bishop. John J. Coe was the first merchant. The town is now a pleasant village of about 200 inhabitants. It at one time had a charter, with a board of trustees, but the incorporation has been allowed to lapse.

Portageville is a little village in the extreme south end of the county. The first store was opened here about 1848, by Edward Meatt and Charles Davis, who, in 1851, were succeeded by Robert G. Franklin. There are now a general store, drug store, grocery and restaurant, a cotton gin and grist mill.

Farmington was laid out in 1822, upon fifty-two acres of land donated to St. Francois County by David Murphy. The commissioners appointed to locate the seat of justice were Henry Poston, John Andrews, William Shaw, Mark Dent and William Alexander. The survey was made by Henry Poston. The first store was opened by John D. Peers in 1823, in a small log building standing on the west side of the public square. Subsequently he removed to the east side, where the bank now is, and in 1833 formed a partnership with M. P. Cayce. The building vacated by him was occupied by Joseph Bogy, Jr., who came from Ste. Genevieve to Farmington in 1826. At about the same time Mr. Day, a saddler, built the house where Mrs. Peers now lives, while on the opposite side of the street Isaac Mitchell erected a building which was occupied by John Boyce as a hotel. In 1836 Farmington was incorporated by an order of the county court, and John D. Peers, M. P. Cayce, Ed. C. Sebastian, William O. Ross and Nicholas L. Fleming were appointed the first board of trustees. The progress of the town was not rapid, and its history prior to the Civil War is the same as that of other small county seat villages. The building of the Ste. Genevieve & Pilot Knob Plank Road added something to its prosperity, but it had a population of less than 500 in 1860. Among the business men of the "fifties" may be mentioned M. P. Cayce, S. E. Douthitt & Son, Arnold & Rucker and V. C. Peers & Co. In 1856 M. P. Cayce and S. E. Douthitt built a grist mill, which, remodeled and enlarged, is now known as the Farmington Roller Mills. It was operated in connection with a carding machine. When the Belmont branch of the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad was built the county refused to vote a subscription of stock, and in retaliation the road was located as far as possible from Farmington—about two and one-half miles. It was then thought that the town would be greatly injured, and that the business would all be transferred to De Lassus, but this has not proven true, and Farmington has since been more prosperous than ever before. The following is a directory of the present business interests: Dalton & Marks, J. Krieger, S. S. Smith, Cole & Hockaday, M. Rosenthal, Simon Jacobson, Thomas Williams, Thomas Taff and Louis Wiley, general merchandise; Orten & Davis, F. E. Klein & Co., J. H. Waide and S. C. Gossom, groceries; J. R. McCormick, Brad. Robinson, A. Rucker and A. Parkhurst, drugs; J. Helber, hardware and stoves; George Eisenberg and McCoun & Marks, harness; Robert Tetley, jewelry and musical instruments; P. Lorenz, furnishing goods; Frank Gersie, merchant tailor; C. E. Barroll, stationery and job printing; Sam Peltz, cigar factory; Theodore Rottger, bakery; Mrs. A. Rucker, Mary Dolan and the Misses Ferguson, millinery; Finley & Spaugh and Henry Morris, marble works; Lang & Bro., dealers in lumber and agricultural implements, and proprietors of sawmill and blacksmith and wagon shop; Giessing Bros., proprietors of the Farmington Roller Mill; D. J. Doughty, proprietor of planing mill; Farmers' Alliance custom mill; John Isenman & Co., blacksmith and wagon shop.

In 1887 a bank was opened with A. Parkhurst as president, and M. P. Cayce, cashier. It has a capital stock of $15,000, and is doing a good business.

In April, 1860, Nichol, Crowell & Shuck began the publication of The Southern Missouri Argus, in support of the Douglas Democracy. Nichol was from Kentucky, Crowell from Massachusetts, and Shuck, a native of Missouri. Early the next year they sold out to Joseph J. Brady, who continued the publication as the Missouri Argus, until about 1865, when he transferred it to his sons, J. J. Brady, Jr., and S. B. Brady. A year or two later they changed the name to the Farmington Herald, and in 1872 removed it to De Soto. In 1871 Wash. Hughes began the publication at Libertyville of the New Era which he soon removed to Farmington, where he continued it until about 1876. He then sold to George W. Harrington, who, four or five years later, removed to Marble Hill. The Far-ington Times was established by C. E. Ware and I. H. Rodehaver, in 1872, and conducted by them until about 1875, after which for a year or two it was under the management of R. H. Sylvester. In January, 1879, T. D. Fisher, became the editor, and since 1881 has also been the proprietor. The Farmington News was established by T. P. Pigg in 1884, and is still conducted by him. In March, 1886, Isaac Rodehaver began the publication of the St. Francois County Democrat, as a Democratic paper, but in November of the same year it was purchased by John Hartshorn, and has since been published in the interest of the Republican party.

Farmington Lodge No. 132, A. F. & A. M., was organized on November 3, 1849, but did not receive a charter until May 11, 1851. The first officers were William Vance, W. M.; Elisha Arnold, S. W.; Charles Meyers, J. W.; John Cobb, secretary; H. W. Crow, treasurer; J. C. Metcalf, S. D.; M. Doughty, J. D.; and Elizman Basey, Tyler.

At the first regular election, which was held on June 7, 1851, Jesse P. Davis was elected Worshipful Master. He was succeeded by L. T. Pim in 1852, Elisha Arnold in 1854, E. W. Prewitt in 1855, J. J. Brady in 1857, and W. R. Taylor in 1858. The lodge did not suspend during the war, and has had a continuous existence since its organization. The present membership is sixty-six.

St. Francois Lodge No. 48, I. O. O. F., was instituted on October 10, 1850, with V. C. Peers, H. T. Bailey, John Hunter, Gilbert Nettleton and Rosamon Pratte as charter members. They rented a room over Peers' store until 1867, when they purchased the three-story frame building which they still own. The lodge is one of the strongest in this State, having a membership of ninety-seven.

Crystal Lodge No. 50, K. of P., was chartered on October 17, 1878, with the following members: J. W. and P. C. Brady, R. R. Highley, N. E. Littlefield, E. C. McCormick, J. B. O'Bannon, A. Parkhurst, A. J. Prosser, R. Perkins, S. A. Rudy, M. Rosenthal, R. H. Sylvester, Jr., G. J. Swank, G. H. Smith, T. Stone, W. H. Wonderly, A. F. H. Wonderly and W. F. Wonderly.

Farmington Lodge No. 1995, K. of H., was chartered on August 19, 1880, with thirty-six members.

BONNE TERRE, MO.

Farmington Lodge No. 216, A. O. U. W., was established on April 6, 1881, with Silas S. Smith as P. M. W.; John G. Terrill, M. W.; Jesse R. Pratte, G. F.; D. J. Doughty, O.; J. C. Alexander, Recorder; L. K. Evans, Financier; Thomas Williams, Receiver; Peter A. Benham, G.; W. D. Pratte, I. W.; T. J. Simms, O. W. The present membership is over forty.

The St. Francois Agricultural and Mechanical Association was incorporated in 1872, and has since been in successful operation. The present officers are J. C. Alexander, president; Reinhardt Lang, treasurer, and William M. Harlan, secretary. The fair grounds consist of a beautiful grove of twenty acres, just west of the town, and are supplied with sheds, halls, an amphitheater and other buildings.

The educational facilities of Farmington are unexcelled. Besides an excellent system of public schools there are three colleges. The public school system was established about 1870, when a two-story frame building was erected and teachers employed. The schools grew in favor and increased in number until 1884, when it became necessary to erect another building. An appropriation of $8,000 was made by a vote of the taxpayers in February, 1884, and a large brick house was completed during the following summer. There are now employed six teachers in the white schools, and one in the colored school.

Carleton Institute is under the patronage of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It was founded by Miss E. A. Carleton, eight miles north of Farmington, and was opened for the admission of pupils in April, 1854. In 1859 it was incorporated, with university privileges, by an act of the Legislature. In 1878 the institute was removed to Farmington, when a four-story brick building, containing about thirty rooms, was erected on attractive grounds of about sixteen acres, overlooking the town. The school was opened in the new building on December 2, 1878, and so great was its progress that in 1884 an addition fifty-seven feet long and four stories high was made to the main building. It contains the chapel, library, museum, laboratory and other rooms, and is called the Henry Annex, in honor of the late Henry Carleton. The management of the institution in all its departments is excellent, and a remarkable fact connected with it is that during a period of thirty-four years but one death has occurred in the school.

Farmington College, an institution under the control of the Baptists of Franklin Association, was opened on September 13, 1886, with E. F. Jennings as president. The college is the successor of a school established in 1883 by J. S. Gashwiler, who, in 1884, erected a two-story brick building. He became involved in debt, and transferred the property to Franklin Association. Under the present management the institution has made rapid progress, and is gaining an enviable reputation.

Elmwood Seminary and Presbyterian Normal School for young ladies was opened in 1886, with A. W. Wilson as principal. It is conducted under the auspices of the presbyteries of St. Louis and Potosi. No school building has yet been erected, but the lecture room of the church is used for a class room. Valuable property has been purchased, upon which it is proposed to erect suitable buildings as soon as sufficient funds are procured. This institution is looked upon as the revival of Elmwood Academy, which was established early in the "forties" by M. P. Cayce.

Bonne Terre is a mining town situated in the northern part of St. Francois County, about thirteen miles northwesterly from the county seat. It was, until after the close of the Rebellion, a small hamlet, or mining camp, of perhaps half a dozen miners' shanties. During the early mining done at this place, which was then a French settlement, the name "bonne terre" was given by the miners to the mine, owing to the fact that a great deal of lead ore was found disseminated in small particles through the clay near the surface of the ground, and these deposits, from which the mineral was obtained by carting the earth to the creek and washing out the clay, were called "bonne terre," meaning "good earth," to distinguish them from the poor clay adjacent. The name attached itself to the "diggings," and in course of time a postoffice was established in the vicinity to which the same name was given, and when, many years later, a town began to spring up, the postoffice was moved to town, name and all, and being thought a very good, as well as a significant name, the town was christened Bonne Terre.

In 1864 the mine, which up to this time had been operated in a very primitive manner, passed into the hands of a company of Eastern gentlemen, who organized under the name of the St. Joseph Lead Company, and at once began in a vigorous and systematic manner to develop their property. As the mine was opened, and its great value became more and more apparent, the company from time to time enlarged the business, necessitating the employment of more men; and thus a considerable village grew up around the works.

Early in the "eighties" the company, foreseeing the necessity for providing more permanently for the growing wants of the place, planted a town, laying it off in large lots, with wide streets, giving long leases for residence purposes, but restricting business privileges to such lines of business as they did not wish to carry. From this time forward the town began to assume "shape and form," but, owing to the restrictions on business imposed by the company, other villages sprang up on lands adjacent, but outside of the company's claim, until now Bonne Terre consists of the original town together with the villages of Moontown, Settleton, Bogytown, Hilltown and Elvinsville, with a total population of near 4,000 persons.

In the way of educational facilities the town has a well-conducted select school belonging to St. Joseph's (Catholic) Church and four public schools—three white and one colored. These are kept open eight months in the year, and ten teachers are employed. The school population is about 1,100.

The Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and A. O. U. W. have strong organizations here, each of the orders named owning their own hall or lodge room.

There are two newspapers—the Register, established in 1885, J. M. Kirkpatrick, editor, and the Critic, in 1887, John La Chance, editor. The former is independent, though leaning to the principles of Democracy, and strongly favors prohibition.

In February, 1883, and again in March, 1885, the place had a serious visitation from fire, the extensive works of the St. Joe Company having been laid in ashes by the first, and those of the Desloge Company by the second. The town having been entirely supported, either directly or indirectly, by these two works, the effect of the enforced suspension of business was severely felt for the time being. But, notwithstanding these set-backs, Bonne Terre has probably grown more within the ten years preceding 1888 than any other town in Southeast Missouri.

Bismarck was laid out in 1868, at the intersection of the Belmont branch with the main line of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway, by C. T. Manter, P. R. Van Frank, J. H. Morley and E. H. Cordell. It now has a population of about 400, contains several hotels and stores and a large flouring-mill. It was incorporated by the county court in June, 1877, with William H. Gulliver, Benjamin Schach, C. C. Grider, George H. Kelly and A. A. Tegmeyer as trustees. This incorporation, however, was abolished four years later.

De Lassus was laid off by A. D. De Lassus in October, 1869. It is the shipping point for Farmington and Doe Run. It contains two stores and a hotel.

Knob Lick is a station on the Belmont branch of the Iron Mountain Railroad, and is the principal shipping place for the granite quarries in the south part of St. Francois County.

Libertyville is a village in the midst of what is known as Cook's settlement, and has a population of about 150. It contains two general stores, two blacksmith shops, a large roller flouring-mill, a church and a schoolhouse. It is one of the oldest communities in the county.

Doe Run is one of the most rapidly growing towns in Missouri. Two years ago where it now stands there was nothing but pastures and orchards; now it is a town of 1,000 or more inhabitants. It has four or five stores, a church, a lodge of I. O. O. F. and of A. O. U. W., and all the other institutions of a growing town.

Iron Mountain is a mining town situated on the tract owned by the Iron Mountain Company. It contains three churches, a public and select school, a large hotel, and an extensive general store conducted by the company.

Fredericktown.—The village of St. Michaels, of which Fredericktown is the successor, was established about 1802 by several French families that had received grants of land in the vicinity. It consisted of a little cluster of log houses, some twelve or fifteen in number, and a store kept by Charles F. Goin. When, in June, 1814, the Saline and Castor Creeks overflowed their banks, and drove the inhabitants out, some of the families refused to return, and established what was known as the new village, one and one-half miles north of St. Michaels, where in 1820 a church was built. In 1819 Fredericktown was laid off on the Saline, opposite St. Michaels, on land owned by Nathaniel Cook, by Theodore F. Tong, John Burdett, Joseph Bennett and Henry Whitener, commissioners appointed for that purpose. It was named in honor of George Frederick Bollinger, of Cape Girardeau County. The first stores were opened by S. A. Guignon, S. B. Pratte, and Moses and Caleb Cox. The former occupied a house just below where Dr. Nifong's office now is, and the latter a house standing on the site of W. L. Cohen's residence. Zenas Smith, Henry Janis & Co. and John B. Bossier were merchants there at a little later date. A hotel was opened by Moses Baird, where Judge Allen now lives. In 1827 the town was incorporated with Moses Cox, Thomas Mosely, Jr., Zenas Smith, Moses Baird and S. A. Guignon as the first board of trustees. The town grew slowly, but did not change very much until after the completion of the railroad. In a list of the business men of the "fifties" are found S. A. Guignon, Gregoire & Leclere, William Cox, George Janis, T. S. Nifong, H. N. Tong and Henry Wernecke.

In 1847 a newspaper called the Espial was established by James Lindsay, and is said to have been the first Free Soil paper in the State. It was published but a short time. About 1855 W. H. Booth began the publication of the Fredericktown Journal, which he continued until September, 1861. In 1866 the Conservative was established by S. Henry Smith. He sold the office to Charles E. Barroll, who published the Bee about two years. It was then purchased by E. P. Caruthers, and in 1875 was merged into the Plain Dealer, which was established by William Gosner in 1874. In 1876 W. J. Collier became the editor and proprietor, and continued the publication until 1882, when it passed into the hands of the present owner, O. K. Clardy. The Fredericktown Standard was established by E. D. Anthony in December, 1887. The Jeffersonian, edited by H. M. Williams, the Farmer and Miner, by C. W. Dunifer, and the Clarion, by Perry D. Martin, have each had a brief existence at Fredricktown. A paper called the Advertiser was published at Mine La Motte for a few months in 1877.

During the past ten years Fredericktown has made great progress, both in the number of inhabitants and the character of its buildings. It now covers, not only the original site of Fredericktown, but that of the old village of St. Michaels and all the intervening ground. The following is a business directory of the town: A. & W. Pierce, J. & V. Schlessinger, John E. Clardy, Crow & Buford Bros. and W. L. Cohen, general merchandise; Dr. L. J. Villars and H. Christoph, drugs; L. Riggs & Co. and C. Bengert, hardware; Menteer Bros., Henry Jones and James G. Donnell, groceries; H. W. Schwarner and James McKinney, harness; R. Brooks and E. H. Day, undertakers; L. M. Hebner, marble works; T. N. Horne, wagon and blacksmith shop, and M. De Guire & Co., Liberty Roller Mills.

Marcus Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Fredericktown, was organized on November 25, 1848, with F. L. Sullivan as temporary Worshipful Master. A constitution and by-laws were adopted and several petitions for admission received. One of the rooms in the courthouse was leased, and the following month an organization was effected, with A. Peace as W. M.; F. L. Sullivan, S. W.; D. P. Lanius, J. W.; J. Kemper, S. D.; G. M. Davidson, J. D.; A. C. Lewin, Secretary; R. H. Lane, Treasurer, and J. A. Cain, Tyler. The lodge has since maintained a continuous existence, and is now in a prosperous condition, with a membership of about sixty. The present Worshipful Master is N. B. Allen, who has been a member for nearly forty years, and has served some fourteen or fifteen years in his present office.

Nickel Lodge No. 125, A. O. U. W., received its charter April 30, 1879. The officers were Benjamin Colman, P. M. W.; William Nifong, N. W.; G. W. Lanpher, G. F.; F. R. Newberry, O.; O. K. Clardy, Recorder; John Schulte, Financier; Joseph Schulte, Receiver; B. T. Hartkopf, G.; William Newberry, I. W., and W. H. McClure, O. W. The lodge holds its meetings in Odd Fellows Hall, and is in a very prosperous condition.

Madison Lodge No. 172, I. O. O. F., was chartered May 20, 1868. It is one of the strongest lodges of the order in Southeast Missouri, and in 1887 completed a large brick hall.

Major Hiram Gavitt Post, G. A. R., was established on May 26, 1884, with the following charter members: B. B. Cahoon, R. Albert, Andrew Roth, W. P. McCanns, E. H. Day, K. D. Rhodes, R. Brooks, B. G. Burks, William Stone, John Santhoff, J. M. Rhodes, F. S. Leech, James Holly, Vardy Baldwin, John Sunderman, Samuel Johnson, B. O'Conner and W. J. Alexander.

The present graded school system in Fredericktown was established in 1881, with J. B. Scott as principal teacher. He was succeeded by J. H. Gans, and since 1883 the schools have been under the management of J. L. Frohock. Five teachers are employed in the white schools and one in the colored school.

Marquand, a village on the railroad in the west part of the county, was laid out on land owned by Henry Whitener, in 1869. The first business house was built by John Q. Whitener, who opened a store in partnership with Jacob Lutes. The town was named in honor of W. G. Marquand, who made a donation of $1,000 for a church. There are now three churches, three general stores and a large steam flouring-mill, the latter owned and operated by A. J. Beardsley.

Perryville.—The town of Perryville was located by Robert T. Brown, Joseph Tucker and Thomas Riney, commissioners appointed to fix the seat of justice for Perry County. It was surveyed in 1822, William McLane, Bernard Layton and Bernard Hagan being the chain carriers. The land was donated by Bernard Layton, and consisted of a tract of fifty-one acres. The lots were sold at public auction, the first fifty-three bringing an aggregate of $1,468.25. The first store was opened in a small log house on the north side of the public square by Ferdinand Rozier, Sr., of Ste. Genevieve. A few years later he erected a brick building on the same site, which is still standing, occupied by William Furth as a wareroom. There Ferdinand Rozier, Jr., did business for many years. The next store was opened by Levi Block, succeeded by Avery & Block. About 1840 T. & L. Landry and Bernard Cissell & Co. began business. The former built the house now occupied by Doerr's Hotel. Among the other early residents were John Logan, who had a tanyard in the northwest corner of town; Leonard Fath, a blacksmith; Richard S. Dorsey and Reuben Shelby, physicians; Luther Taylor and Valario Faina, brickmakers and stonecutters, and Frederick C. Hase, clerk of the court. The town was first incorporated in 1831, with the following board of trustees: Clayton D. Abernathy, Luther Taylor, George Killian, William A. Keyte and Dr. Richard S. Dorsey. This corporation was not maintained long, and a second order of incorporation was made by the county court in 1856, when Leon De Lassus, George W. Entler, John Bridgeman, Bernard Cissell and Leonard Fath were appointed trustees. The town improved but little prior to the close of the Civil War, in fact the population was not more than 300 up to that time. It is now not less than 1,000. The business of the town at the present time is represented by the following firms: J. & L. Hooss, Anderson, Hooss & Schindler, William Furth, William P. Faherty, Charles Litsch and Louis Doerr, general merchandise; James Moore and N. E. Farrar, groceries; J. & L. De Lassus and Phillips & Morton, drugs; Kurre & Mischwitz, hardware; Daniel Kline and A. Preuser, harness; Louis Luders and Isaac Kampe, jewelry; J. C. McBride and A. H. Cashion, furniture; Sandler & Bergman, T. & J. Hooss and Faherty & Schindler, agricultural implements; William Furth and R. M. Wilson, bank; M. Biehle, Welcome Flour Mill; Hooss Bros., fruit evaporator; Blechle & Huber, Henry Markwort, William Blechle, Joseph Weixel, William Holtman, John Dewein and Joseph Rosseau, saloons.

The first newspaper published at Perryville was the Perryville Union. It was established in June, 1862, by W. H. Booth, as the Fredericktown Conservative, but after two issues he removed to Perryville, where he continued the publication for twenty years. About 1875 John B. Robinson established the Forum, which, a year or two later, was transferred to a stock company, and in March, 1880, was succeeded by the Perry County Sun, under the editorial management of John B. Holmes. It subsequently absorbed the Union, and is now under the control of John B. Davis. In 1886 the Perryville Chronicle was established by E. H. Elliff.

The principal villages of Perry County are Attenburg, laid out in 1839 and incorporated in 1870; Wittenburg, situated on the Mississippi River at the mouth of Brazeau Creek, incorporated in 1867; Longtown, laid out in 1871, on the Perryville & Jackson Road; Clearyville, laid out in 1871, on the Mississippi River, and Lithium, a health resort, established in 1882 by C. F. Laurence, and incorporated in 1883. There was also a town laid off at the mouth of Apple Creek in 1837, by John Scudder and Andrew Osborne, and called Birmingham, but it existed only upon paper.

Marble Hill.—Immediately after the passage of the act for the organization of Bollinger County, in June, 1851, Thomas Hamilton selected a point near the center of the county and laid off a town, which he named New California. On December 22, of the same year, David Ramsey, Isaac Shepherd and J. J. Daugherty, commissioners appointed to locate the seat of justice for Bollinger County, laid off a town including New California, which they named Dallas. Of the site of the new town seventeen acres were owned by Joseph Baker, eleven acres by Jacob Lutes, ten acres by Daniel Crader, and twelve and one-half acres by Thomas Hamilton. John C. Whybark had been carrying on a store about one-fourth of a mile east of the town, and he now removed it to the east side of the public square. At about the same time a second store was opened by William Grimsley, and at a little later date Ed. Wilson and George Clippard engaged in business. A hotel was opened by Calvin Cook where Bohnsach's hardware store now is. About the close of the war the name of the town was changed to Marble Hill, and an order of incorporation made by the county court, appointing Levi E. Whybark, F. J. Williams, J. J. Conrad, Lindsay Murdoch and J. J. Duffy a board of trustees. Since the completion of the railroad and the building of Lutesville, Marble Hill has improved but little. The business interests of the present are presented by Robert Drum and H. C. Scholl, general merchandise; L. M. Whitmer and August Sanders, drugs; Henry Elfrank, saddler; A. Mayer & Co., groceries, and August Bohnsach, hardware.

About 1868 a newspaper called the Standard was established at Marble Hill by one Osborne. A few months later he sold the office to Col. Lindsay Murdoch, who continued the publication until 1874, when the office material was removed to Fredericktown. It was a Republican paper, but during the campaign of 1872 a printer named Burton, who managed the office, issued the True Democrat, in support of the O'Connor ticket. In opposition to the Standard Thomas Johnson established the Herald, a Democratic paper, which was conducted by various editors and publishers until about 1883, when it was removed to Ironton. In 1881 the Reflector was established by George W. Harrington, who in a short time sold to James G. Finney, who changed the name to the Press, and has since continued it. In the winter of 1878 P. T. Pigg began the publication of the Marble Hill Palladium, and continued it for over two years. He then turned over the subscription list to the Herald.

Marble Hill Lodge No. 298, A. F. & A. M., received its charter on October 15, 1868, at which time the officers were W. C. Talley, W. M.; S. A. Colbert, S. W.; J. H. Rider, J. W.; T. B. Lawrence, Treas.; J. M. Rider, Sec.; F. Deckman, S. D.; W. Stratton, J. D.; and J. B. Stevens, Tyler. Two years later there was a membership of twenty-four, which in 1885 had increased to seventy. In 1886 Sedgewickville Lodge was organized, mainly from members from this lodge, but there is still remaining a membership of over sixty. In 1877 a hall was built in partnership with the I. O. G. T., but it has since become the property of this lodge. It has been furnished at a cost of $300.

Marble Hill Lodge, No. 449, I. O. O. F., was instituted on April 8, 1884, with the following charter members: A. Sanders, T. J. Teters, Henry Berry, Louis Mayer, A. Bohnsach, C. W. Whitmer and F. M. Wells.

Mayfield-Smith Academy, of Marble Hill, went into operation in September, 1885, with D. W. Graves as principal. It is named for its two principal founders, Dr. W. H. Mayfield and Dr. H. J. Smith. These gentlemen, in February, 1878, started a subscription for the founding of an institution of learning for the Baptists of Southeast Missouri. Smithville, Bollinger County, was selected as the site, and there the first session was taught, in a hall owned by Dr. Smith. In the spring of 1879 work was begun upon a suitable school building, but it was suspended, on account of a lack of funds, after the foundation had been laid. It was then decided to remove the location to Marble Hill, and work was begun upon the building, which was completed in 1885. It is a two-story brick structure, 30x60 feet, and stands on an eminence overlooking the surrounding country. The enrollment for the first session was 83, for the second, 99, and for the present session, 118.

Lutesville is situated on the west side of Crooked Creek, about one-half mile from Marble Hill. It was laid out in 1869 by Eli Lutes, who donated to the railroad company ten acres for depot grounds and one-third of the lots, in addition to the right of way. The first store was opened in a small box house, by C. D. Rowe, before the town was surveyed. He afterward erected a new building, and continued in business until his death. The town has steadily improved, and now contains a population of about 500.

The business interests of the present consist of the general stores of Sample & Co., William C. King and George E. Statler, the drug stores of Dr. A. R. Jaques and Dr. A. J. Mayfield, the hardware store of George E. Clark, a stave factory, operated by Stanton & Co., and a custom mill, operated by F. P. Trautwein.

Two newspapers have been published in Lutesville for a few months each, the Herald, established in 1872, and the Vidette, in March, 1884.

Trowel Lodge No 440, A. F. & A. M., of Lutesville, was organized on March 19, 1872, and worked under dispensation until the following October. The first officers were J. H. Rider, W. M.; C. D. Rowe, S. W.; David Clippard, J. W.; Ed. Hubbard, Treasurer; A. R. Jaques, Secretary; George M. McNeil, S. D.; Robert Sullivan, J. D.; J. J. Shultz, Tyler. A hall was purchased in partnership with the A. O. U. W. and the I. O. O. F. lodges, but in 1882 it was destroyed by fire. The present membership of the lodge is twenty.

Lutesville Lodge No 385, I. O. O. F., was organized, on June 13, 1878, with the following charter members: A. J. Martin, George E. Clark, F. M. Wells, H. A. Sanford, W. G. Waldo, A. J. Tibbs, Eli Lutes, G. W. Mollineaux and A. Bohnsach.

Lutesville Lodge No 129, A. O. U. W., was organized on May 9, 1879, with George E. Statler, P. M. W.; G. W. Mollineaux, M. W.; H. A. Sanford, G. F.; D. L. Phelps, John Foley, Recorder;

Eli Lutes, Financier; J. M. Welch, Receiver; William Price, G.; J. T. McGuire, I. W., and Eli Johnson, O. W. On March 30, 1883, Lutesville Legion No. 55, Select Knights, was organized, with George E. Statler as S. C. Both branches of the order are well supported and have a good membership.

Franklin Shanks Post No. 100, G. A. R., was established on August 18, 1883, with Dr. A. R. Jaques as Post Commander. He served in that capacity two years, and was succeeded by Col. Lindsay Murdoch. The present Commander is Randolph James. The prosperity of the post is proven by the fact that the original membership of twenty-five has been increased to sixty. There is also a post known as Erich Pape Post at Bollinger's Mill.

Arcadia.—When Iron County was organized there were two villages within its borders, Arcadia and Middlebrook. Arcadia was laid out in 1849, and owes its existence to what was the Arcadia High School. That institution was founded by Rev. J. C. Berryman, and conducted under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The school was a grand success, and from it graduated many of the best citizens of Southeast Missouri. A short time prior to the war, he became the proprietor of the institution, and managed it until forced to abandon it in 1861. Two years later, at the request of Gen. C. B. Fisk, then in command at Ironton, Mr. Berryman reopened the school, and continued it until 1867. In 1869 Rev. L. M. Lewis purchased the school, and by the liberal donations of citizens erected a new brick building, but becoming embarrassed financially he transferred the property to a joint stock company, composed of those who had furnished the most of the means to build the new edifice. From that time by an amended charter it became known as "Arcadia College." In 1875 Prof. C. O. Jones took charge of the college, but failed to make it a success, and a few years later it was transferred to the Ursuline Sisters for the amount of the indebtedness upon it. The property cost over $40,000. The building is a four-story brick edifice, 60x120 feet, and is situated in the midst of large and beautiful grounds.

The first stores at Arcadia were opened by Ezekiel Mathews and Smith & Love, who were soon succeeded by John F. T. Edwards and William N. Gregory. G. B. Nall, Pease & Hill and Harris & Chinn were also in business in Arcadia before the war. In 1847 Josiah and J. C. Berryman built a steam saw and grist mill a short distance from the town, which they sold to Holloman Bros. In 1859 a newspaper, the Arcadia Prospect, was established by A. Coulter, with W. L. Faber as editor. It was subsequently moved to Ironton, and in 1861 discontinued. In 1870 Arcadia was incorporated, with Charles S. Eisner, John R. Higdon, John Albert, William Fletcher and A. Roberson as trustees. At that time it was a thriving business point, but for the past few years it has steadily declined, and now only two small stores are maintained. It is a beautiful village, however, and some handsome summer residences have been built by St. Louis business men.

Middlebrook is a small village a few miles north of Ironton, on the St. Francois County line, laid out in 1856.

Ironton.—When the county was organized H. N. Tong and David Carson were doing a mercantile business at the eastern base of Shepherd Mountain, opposite where Mrs. Haller's store now is. They at once purchased land and laid off a town, named it Ironton, and entered it on the list with Arcadia and Middlebrook as competing points for the county seat. The election took place on September 7, 1857, and Ironton was selected. Tong and Carson having given alternate lots to the county, they were sold at public sale, by Samuel A. Reyburn, commissioner of the seat of justice, realizing to the county the sum of $10,600. A village had already sprung up at the base of Pilot Knob, composed of mining operatives, and during this year it was made the terminus of the Iron Mountain Railroad. In 1859 its population was placed at 600, while that of Arcadia and Ironton was about 300 each. These towns are situated adjoining each other, and may almost be considered as one straggling village scattered along the railroad for a distance of three miles. As the terminus of the railroad, the position was one of importance during the war, and was early occupied.

Of the three towns Ironton, as the county seat, is of the most importance. It now contains a population of about 800, and embraces the following mercantile and manufacturing establishments: Whitworth & Son, Lopez & Son, Mrs. Haller, Reese & Bro., John Barnhaus, W. H. Byers, William H. Delano and G. W. Fairchilds, general merchants; William P. McCarver and R. Beard, grocers; J. N. Bishop and John Albert, house furnishers; P. R. Crisp, druggist; Granhomme & Gevonina, undertakers; Mr. Kiddle, agricultural implements; William Gay & Co., blacksmiths and lumber dealers; William Newman, blacksmith; Frederick Kindell, boot and shoe maker; Baldwin Bros., planing mill; John Schwab, roller mill; Clarkson & Son, Valley Mills.

The first newspaper in Ironton was the Furnace, a Free Soil sheet, established in 1858 by James Lindsay, and discontinued in 1861. The following year the Baptist Journal, a religious paper, was established by Rev. William Polk, and continued by him until 1861. In 1865 the Ironton Forge, a Republican paper, was started by Eli D. Ake, upon the office material of the Furnace. The next year it was sold to G. A. & J. L. Moser, who changed the name to the Southeast Missouri Enterprise, and continued the publication until 1873. In 1866 R. E. Craig established the Review, a Democratic paper, which in July, 1867, was changed to the Iron County Register, with Thomas Essex and W. H. Winfield as editors. In May, 1869, it was sold to Eli D. Ake and C. K. Miller. Two years later Mr. Ake became the sole proprietor, and has since continued the publication. Mr. Ake, in addition to being a good editor, is one of the best job printers in the State, and has a large trade in that line of work. The Liberal, a campaign paper of 1870, Robert L. Lindsay, editor, the Commonwealth, conducted by Crawford & Duncan as an independent religious political paper for a few months in 1874, and the Herald, a Democratic paper, established and run a few months in 1884 by John Smith, complete the list.

Star of the West Lodge No. 133, A. F. & A. M., was organized at Iron Mountain on May 11, 1849, by A. Hudspeth, Moses Edmunds, Reuben Thomas, Benjamin Johnson, Charles L. Edmunds, Robert Ferguson, W. H. Thomas and Albert Reeves. In 1851 the lodge was removed to Arcadia, where, in 1861, the charter was lost. In May, 1862, a new charter was procured, and the lodge removed to Ironton, where, after the close of the war, a hall was erected at a cost of $2,500. On April 15, 1871, Midian Royal Arch Chapter No. 71 was organized, with the following charter members: J. T. Ake, J. R. Higdon, A. T. Shepherd, D. F. Martin, J. Grandhomme, H. M. Hutchins, C. K. Miller, S. J. Harkey, H. A. Turner, C. A. Butts, F. Scoville, W. R. Edgar, S. Buford, W. J. Collett, W. C. R. Williams, L. M. Lewis, Lawrence Ryan, M. K. Havens, Henry Zimmerman, Joel Yancey, J. P. Duley, S. C. Lipscomb, J. R. McCormick, F. Roan, D. H. Cheeney, B. Shepherd, D. C. Bugg, E. D. Ake, Daniel Miller, G. B. Clark, W. C. Thomas and J. C. Williams. At its organization it was the only chapter south of St. Louis, but one was organized the next year at Cape Girardeau. The present High Priest is B. Shepherd.

Iron Lodge No. 107, I. O. O. F., was organized in Arcadia June 12, 1857, at which time there were present John H. Henry, W. F. Mitchell, C. R. Peck, Elias Kemp, J. F. T. Edwards, P. Ake, Henry Zimmerman, J. T. Garner, Benjamin Johnson, Z. G. Harris, W. N. Gregory, A. C. Farnham and August Travernicht. In 1858 the lodge removed to their own building in Ironton. In 1872 the old hall was sold, and the following year a large brick hall erected at a cost of $6,000. Ironton Encampment No. 29 was instituted on May 20, 1860, with the following members: B. Shepherd, C. R. Peck, J. T. Ake, William Ake, D. H. Kenny, P. Ake, David Humphreys, Franz Dinger and William Suits.

Pilot Knob Lodge No. 156, I. O. O. F., was organized on November 4, 1865, with twelve members. They work in the German language, and own their own hall. There is also at Pilot Knob a lodge of A. O. U. W. and a lodge of the Sons of Herman.

Phoebe Lodge No. 330, I. O. O. F., was organized at Belleview on November 12, 1874, with John H. McHenry, Elias Kemp, A. P. Dace, J. W. Lashley and W. R. Read as charter members.

Mosaic Lodge No. 351, A. F. & A. M., was organized on February 9, 1870, in Belleview, a little post village in the valley of that name. The charter members were John D. Webb, Joseph C. Moyer, E. H. Mathews, J. E. Lowe, W. R. Moyer, James Logan, J. L. Stephens and James Fitzpatrick. A hall valued at $800 was soon after erected. In July, 1875, a chapter of the order of Eastern Star was organized, with thirty-five members.

The public schools of Ironton were established in 1866.

Franz Dinger, David Carson and M. B. Tetwiler constituted the first school board. Until 1868 the schools were taught in the Baptist Church. In that year the building now occupied by Crisp's drug store was erected, and was used until 1881, when the present handsome brick building was built at a cost of $6,000. The schools are now taught eight months in the year, by three white teachers and one colored teacher.

Greeneville was laid out as the seat of justice for Wayne County in 1819, upon the bank of St. Francois River, on Spanish Grant No. 787. Little could be learned of the first settlers of the town, but a store was opened there as early as 1824 by Van Horn & Wheeler, in a little log house on the corner opposite where E. P. Settles now lives. In 1827 William Creath began business in what now forms a part of Mr. Settles' house, where he continued until his death in 1839. Lysander Flinn and Zenas Smith were also merchants there for many years. Moses Timmons and Joseph Bennett were among the early hotel-keepers. Elijah Bettis was the first medical practitioner, but was not a regular physician. Dr. Ed. H. Bennett and Drs. Payne, Capp and Dickey were among the pioneers of the profession in Wayne County. Greeneville has never been more than a small village, but in ante-bellum days it is said to have done a good business. In those times all goods sold were hauled in wagons from Cape Girardeau. The town is situated on level ground, and in 1826 it was inundated to the depth of several feet by an overflow of the St. Francois. From that time until 1863 there were no overflows, but several have since occurred. The business interests at present consist of three general stores, conducted by C. A. Bennett, Lacey & Warmack and Joel A. Meador. Several newspapers have been published at Greeneville since the war. One of the first was the Reporter, established about 1869 by C. P. Rotrock, and afterward published by Frank C. Neely & Co. In March, 1872, A. W. Banks commenced the publication of the Greeneville Democrat, which was soon after removed to Piedmont. In February, 1877, the Weekly Journal was established by J. N. Morrison, who conducted it for about two years. He was succeeded by John F. Rhodes, and in January, 1881, A. T. Lacey became the editor. He continued the publication until the latter part of 1886, since which time it has been under the management of John G. Settle. Until recently an Odd Fellows and a Masonic lodge have been maintained, but both have surrendered their charters. The latter, known as Johnson Lodge, was chartered in October, 1867, and dissolved in April, 1885.

Piedmont was laid out by the railroad company upon the completion of the Iron Mountain Road to that point. The first stores were opened by Hatten & McSpadden, in what was called Danielsville, and L. F. Medley, in the house now occupied by Eli Klotz. The growth of the town was rapid, and, until the opening of new railroads within the past five years, it controlled trade for a distance of seventy-five miles westward. In February, 1888, a fire destroyed several business houses, and added another blow to the prosperity of the town. The present business interests are represented by the following firms: McSpadden & Blaine, J. E. Brown & Co., T. S. Lopez & Son and Eli Klotz, general merchants; E. Bisplinhoff, W. P. Toney and A. Blaine, druggists; J. F. Lindsay, dealer in hardware and implements, and J. W. Ames, manufacturer of soda water.

The newspaper enterprises of Piedmont have been of a rather transitory character. In 1872 Banks & Craig began the publication of a paper, which they soon sold to S. B. Sprowl, who removed it to Patterson, and published the Patterson Times until 1876. He then returned to Piedmont, where he continued the publication a few months. In March, 1878, B. E. H. Warren established the Vindicator, which, about the close of the year, was moved to Bloomfield by T. L. Roussin. In 1885 the Piedmont Rambler was established by G. Y. Gale, and when the fire of February, 1888, occurred W. B. Harris was publishing the Piedmont Leader. The office and its contents were destroyed, and it has since been suspended.

Friendship Lodge No. 9, K. of P., of Piedmont, was organized in November, 1883, and received its charter June 15, 1884. The original members were D. Bear, H. R. Holland, C. E. Creath, J. M. Wilson, W. A. Butts, G. P. Woodward, Z. T. Stearns, E. Kohn, John Schuster, W. B. Harris, J. Schiek, O. H. Teichman, J. S. Berryman, H. Van Roden, L. M. Byrne, J. C. Vandyke, A. Struble, S. A. Bates, W. L. Sandfelter and F. Weaver. The lodge now has a membership of seventy-five, and is one of the strongest in the State. In November, 1887, a three-story frame building, 50x80 feet, was completed at a cost of $5,000. There are two storerooms on the first floor, a large hall on the second floor, and two lodge rooms on the third floor.

Piedmont Lodge, F. & A. M., was organized in October, 1872, and continued until May 21, 1884. The charter was then surrendered, and Wayne Lodge No. 526 was organized. It now has a membership of twenty-five.

Gen. James H. Hart Post No. 333, G. A. R., was organized on August 16, 1887, with the following officers: Ben. A. Hamilton, P. C.; O. L. Davis, S. V. C.; John Head, J. V. C.; Jacob Collier, Chaplain; B. F. Harrison, Surgeon; T. C. Hayley, Q. M.; J. F. Lindsay, Adj., and John Short, O. of G. There are now about forty members.

Piedmont is not excelled by any town in Southeast Missouri in her school system. In 1873 bonds were issued for the sum of $6,000, and a two-story frame school building containing six rooms was erected. Three teachers were at first employed, but now the schools with five teachers are crowded. The length of term is usually seven months. The bonded debt of the district has been liquidated with the exception of about $500.

Patterson is a little village in Logan Township, Wayne County, containing three churches and two stores. It was formerly known as Isbell's Store, as Isbell opened the first store there about 1854. From the close of the war until the opening of the Iron Mountain Railroad it was a business point of considerable importance.

Mill Spring, laid out in November, 1871, by the Iron Mountain Railroad Company; Gad's Hill, established in 1872 by George W. Creath; Williamsville, laid out in 1872 by Asa E. Williams; Wappapello, on the Cape Girardeau Southwestern Railroad, laid out in June, 1884, by S. R. Kelly, and Wellsdale, on the St. Francois River, at the crossing of the Cape Girardeau Southwestern Railroad, laid out in 1887 by Peter F. Wells, are all villages of more or less importance in Wayne County.

Benton.—The town of Benton was laid out in 1822, upon land owned by Col. William Meyers. At that time Col. Meyers and Thomas Houts both lived in the immediate vicinity, but the latter soon moved to the country. Among the first residents of the town were Edmund Rogers, who built a log tavern where Heiserr's Hotel now is; John Houts, who lived where James McPheeters now does, and ran a tanyard; Michael McLaughlin, who sold goods in a house on a lot now occupied by the Record office, and John P. Rutter, clerk of the court, who lived where Mr. Allen now resides. The first frame house was built by Joseph Hunter, and occupied by him as a storehouse. It stood on the lot where James Walker now lives. He began business about 1830, and continued until his death some ten years later. Among the other merchants during the "thirties" were Dr. E. B. Lavallee and John Harbison, who occupied the McLaughlin house from 1831 to 1833, and George Netherton and Abraham Winchester, whose store stood on the Heiserr corner. Hunter was succeeded by Crow & McCrary, the former of whom married Mrs. Hunter. George and Thomas Williams were the leading merchants of the "forties." The hotel or tavern built by Rogers changed hands frequently, and was owned successively by Robert Ravenscroft, John Hall, H. D. Spear, William A. Penney and James Weaver.

The first physicians in Benton were John Gouldin and Samuel Chapman. In 1842 Dr. A. S. Henderson located in the town, and soon after associated with himself as partner Edward Cridle.

The first schools for the youth of Benton were taught in a house about one-half mile northwest of the town by James Dye. James Douglass also taught for several years.

The first newspaper in Benton was established by George M. Moore in July, 1879, with Louis Dehls as editor. It was called the Benton Record. Dehls was succeeded by Jeff. Shelton, and he by S. H. Smith, who purchased the Express, a paper established two or three years before by T. S. Adams. He consolidated the two under the name of the Express-Record. In August, 1886, the office was purchased by J. F. Mitchim, who has since published the paper under its original name. In February, 1888, the publication of the Scott County Newsboy was begun.

Benton was incorporated by the county court in April, 1860, with James Parrott, A. S. Henderson, D. H. Leedy, Daniel Abbey and Edwin Burke as trustees. This incorporation was soon allowed to lapse, and was not revived until November, 1880.

Commerce was laid out in February, 1823, but it had been the site of a trading post twenty years before. The land upon which it is built was originally granted to Thomas W. Waters, and was owned by his heirs when the survey was made. The commissioners who laid it out were Wilson Able, James Purtles, Thomas Roberts, Joseph Smith and James Wellborn.

Of the early residents of the town may be mentioned Archibald Price, Weaver & Echols (James Weaver and J. W. Echols), Shaw & Pettit and Ignatius Wathen, merchants; John Brown, hotel keeper; Lyon & Applegate, cabinet-makers, and William & Samuel Gracy, manufacturers of stoneware. The last named firm came from Philadelphia in 1833, and for many years carried on an extensive business. In 1844 a tanyard was opened by Benjamin B. Gaither. At that time the mercantile business was in the hands of Thomas M. Shaw and John Hoskins. Later Moses Baker and Moreau & Burgess opened stores. In 1856 a large steam mill was built by Ignatius R. Wathen, of Cape Girardeau. It fell into disuse several years ago, and is now used by Anderson Bros. as an elevator.

The present business interests are as follows: Anderson Bros., John T. Gaither, Carroll Maye and B. J. Tinkhoff, general merchants; C. F. De Wint and William Hutton, druggists; Fritz Baumgardner, harness maker; R. B. Heuchan, cabinet maker, and G. G. Mathews, Benjamin McKinley, Herman Wahl, J. B. Torbert and William McPheeters, grocers. Grand Chain Flouring Mill was built in 1881, by a company of which B. B. Gaither was president. It is now owned and operated by Anderson Bros. The first newspaper published in Commerce was the Dispatch, established in 1867 by William Ballentine and H. P. Lynch. It was published under the management of various editors until the removal of the county seat to Benton. On March 23, 1888, the first number of the Scott County Agricultural Wheel was issued. It was established by the association of that name, with Rev. S. A. Mason as editor.

Commerce was first incorporated in July, 1834, with the following board of trustees: William Gracy, Jacob Spear, J. S. Smith, John Brown and Joseph W. Echols. In January, 1857, a charter was obtained from the Legislature, and a municipal government organized under it. This was suspended during the war, but in January, 1867, it was revived, and the following board of trustees elected: J. T. Anderson, William Ballentine, H. P. Lynch, Carroll Maye, A. J. Youngman, George Fricke and F. DeWint. The charter was amended in 1873, and the government is now that of a city of the fourth class.

Sikeston was laid out in 1860 by John Sikes, about one-half mile north of the site of the old town of Winchester, on the King's Highway, and what was then the Cairo & Fulton Railway. Winchester was laid out in 1814, and lots were sold to Daniel Sparks, Edward N. Mathews, Samuel Phillips, Stephen Ross, Thomas Phillips, John Shields, Sr., and Moses Shelby. A store was opened by Thomas Bartlett, and a tavern by Hartwell Baldwin. Later David Hunter and Mark H. Stalleup and Christopher Houts were engaged in business at this place, but after 1822, when it ceased to be the seat of justice for New Madrid County, it speedily went down. It was named in honor of Col. Henderson Winchester, who lived in the vicinity.

The first store in Sikeston was opened by John Sikes, who continued in business until his death in 1867. James E. Waugh and Samuel Keith also engaged in business soon after the town was laid out, the latter having built the first dwelling.

The Cairo & Fulton Railroad was completed to Sikeston in 1860, and it remained the terminus of the road until about 1872. The town is situated in the midst of the "garden spot" of Southeast Missouri, and is steadily improving. It ships more grain than any other town of its size in the State. The mercantile interests at the present time are represented by the following individuals: Ebert & Emory, dry goods; Needham Sikes, Calvin Greer and Jones Bros., groceries and hardware; J. T. Martin and W. H. Adams, groceries and dry goods; Wilson Kendall, groceries; Otto Kochtitzky and B. F. Chaney, drugs. A gristmill is now building by Schafer & West, and the Bank of Sikeston was recently established by C. D. & A. J. Mathews. A weekly newspaper, the Star of Sikeston, was established by J. F. Mitchim in January, 1884. and is now edited and published by W. S. Mitchim.

Sikeston Lodge No. 310 was chartered on October 12, 1869, with fourteen members. The original officers were Isaac Hunter, W. M.; W. S. Lenox, S. W.; Samuel Keith, J. W.; Samuel Stringer, Treasurer; Joseph O. Davis, Secretary; C. Vancil, S. D.; Ira Wilburn, J. D.; B. F. Hunter, Tyler. The lodge now numbers thirty-eight members, and has a nicely furnished hall. Dr. O. E. Kendall is the present W. M., and A. A. Harrison, Secretary.

Sikeston Lodge No. 358, I. O. O. F., was organized under a dispensation from the Grand Lodge on September 1, 1876, by J. H. Bethune of Charleston. The first officers were Samuel Keith, N. G.; T. A. Brown, V. G.; George W. Shields, Treas. and John Arkison, Sec. The present membership is fifty-two.

Sikeston Lodge No. 86, A. O. U. W., received its charter on September 16, 1886, at which time the officers were William Joyce, P. M. W.; H. L. Matchen, M. W.; W. H. McKnight, F.; James A. Hopkins, O.; Charles Cook, Recorder; H. F. Emory, Financier; E. J. Malone, Receiver; J. D. Cresup, G.; J. A. Cheap, I. W.; David Grojean, O. W.

Sikeston also contains two churches and a good graded school.

Morley, a station on the Iron Mountain Railroad and the shipping point for Benton, was laid out in 1869. Among the first merchants were B. B. Gaither, W. A. Cade, Hughes & Watkins, Harris & Rosenbaum and J. T. Anderson & Bro. A grist and corn mill was built soon after the town was established by L. C. Martin & Bro. The present merchants are L. C. Martin & Bro., M. S. Harris, E. Daugherty and B. F. Hunter. The town was first incorporated in 1870, with James Boutwell, Henry Wadsworth, George R. Wilson, B. V. Yandell and L. O'Brien as trustees.

Oran, a station on the railroad north of Morley, was laid out in 1869, and known as Sylvania for several years. It has a population of about 300, and is incorporated as a city of the fourth class. It is one of the most enterprising business points in Scott County.

Blodgett, a station on the railroad below Morley, is the leading shipping-point for watermelons. It was laid out in 1870.

New Hamburg, a little post village in Township 28 north, Range 14 east, was laid out in 1866 by Francis Heurig.

Charleston.—The town of Charleston was laid off by John Rodney, surveyor of Scott County, on May 11, 1837, on lands owned by Thankful Randol, Joseph Moore and W. P. Barnard. It covered an area of $16\frac{3}{10}\frac{5}{10}$ acres of land, and was laid out into twelve blocks of ten lots each with streets sixty-six feet wide. Blocks 1, 2, 3, 4, 9 and 10 were owned by Thankful Randol; Block 11 by W. P. Barnard, and the remainder by Mr. Moore. The site was originally entered in 1830 or 1831 by Humphrey Warren, who built a small log house where the Kenrick House now stands. In a short time he sold the house and forty acres of land to Thankful Randol, who continued to reside upon it until her death. After the town was established she kept a sort of hotel or boarding-house. The first store was opened in the same house by John West and a man by the name of Neil. They afterward removed to a small slab-covered house, which they built on the lot now occupied by John Lindsey's store. They were succeeded by Arthur R. Newman, who built a hewed-log house on the same site, and sold goods there for several years. At about the same time Henry G. Cummings built a store and put in a stock of goods near where Kenrick's store now is. The largest merchant in the town prior to the war was Kieran Gorman, whose store was on the northwest corner of Commercial and Main Streets. He accumulated a large fortune, and died about 1865.

One of the most prominent and useful pioneers of Charleston was George Whitcomb, who came to the county from Massachusetts in 1837. He located on the site of Belmont, where he remained until the organization of the county, when he removed to Charleston. He lived in a double-log house where the residence of J. J. Russell now stands. He served as clerk of the courts for twenty years, and traded largely in real estate. He was an advocate of every commendable public enterprise, and was largely instrumental in securing the Cairo & Fulton Railroad for Charleston. In 1854 he erected a brick hotel on the corner now occupied by the Hotel Kenrick, which was the second brick building in the town. The first was built by James L. and Charles Moore about 1848. Mr. Whitecomb died on July 10, 1872.

In 1859 Charleston contained three dry goods stores, three groceries, one drug store, one hardware store, two hotels, a printing office, a saddler's shop, a tailor's shop, two blacksmiths, one wheelwright, seven doctors and eight lawyers. Among the doctors were B. J. Moore, S. D. Golder, T. C. Poor, J. L. Haw, A. E. Simpson. The lawyers were Robert Waide, A. M. Bedford, N. E. Quinby, Sam C. Moore, Joseph C. Moore, Leroy Keese, M. Ward and C. C. Kalfus. The merchants and grocers were K. Gorman, L. Rosenberg, Hayes & Bartlett, Frank Myrick, J. H. Bridges and W. G. Cooley. The druggist was W. A. Lynn and the hardware merchant F. J. Jecko.

In February, 1860, a branch of the Union Bank was opened in Charleston, with John Bird as president, J. C. Moore, cashier, and G. W. Whitecomb, C. C. Kalfus, Thompson Bird, J. S. Bledsoe, Noah Handy, James Smith, J. L. Moore, K. Gorman, directors. In 1862 the bank was raided by Gen. Jeff. Thompson, and $58,000 in gold and silver taken from it to prevent it from falling into the hands of the Federals. It was turned over to the depositors.

The growth of Charleston was slow until after the completion of the Iron Mountain Railroad, since which it has steadily increased in population and wealth. The business portion of the town is substantially built of brick, and there are many handsome residences. The following is a directory of the present business interests: F. M. Stotts, S. G. Rosenstein and J. A. Siegelmann, dry goods, clothing, etc.; George W. Kenrick, A. McElmurry, Danforth & Lee and J. W. Lindsay, dry goods, groceries, etc.; W. L. Baldwin & Co., L. B. Waller, Mrs. E. Fletcher, Mrs. C. Loebe and Margaret Bastian, groceries; F. G. Schuh and F. B. Rice, groceries and confections; J. H. Hess, C. A. Stotts and J. C. Bondurant & Co., drugs; D. Rusk, jewelry; A. H. lantic Mills; J. C. & J. A. Crenshaw, City Roller Mills; J. P. Dever & Son, planing mill; H. J. Deal & Son, shingle mill.

The Bank of Charleston was opened in October, 1887, with a capital stock of $15,000. The officers are A. H. Danforth, president; Scott Alexander, cashier; Alfred Orr, J. J. Russell, A. A. Bondurant, F. M. Stotts, F. J. Hess, A. H. Danforth and Scott Alexander, directors.

Constantine Lodge No. 129 was organized in May, 1851, and a few years later a chapter and council were instituted. Among the early members were George Whitcomb, F. A. Randol, J. M. Brown, C. C. Kalfus, J. H. Bethune, A. E. Simpson. Mr. Whitcomb in 1862 was Grand Master of the Grand Lodge. In 1875 the old charter was surrendered, and a new one obtained, under which an organization was effected on March 30, with J. H. Bethune as W. M.; A. E. Simpson, S. W.; W. P. Swank, J. W.; J. M. Brown, Sec.; James L. Moore, Treas.

Charleston Lodge No 84, I. O. O. F., was organized under a dispensation from the Grand Lodge, by Deputy Grand Master J. F. Shiefer on March 28, 1855. W. W. Campbell, J. S. Goodwin and B. C. Adams were initiated into the order, and the following officers chosen: J. P. Bridwell, N. G.; J. C. Thomas, V. G.; W. W. Campbell, Treasurer; J. S. Goodin, Secretary; R. Stovall, Warden; B. C. Adams, I. G. The lodge received its charter from the Grand Lodge on May 17, 1855, and continued to work until January, 1861, when it was suspended. During that time the following persons filled the office of Noble Grand: J. C. Thomas, A. M. Bedford, J. S. Goodin, Samuel Keith, David Swank, J. L. Shelby, J. C. Rice, B. C. Adams, J. H. Bethune and L. Rosenberg. On January 27, 1872, seven of the old members met and effected a reorganization with B. C. Adams as N. G.; G. Crenshaw, V. G.; L. F. Danforth, Treas. and J. L. Shelby, Sec. The other three members were J. H. Bethune, J. C. Crenshaw and T. H. Bryant. The lodge has since been very prosperous, and now has a membership of eighty-two. On January 24, 1885, it was incorporated by the Legislature. On May 20, 1886, Mystic Degree Lodge No. 69, Daughters of Rebekah, was chartered with thirty-six members, and now has a membership of fifty-eight.

Charleston Encampment No. 103 was organized on February

6, 1888, with J. A. Boone as Chief Patriarch; I. T. Clarkson, Senior Warden; H. C. O'Bryan, Junior Warden; D. Rusk, High Priest; F. B. Rice, Scribe, and Benjamin Huff, Treasurer.

Charleston Lodge No. 130, A. O. U. W., was chartered on May 15, 1879, with Messer Ward, P. M. W.; C. W. Hequembourg, M. W.; H. H. Hancock, F.; D. Rusk, O.; G. H. Bridges, Recorder; W. A. Rush, Financier; Solomon Rosenstein, Receiver; David Black, G.; F. G. Schuh, I. W.; J. C. Crenshaw, O. W.

The first newspaper published in Charleston was the Courier, established by George Whitcomb in the latter part of 1857. It was ably conducted, and was a credit to the town. When first established it was independent in politics, and was one of the few papers in Southern Missouri that was published during the war, and even it was subject to frequent interruptions. The office, from 1858 to 1872, was managed by W. F. Martin, who was also the editor a portion of the time. After the death of Mr. Whitcomb, in 1872, the office was purchased by Frank M. Dyer, who published the Courier until September, 1877, when he sold it to C. W. Dunifer. In 1875 George M. Moore established the Charleston Gazette, and in 1877 the two papers were consolidated, under the name of the Courier-Gazette. Dunifer soon after withdrew, and established the Sentinel, which, two years later, was removed to Arkansas. Moore sold the Courier-Gazette to a joint stock company, and they in turn to Prof. W. H. Campbell, who conducted it for about one year. It then went into the hands of Andrew Hill, and in April, 1886, the office, material and press were removed to Malden, Mo.

In the spring of 1865 George Martin, a son of the former manager of the Courier, began the publication of a little sheet called the Enterprise, which was printed on a job press. He was then a lad of fifteen, and was at first assisted by another boy about his own age—M. V. Golder. He has ever since continued the publication, enlarging and improving it from time to time. It is now one of the most widely circulated and influential papers in Southeast Missouri.

In January, 1887, the Democrat was established by a stock company, with S. G. Tetwiler as editor. At the end of one year Mr. Tetwiler became sole proprietor.

The schools of Charleston, prior to the Civil War, were of an elementary character, and were taught but three or four months in the year. Before the town was laid off, as early as 1830, a little log cabin, known as the Indian Grove schoolhouse, was built for the education of the youth of Mathews' Prairie. Among the first teachers were Hartford Hayes, James L. Moore, — Beadle and John C. Thomas.

After the close of the war, to provide better educational facilities for Charleston, a number of the leading citizens formed a company, and erected a large brick building, in which, in September, 1870, was opened the Charleston Classical Academy, under the supervision of Justin Williams. The academy did not prove so successful as had been anticipated, and the building was rented to the directors of the public school. The district, however, found it more economical to own its building, and in 1882 a handsome brick structure, containing four large school-rooms, was erected at a cost of $6,000. The public schools, then properly graded for the first time, went into operation, with W. H. Campbell as principal. They continued under the direction of Prof. Campbell until 1884, when he was succeeded by Prof. H. L. McCleary. The schools are now taught ten months in the year, and are equal to any in the State. In 1887 the number of youths of school age in the district was 311 whites and 147 colored. Of this number there were enrolled in the schools in February, 1888, 209 white and 53 colored pupils, with an average attendance of 163 white and 40 colored. Four white teachers and one colored teacher are employed, at salaries ranging from $40 to $90 per month.

Several villages have been laid out in Mississippi County, but only two or three have had more than a nominal existence. Bertrand, the largest of these villages, is pleasantly situated on the Cairo branch of the Iron Mountain Railroad, about six miles west of Charleston. It was laid out in 1859 by H. J. Deal, and now has a population of about 200.

Belmont, the terminus of the Belmont branch of the Iron Mountain, on the Mississippi River, was laid out by a stock company in 1853. Norfolk was the first town laid out in the county. It was established in November, 1836, by James Ramsey, William Lester and others, on the Mississippi, about six miles below the mouth of the Ohio.

Ohio City was laid out on May 15, 1846, by Hiram Pearsons, about one mile above Bird's Point, on the Mississippi River. Hibbard was laid out in 1883 by an improvement company. It is a station on the Texas, Arkansas & St. Louis Railway.

Bloomfield.—The location of the seat of justice for Stoddard County was made by John McCombs, Michael Rodney and Henry Shaner. They selected fifty acres of land donated to the county by Absalom Bailey, and laid out a town, which they named Bloomfield, because the spot at the time was covered with a profusion of flowers. William C. Rauney was appointed commissioner to sell the lots. Among the first residents of the town were Orson Bartlett, who had a store where William C. Cole now lives; John N. Mitchell, a Methodist local preacher; Thomas Neil, who had a tanyard in the northwest part of town; Absalom Bailey, who at first lived in a small log house in the southwest corner of the town, but soon after built a small brick house where Renner & Harty's store now is; Harmon Reed, who kept a hotel near Bailey's, and Drs. M. B. Koons, Daniel Sanford and Samuel Chapman. In 1844, or 1845, Edmund White opened a store on the south side of the public square, and put in the first complete stock of goods in the town. He remained about three years, and then removed to New Orleans. Shortly afterward Daniel Miller began business in a building standing where the postoffice is, and his brother, Henry Miller, opened a store on the site of the Vindicator office. About 1854 John M. Johnson, R. P. Owen and N. G. H. Jones each opened stores. Elijah Miller and John L. Buck, Paramore & McDaniel, Lewis Ringer and John Leach, and Harper & Christy were also in business prior to 1860. During the decade prior to the Civil War Bloomfield experienced a good degree of prosperity, and, with the exception of Cape Girardeau, was equal to any town in Southeast Missouri, but during the war nearly every building was destroyed, and it has never recovered from the shock. In fact, had it not been the county seat, it would doubtless, before this time, have ceased to exist as a town.

The first newspaper published in Bloomfield was the Her- ald, established in 1858 by A. M. Bedford, of Charleston, Mo., and placed under the management of J. O. Hull. It was established to advocate the construction of the Cairo & Fulton Railroad, and was continued until 1861. In July, 1866, James Hamilton began the publication of the Bloomfield Argus, and continued until about 1873. In 1874 the Bloomfield Messenger was established, and, under the management of George H. Crumb and O. C. Jones, was published until September, 1877, when it was consolidated with the Dexter Enterprise. In December, 1878, T. L. Roussin established the Vindicator which he soon sold to Buck & Miller, who continued the publication, with H. N. Phillips as editor. In 1880 it was purchased by Charles E. Stokes, who in 1882 sold it to the present proprietor, Ligon Jones.

The first schools in Bloomfield were taught in the Methodist Church. In 1853 the Bloomfield Educational Society was organized, with S. G. Kitchen, Orson Bartlett, Henry Miller, D. B. Miller and Michael A. Wilson as trustees, and a two-story frame building erected, in which was carried on a seminary until the war. After the cessation of hostilities small private schools were taught in the same building until 1871, when a public school system was established. H. H. Bedford, Samuel Montgomery, George G. Pollard, William Litton, John E. Liles and John L. Buck were elected a board of directors, and a tax of one-half of one per cent was levied for school purposes. B. B. Allen was employed as teacher, and the school was opened in the seminary building, which was occupied until 1886, when a new frame house was completed at a cost of $3,000. Three teachers are now employed.

Dexter was surveyed in 1873, and the first sale of lots took place in August of that year. The first stores were opened by R. P. Liles & Co., William Edwards, J. N. Miller, Sisel & Plaut and Riggins & Co. Dexter has grown rapidly, and bids fair to become one of the best towns in this portion of the State. It has a very large trade in grain, cotton, and live stock. The leading business houses are Miller, Ladd & Co., N. A. Riggins, Dowdy & Co., Ed. Webber and T. N. Daugherty, dry goods, groceries, etc.; R. A. Sisler & Co., J. J. Dowdy, drugs; T. S. Ulen, hardware and furniture; A. E. Bohlcke, E. E. Carter and J. R. Clark, groceries. Cooper & Jorndt operate a flouring mill having a capacity of fifty barrels per day, William Kirkpatrick, an extensive pottery, and Miller, Ladd & Co., a cotton-gin and cornmill. The last named firm are also heavy dealers in grain and produce.

In February, 1875, Charles E. Stokes established the Dexter Enterprise, a weekly newspaper, and in 1877 purchased the Bloomfield Messenger, which he consolidated with it under the name of the Dexter Enterprise-Messenger. This paper he continued until the fall of 1887, when he transferred it to R. H. Jones, and founded the New Southeast, which he has since removed to St. Louis.

Star Lodge No. 1924, K. of H., of Dexter, was organized on December 15, 1879, with Charles E. Stokes as P. D.; J. C. Walker, D.; Charles Peters, V. D.; E. W. C. Weber, Reporter; Henry Bohlcke, Financial Reporter; James A. Collins, Treasurer; N. P. Riggins, Chaplain; J. H. Lee, Guide; E. W. Palmer, Guardian, and T. A. Suit, Sentinel. It now has a membership of thirty-two, including many of the best citizens.

Dexter Lodge No. 532, A. F. & A. M., was organized on April 28, 1887, and received its charter October 22, 1887. The officers are J. A. Sisler, W. M.; A. F. Cooper, S. W.; C. E. Stokes, J. W.; Thomas J. Ulen, Treasurer; J. C. Jennings, Secretary; W. H. Oathout, S. D.; J. W. Morgan, J. D.; John Wilson, Tyler.

Dexter Lodge No. 389, A. O. U. W., was organized in May, 1887, with Thomas J. Toole, M. W.; G. N. Broughton, Recorder and Financier; J. L. Slayton, Receiver; A. J. Thrower, I. W., and James Grimes, O. W. The membership is now twenty-two.

Dexter was organized into a school district in 1874, but the schools were not graded until 1882. In that year a large brick building costing $5,000 was erected, and since that time three teachers have been employed.

Puxico is a flourishing new town in the northern part of Stoddard County, on the Cape Girardeau Southwestern Railroad. It was located in 1883 and incorporated as a village in 1884.

It now has a population of 400 or 500. This rapid growth is due mainly to its position in the center of the large timber industry of T. J. Moss, the largest tie-contractor in the State. There are now three general stores, conducted by T. J. Moss, John A. Hickman and H. B. Purcell & Co.; two drug stores, by J. M. Simpson and J. A. Hickman; a hardware store, by Hawks & Evans, and a newspaper, the Puxico Express, edited by E. S. Hickman, besides two churches and a schoolhouse, a Masonic lodge and a lodge of A. O. U. W.

Puxico Lodge, A. O. U. W., was organized on September 17, 1885, with Bird Martin, M. W.; J. H. Tanner, P. M. W.; F. H. Bilbrey, G. F.; G. B. Desken, O.; W. A. Bacon, Financier; A. H. Carver, Receiver; J. N. Clark, I. W., and G. W. Clodfelter, O. W.

Puxico Lodge, A. F. & A. M., was organized under a dispensation in January, 1888, with W. H. Hickman, W. M.; J. W. Fristoe, S. W., and T. S. Hickman, J. W.

New Lakeville is another village of recent origin, on the line of the Cape Girardeau Southwestern Railroad, in Stoddard County. It has three general stores, three hotels, two family groceries, a large stave factory, two corn mills, a church and a schoolhouse.

Kennett was laid out in 1846, near a village of the Delaware Indians, under the chief Chilliticoux, by which name it was known until 1849, when the Legislature changed it to Butler. A year or two later it received its present name. The first store was opened in a house on the north side of the public square, by Elbert C. Spiller, who remained for several years, but finally returned to Illinois, from which State he came. For a time he was in partnership with James Cude. They were succeeded by A. M. Davis & J. R. McCullough, John S. Houston, John H. Marsh and Campbell Wright. At the close of the war W. F. Shelton began business, and has since been one of the leading merchants of the county. The business of the town at the present time consists of general stores by T. E. Baldwin & Co., Tatum Bros., Phillips & Co., S. S. White & Co., a drug store by A. B. Mobley, a family grocery store by G. W. Huskey, a gristmill and cotton-gin by D. H. Moore, and a gristmill by Fuller Ballard.

The first courthouse was a log building, erected on the public square in 1847. It was destroyed during the war, and about 1870 a large frame building was begun. It was scarcely completed when it was burned with all its contents. A log jail was also built in 1847, and another at the close of the war. The latter was poorly constructed, and in 1882 the present frame building, furnished with Pauley Bros.' cells, was erected.

The first paper published at Kennett was the Dunklin County Herald, established in 1870, at about the same time the Missouri Democracy was removed from Cape Girardeau to Clarkton, and in January, 1871, the two were consolidated and published at Kennett.

The next newspaper in Kennett was the Enterprise. It was established at Clarkton in 1872, by Albert & Baldwin, as the Clarkton Advertiser. In a short time it was purchased by Charles E. Stokes, who in September, 1874, enlarged it, and changed the name to the Enterprise, which in 1876 was removed to Kennett, and about the close of the year suspended. In October, 1877, the Dunklin County Advocate was established at Clarkton by W. R. McDaniel, but very soon after the office was taken to Kennett, and for a time it was published by J. W. Baldwin. He was succeeded by Frank Sanders, who conducted it for a few months. In 1886 the Clipper, previously published at Malden, was removed to Kennett, and the publication continued for about a year. It was then suspended, but it has recently been revived by Mr. R. H. Jones, publisher of the Dexter Enterprise-Messenger.

Pioneer Lodge No. 165, I. O. O. F., of Kennett, was chartered May 22, 1867. Among the original members were W. G. Bragg, Sr., L. T. Bragg and E. G. Rathbun. There are now thirty-two members, with T. N. McHaney, N. G., and Robert F. Sanders, Secretary.

Clarkton was founded about 1860, and named in honor of Henry E. Clark, a contractor on the pole or plank road between Clarkton and Weaverville. The first settler on the site of the town was Dr. Skaggs, who sold out to a man named Parker. Parker sold his interest to John Timberman, who with a partner named Muse opened the first store.

Clarkton now has a population of about 300, and is one of the most pleasantly situated villages in Southeast Missouri. It has a good school building, three churches, six stores and a gristmill.

Malden, the largest town in Dunklin County, is situated on the Texas, Arkansas & St. Louis Railroad. It was laid out in 1877, under the direction of Maj. George B. Clark. The first house was built the same year, by S. W. Spiller and Daniel Haynes, and occupied by a store furnishing supplies for the railroad then building. It is now occupied by Mr. Yearwood. The first regular merchant was James Gregory, who opened a store in the house now occupied by Gregory & Gardner. Succeeding merchants were Jackson & Erlich, W. M. Harkey and Sisel & Plaut.

In 1879 the Dunklin County Advocate, a newspaper previously published at Kennett, was removed to Malden by Charles E. Stokes, and its publication continued under the name of the Malden Clipper. It was published by successive owners until the spring of 1886, when it was returned to Kennett, and was succeeded by the Dunklin County News, which is now published by John P. Allen and edited by R. G. Sandidge.

The following individuals and firms represent the mercantile interests of Malden: J. S. Levi & Co., Squires & Laswell, Decker & Co., Gregory & Gardner, Davis & Co. and Mr. Yearwood, general merchandise; O. M. Wallace, hardware and furniture; Malden Stove and Implement Store; H. P. Kinsolving, E. Mayes & Co., G. T. Van Cleve and Dr. F. M. Wilkins, drugs. There are also five cotton-gins, a planing-mill operated by H. B. Spooner, and a cornmill by Gillen Hopper.

Malden Lodge No. 406, A. F. & A. M., was organized in 1879, with Daniel Haynes as the first Worshipful Master. In 1881 a hall was built, in connection with a church and schoolhouse, but in July, 1882, it was destroyed by a cyclone. Since that time, however, another hall has been purchased.

Cotton Hill Lodge No. 306, I. O. O. F., was organized in 1872 at Cotton Hill, with Col. T. H. Mauldin as N. G.; Garrett Weaver, V. G.; D. R. Cox, Sec., and R. C. Allen, Treasurer. It was removed to Malden in 1878, and is now in a prosperous condition.

Malden was incorporated at the April term of the county court, 1878. The first trustees elected were Daniel Haynes, chairman; James Gregory, S. W. Spiller, Samuel B. Dennis and J. P. Laswell.

Hornersville, a post village in the southern part of Dunklin County, was established about 1840 by William H. Horner, who opened a store there. A Masonic lodge, Hornersville Lodge No. 215, was organized prior to the war, with William Horner as the first Worshipful Master. After the war it was removed to Cotton Plant, where a chapter and a council were organized and maintained for several years. The latter have been dissolved, but the lodge is still in a prosperous condition. Utopia Lodge No. 283, I. O. O. F., is also situated at Cotton Plant.

Cotton Plant is a postoffice four miles north of Hornersville, founded by Judge Langdon. It contains three or four dwellings, a store, and a schoolhouse and church, with a Masonic hall in the second story.

Gayoso.—The commissioners appointed to locate the seat of justice for Pemiscot County were Albion Crow, of Scott County; William Sayres, of Mississippi County, and William S. Mosely, of New Madrid. They met on the 23d of April, 1851, and purchased of James A. McFarland fifty acres of land, which was laid out by William Bigham, and named Gayoso, in honor of the Spanish governor of Louisiana, Don Manuel Gayoso. The first house was built by Sanford Jackson in 1854. It is still standing, and is now close to the river, although when it was built the river was three-fourths of a mile away. The next house was built by Charles A. Kimball, near the northwest corner of town. The first business house was built by Warrington & Purnell, of New Madrid, who opened a branch store in it in 1854. It is now occupied by Henry Madden. Warrington & Purnell after about two years were succeeded by Benjamin Sellers, who continued in business until the war. John H. Kelly sold goods in the house now occupied by Dolly Dorris. In 1856 Wade H. Spencer built the Star Hotel building, and in a short time sold it to A. C. Foust. In 1859 a schoolhouse, a little frame building, covered with oak boards, was built near where the cotton-gin now stands. The first teacher was an Englishman named Francis Baxter. Before that time schools had been taught in the courthouse.

The first physicians resident in Gayoso were Robert E. Cloud and James A. McFarland. The first regular graduate of a medical college in the county was Dr. John H. Alexander, who came from Point Pleasant in 1858.

The Gayoso Democrat was established in May, 1871, by B. H. & T. S. Adams. It was a six-column folio, and was published at Cape Girardeau until July, 1871. In August, 1872, W. S. Carleton became the publisher, and Maj. G. W. Carleton, editor. It was thus continued until November 22, 1875, when the name was changed to the Southeast Missouri Statesman. It has since changed hands several times, and is now again under the able editorial management of Maj. George W. Carleton. In 1879 the old name was resumed.

Justice Lodge No. 399, I. O. O. F., was organized at Caruthersville about 1882, and removed to Gayoso in 1887. Gayoso was incorporated by an act of the Legislature passed February 21, 1861, but the municipal government was scarcely inaugurated when the war began. In 1872 George W. Carleton drafted a new charter, and John P. Stancil secured its adoption by the Legislature.

Caruthersville is the largest and most important town in Pemiscot County. It was laid out near the site of the old village of Little Prairie, by G. W. Bushey and Col. J. H. Walker, in 1857, and named in honor of Hon. Sam. Caruthers, of Madison County. Among the first merchants were Harbison & Christie and Davidson & Edwards.

Caruthersville Lodge No. 461, A. F. & A. M., was organized in 1870, with Thomas J. Bracken as W. M.

Poplar Bluff.—The commissioners appointed to locate the seat of justice in Butler County were John Stevens, of Cape Girardeau County; William Henly, of Stoddard County, and Martin Sandlin, of Ripley County. The last named died before any action was taken, and the vacancy was filled by the appointment of John F. Martin, of Ripley County. The commissioners fixed upon 160 acres of land on the banks of Black River that had not yet been entered from the Government. The county court thereupon appointed Obadiah Epps, commissioner, to receive small loans from individuals, to raise a sum sufficient to pay for the land. Among the contributors to this fund were T. C. Catron, S. R. Harviell and Allen McElmurry. The town was surveyed early in 1850, and the first sale of lots took place on May 17, followed by another in August. About this time a store was opened in a small cabin made of hickory poles, and standing on the corner of Second and Vine Streets. The proprietor was Charles S. Henderson, who died about 1874. The postoffice was established on February 27, 1850, with J. A. Gilley as postmaster. He was soon after succeeded by Jacob C. Blount, who kept the postoffice in a small cabin at the end of the old county bridge. Among the merchants of the new town, prior to the war, besides Henderson were Harviell & Rainbolt, Blount & Waugh, James M. Jennings and Thomas B. Price. The town grew very slowly, and in 1861 it is said there were not more than twelve or fifteen houses. In February, 1870, it was incorporated as a village by the county court, with B. R. Moore, John Snoddy, D. Kitchens, William C. Breeden and James J. Hise as trustees. In May, 1872, the main line of the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad was completed to Poplar Bluff, and about two years later the Cairo branch was finished. These roads, together with Black River, gave the town unexcelled shipping and manufacturing facilities, and its growth has since been steady and substantial. The greatest improvement has occurred since 1880. In that year the population was 791; now it is not less than four times that number. In 1880 J. N. Roberts & Co. established an extensive veneering factory, and now employ a large number of hands in the manufacture of veneering and fruit baskets. The Poplar Bluff Lumber and Manufacturing Company, established in 1883, and the Keystone Lumber and Land Company, established in 1882, are both extensively engaged in the manufacture of lumber. The mills of the latter company are situated on the railroad, three miles east of town. The F. G. Oxley Stave Company is the successor of the firm of Gilman & Reynolds. The factory is perhaps the largest of the kind in the State, and gives employment to more men than all the other industries of the town combined. The company pays for timber and expenses over $100,000 per year.

The remaining manufactories of Poplar Bluff are a planing-mill operated by L. B. Walker & Co., the Craven Pottery and the City Flour Mills. The mercantile interests are represented by the following firms: Ferguson & Wheeler, William F. Neal, Babcock & Randall, M. D. Treece, Peter Cohn and T. H. Moore & Co., dry goods and groceries; W. B. Adams, L. F. Quinn, William C. Graddy and Milton Wyatt, drugs; B. Duncan & Co., hardware; George Begley, wagon maker and hardware; Wright & Dalton, hardware and furniture; Charles Giese and Grafe Bros., merchant tailoring; Henry Schwaner, boots and shoes; John L. Clevlen and Johnson & Brill, jewelry; Murry & Quinn, G. C. Orchards, Lemuel Mills and G. L. Garitson, groceries.

The first newspaper published at Poplar Bluff was the Black River News, established in 1869, and edited by G. L. Poplin and G. T. Bartlett. The latter soon withdrew, and the paper was continued until 1874 as Poplin's Black River News. It then passed into the hands of W. T. Kitchen and George H. Kelly, who changed the name to the Headlight. It has since changed hands frequently. In 1877 George H. Crumb took charge of the paper, and changed the name to the Poplar Bluff Citizen, under which it has since continued. In 1875 the Black River Country New Era was established, but continued only a few months. In 1879 the Southeast Missourian appeared, and eighteen months later was consolidated with the Citizen. In 1882 John G. Wear and others began the publication of the Renovator, which about two years later was closed out by the Citizen, which had obtained an interest in the office. While in the hands of the sheriff the property was burned, but Mr. Wear purchased a new outfit, and resumed the publication. In December, 1887, the Renovator was purchased by the present editor, W. L. Oury, formerly proprietor of the West Plains Gazette. On April 1, 1888, George H. Crumb, a former editor of the Citizen, issued the first number of the Republic, a weekly, Republican in politics.

Poplar Bluff Lodge No. 179, I. O. O. F., was instituted in 1869, and for about ten years was very prosperous. It then began to decline, and for several years was suspended. An unsuccessful attempt was made to revive it in 1885, but in September, 1887, a reorganization was effected, with W. S. Randall as N. G.; W. A. Spence, V. G.; A. Frank, Treasurer, and A. W. Davidson, Secretary.

The first school in Poplar Bluff was established in 1869 by the Butler County Educational Society, the incorporators of which were Green L. Poplin, J. W. Baldwin, James Tombs, J. M. Henderson, J. M. Spence, B. F. Turner, J. S. Ferguson and G. T. Bartlett. The institution was known as the Black River Seminary, and was opened, with Prof. H. McKinnon as principal, in a two-story frame building erected for that purpose. The seminary was succeeded by the public schools, and in 1880 a new, two-story brick building costing $7,000 was erected. Four teachers are now employed in the white schools, and one in the colored school.

MILITARY RECORD.

Early Indian Outbreaks.—Under the Spanish Government each commandant of a post was required to organize the able-bodied male inhabitants into militia companies, that were to be ready for service whenever called upon. No regular troops were maintained, except small detachments at St. Louis and New Madrid.

Attack Upon St. Louis.—The first important service required of the militia of Ste. Genevieve, which at the time was the only company south of St. Louis, was to assist in the defense of the latter place in the year 1780, known as "L'Annie du Coup" (the year of the attack.) Early in that year rumors of a contemplated attack upon St. Louis by the Indians and British from Ft. Michilimacinae became prevalent, and Don Ferdinand Leyba, lieutenant-governor and the commandant of the post, sent an officer, Silvio Francisco Cortobona, to Ste. Genevieve for a company of militia. Sixty men were placed under the command of Charles Valle, a brother of the old commandant at Ste. Genevieve, and sent to St. Louis in a keel boat. On May 26, 1780, the expected attack was made by a force of nearly 1,500 Indians—Winnebagoes, Sioux and other tribes—under the leadership of a British officer. Gov. Leyba was intoxicated, and acted in the most shameful and cowardly manner. The citizens, however, made an energetic and resolute defense, and succeeded in repelling the enemy. Gov. Leyba had refused to supply the Ste. Genevieve company with ammunition, and by his orders endeavored to prevent the company from rendering any assistance during the fight. This placed them in a false position, and laid them open to the charge of cowardice, which has been made by some writers, but the following from the pen of Gen. F. A. Rozier is a true explanation of the affair:

About the time of the attack upon St. Louis the captain of the Ste. Genevieve company, seeing that he was deprived of powder by Lieut.-Gov. Leyba, sent five men to take three kegs of powder, which an old lady resident of the town had at the time, but did not wish to deliver up, insisting that they would do her no harm if she refused to give it up. They, however, conveyed the powder to headquarters. Capt. Vallé at this time, seeing the treachery of the lieutenant-governor, determined not to obey orders. While the Captain was temporarily absent from his headquarters, Leyba ordered the company to spike their guns, and to march up into a garret, and some of the men had partly obeyed the order, and it was about being executed by the whole company, when the brave captain of the Ste. Geneviève company came up, and, at once perceiving the treacherous intent of the order, refused, and said, 'Que son porte est près de son canon et non dans un grenier, et que si l'ennemi venait, il serait prêt à se défendre (that his post was near his cannon and not in a garret; if the enemy came that he would be ready to defend himself), and, standing to his post, he ordered his men to stand by him, and did all he could under the circumstances to aid the citizens of St. Louis when that post was attacked by the enemy.

It is a well-known fact that Lieut.-Gov. Leyba acted in bad faith, and was despised by all the inhabitants of St. Louis and Ste. Genevieve on account of his treacherous conduct, and feeling conscious of his own foul acts died shortly afterward, and it was thought that he terminated his life by poison. After the attack on St. Louis had failed the company returned to their home, Le vieux village de Ste. Genevieve.

Expedition to New Madrid.—In 1802 a citizen of New Madrid District named David Trotter was killed by Indians, who proved to be renegade Creeks. Five of them were captured and sent to New Orleans, where sentence of death was passed upon one of them by the governor-general. They were then returned to New Madrid, where the sentence was put into execution. They were conveyed to New Orleans in a galley commanded by Robert McCoy and stationed at New Madrid. While on the return trip between New Orleans and Natchez the condemned prisoner, in an attempt to escape, attacked McCoy, severely wounding him and crippling him for life, but was overpowered and put in irons. The execution was fixed for January 3, 1803, and was under the direction of the lieutenant-governor himself. That officer made the most extraordinary preparation for what seems to have been a very simple affair. About two weeks before the execution he set out from St. Louis for New Madrid. When he reached Ste. Genevieve he ordered the three companies of militia of the district under arms, and to join him on the expedition to New Madrid. At Cape Girardeau the militia of that post joined him, and when New Madrid was reached the three companies there increased the command to almost a regiment. All this force was employed to hang one poor Indian, who, with his four companions, was in irons and under guard.

On this expedition Col. De Lassus issued more orders than a modern general would issue on a month's campaign with an army of 20,000 men. His order book is in possession of his grandson, Placide De Lassus, of St. Francois County. A few only of the orders are here given, but they serve to illustrate with what punctiliousness the Spanish officers adhered to the military customs in which they had been trained. He directed the militia to recognize Don Francis Valle as second in command of the expedition, and assigned Don Joseph Pratte, Don Francis Valle, Jr., and Don Camille De Lassus to the command of companies. The last named was also made aid-de-camp and adjutant. Each company was required to furnish a mounted orderly as a body guard for the lieutenant-governor and commander-in-chief, and first corporals were required to replace sergeants when the latter were otherwise engaged.

ORDERS FOR THE MARCH OF THE EXPEDITION.

1. Men will be taken from each company to form the advance-guard, which will be commanded by each sergeant alternately.

2. This guard will have twelve axes, and will start every morning two hours before the main body of the militia; when, toward noon, they will have reached a suitable place for the noon-day halt, they will halt there and kindle two fires at the distance of an arpent apart.

3. On the arrival of the main body at the halting place, the vanguard will remount and proceed on to select the camping-ground for the night, where they will kindle five fires at the distance of half an arpent apart, taking care to select the said camp-ground early enough to enable the main body to reach it a half hour before sunset.

4. The vanguard will be released every morning, and will then form the rear-guard for the day.

5. The sergeant commanding the vanguard will proceed at a slow trot in good roads, and at a walk in bad places.

6. Should there be met in the route, which will be indicated to him, any serious impediment, such as rivers, creeks, bad crossings, etc., he will await the arrival of the main body of the militia.

7. Should he meet with any gathering of Indians, or other armed men, he will at once communicate the same to the chief commandant by mounted messenger.

8. In such bad places as may not require his waiting for the main body, as per article 6, he will expedite the passage of the said body as much as possible, by cutting the ice, if not strong enough to bear the horses, or bridging it with branches of trees or saplings to make the crossing practicable.

9. The main body of the detachment will start two hours after the vanguard, going on a good trot in good places, and at a walk in bad, and will maintain, as far as possible, the order of march which will be given them at starting.

10. In all cases when Messrs. the officers may command silence, or other orders, we doubt not that all who compose our detachment will be eager to obey.

11. Immediately on arriving at a camping ground a guard will be formed of seven men from each company, commanded by an officer, a sergeant and a corporal, who will place the sentinels that the location may require to guard against surprises and prevent the escape of any of the horses. The officer commanding the guard will report every morning, and his sergeant will immediately take the command of the advance guard.

12. The officers will carefully watch over their respective companies, and have the roll called every morning; they will see that no arms are loaded without orders, and make their report on each day before resuming the march.

13. If, while marching, the officer or sergeant at the rear perceives that they go too fast he will immediately notify the commandant at the front by passing the word to halt.

14. All the horses, packed or loose, with their drivers, will be placed between the detachment and the rear guard, allowing none to pass the front by the flanks nor remain in rear of the said guard.

15. The rear guard will keep at about two arpents in rear of the detachment, and will take care to pick up anything that may have been dropped. Should any one, from sickness or fault of his horse, be compelled to drop behind, the guard will at once notify the commander by a messenger.

16. They will see that no horse driver remain behind, their place on the march being between the detachment and the guard. Should anything fall or become disarranged they will call a halt, and lend assistance to remedy it, and then resume their march at the proper distance from the detachment. This order will be read to each company under arms, by its respective commanding officer, at the hour to be named by the second in command.

New Bourbon, February 11, 1862.

DON FRANCIS VALLE.

ORDER OF THE 17TH DECEMBER AT CAPE GIRARDEAU.

Don Louis Lorimier, commandant of Cape Girardeau, will be recognized as captain of the militia of said post, and Don William Lorimier as lieutenant of said militia, and they will be obeyed in all their orders, either verbal or written, in this expedition for the service of his Catholic Majesty.

Afterward Don Louis Lorimier, at the head of his militia, will designate the sergeants and corporals of his company.

From to-day an officer, a sergeant and a corporal of the company of the Cape, with twenty of her men, will set out as an advance guard one hour before the detachment; on arriving at the camping place they will kindle ten fires, at the distance of half an arpent from each other; they will clear the snow from around the fires, so that the militiamen may encamp there comfortably. The colors of the Cape Girardeau company will remain attached to its company, but it will be placed in the center of the detachment, with a guard of two men from each company, who will surround it in the order in which we put them.

On arriving at each camping place, or settlement, the officer, Don Camille De Lassus, will repair to the fire of the vanguard of the detachment, and if in a settlement to the quarters of the commander-in-chief, where the guard will repair.

The eight ax-men of the company of the Cape will always march at the head of the main body of the detachment, a half arpent in advance, and when in line they will repair to the center of the detachment, where they will form themselves in the manner there indicated.

The companies will be formed as follows: The Ste. Genevieve company on the right, next in line that of New Bourbon, then that of Cape Girardeau, and then the Platin company, all according to the seniority of the settlements.

EXTRACTS FROM GENERAL ORDERS ISSUED AT NEW MADRID.

The guards and mounted orderlies will be relieved each day at 5 o'clock. For this purpose they will assemble at the fort, from which the adjutant, Don Camille De Lassus, will despatch them to their respective posts, and the duties, until new orders, will be as follows: The guard by the foot militia of New Madrid for the prisoners of the Mashkoux Nation will remain as at present. The color guard will consist of an officer, a sergeant, a corporal, and four men of the militia who came here. Each of the companies here united will send each day a mounted orderly to the quarters of said Maj. Don Camille De Lassus. The sergeants and the corporals of the companies who came here will, alternately, every two days, take their men to the fort, to be present at distribution of the rations which will be made them for themselves and their horses. The commandants of companies will take care to read every day, at the roll-call, the present order and all those that I may give in future.

It will be made known to the militia of this post of New Madrid the officers of the arriving detachments, as follows:

Don Francis Valle, captain commanding, Ste. Genevieve company, second in command.

Don Louis Lorimier, commanding, Cape Girardeau company.

Don Joseph Pratte, lieutenant commanding, Ste. Genevieve company.

Don Francis Valle, sub-lieutenant commanding, Platin company.

Don Camille De Lassus, lieutenant, New Bourbon, aid-de-camp.

Don William Lorimier, lieutenant, Cape Girardeau.

Don William Strader, standard bearer.

CHARLES DE HAULT DE LASSUS.

The officers of the companies of cavalry will assemble their respective companies to-morrow at 9 o'clock A. M., near their quarters; they will order arms to be loaded, and to take the necessary precaution to strictly charge every man to exercise the greatest possible care that his piece is not discharged involuntarily without orders, and as soon as the companies are formed, each will advise me of it by an orderly he will despatch to me.

Each commandant of said companies will await the cannon shot which will be fired from the fort as the signal of assembling, and will march his company, according to orders previously given him, to form the line, and the officers, sergeants and corporals will take their positions as previously ordered.

The Adjutant, Don Camille De Lassus, will detail a guard of a sergeant, a corporal, and one man from each company, to go for the standard, with drums beating, which having brought they will place it opposite the cavalry in the center.

When he will be commanded to carry the order to the officer of the prisoner's guard, to deliver up the criminal Tewanaye to the commandant of the detachment of the Louisiana regiment, he will repair there, and cause his shackles to be taken off by the blacksmith he will find there for the purpose, and will give the order to the officer of the guard to immediately place the four other prisoners on the gallery, to enable them to witness the execution of Tewanaye.

He will place himself at the head of the regiment of Louisiana, which he will march opposite the standard, where the sentence of Tewanaye will be read by Don Pierre Antoine Laforge, adjutant of the militia of this post, public writer, and appointed in that capacity for the instruction of said prisoners, which sentence will be interpreted to them by the interpreter.

Immediately following the prisoner will be conducted in the same manner to the place appointed, and there shot to death by the detail from the garrison for the purpose. The corpse will be placed in the coffin, and carried by the soldiers in the garrison to the place of interment; the detachment of cavalry will then form by fours on the right, at the command of the adjutant, and will then pass opposite the grave, drums beating, and form as in the first position. The standard will then be returned, in the manner it was brought, to its place of keeping. The senior officer, having brought back the detachment, will give an order for each company to return to its place of meeting near its quarters, where they may dismount for a brief period, leaving their horses saddled ready to remount at the first order, under the command of the sergeants and corporals of the respective companies, the officers having to assemble at my quarters to be present and witness the release of the other four prisoners, to which end the senior officer will carry the order to the officer of the guard to take off their shackles, and send them with one-half of his guard to my quarters, to be restored to the Chief Agypousetchy of the Mashkoux Nation."

CHARLES DE HAULT DE LASSUS.

EXTRACT FROM AN ORDER FOR THE BETTER DISCIPLINE AND ORGANIZATION OF THE MILITIA OF NEW MADRID.

Commencing on the next Sunday, Mr. Henry Pyroux, commandant of this post, will assemble all of the militiamen, including therein all persons able to bear arms, from the age of fourteen years up to fifty and not above, as I perceived on my arrival here children of not more than eight or nine years, who were on guard of the Mashkoux prisoners, and each captain, or commandant of each company, will organize his own in the best manner possible, and he will make them understand that, no matter at what hour it may be, at the signal of assembling, which will be the same promulgated in our order of — —, they will immediately report themselves at the place indicated for that purpose.

The following officers were appointed at this time:

Richard F. Waters, captain; George K. Reagan, lieutenant; John B. Barsaloux, ensign of the company of cavalry. John La-vallee, captain; Pierre A. Laforge, lieutenant; John Charpentier, ensign of the first company of infantry.

Robert McCoy, captain; Joseph Hunot, lieutenant; John Hart, ensign of the second company of infantry.

GENERAL ORDER TO TAVERN KEEPERS, TRADERS AND DRAM-SHOP KEEPERS AT ALL THE POSTS OF THE UPPER LOUISIANA.

Mr. Charles De Hault De Lassus, Lieutenant-Colonel of the Regiment of Louisiana, and Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Louisiana and Dependencies:

In virtue of strict orders conveyed to us from his lordship, the Governor-General of this province, to entirely eradicate the prime cause of all the disorders occasioned by liquors sold by tavern keepers, dram-shop keepers, traders and other inhabitants to the Indians, in spite of the reiterated prohibitions of our predecessors and ourselves, and without the fines which have been paid by the delinquents serving as an example to prevent, it being generally proven that the said Indians commit no excesses but when drunk. This is proven by the assassination of Mr. Trotter by the Indians, to whom he had traded liquor. All this compels us to use the most vigorous measures for the public tranquility.

1st. At each post there shall be but a certain number of tavern and dram-shop keepers that we will appoint, and who shall be persons of good conduct and devoted to the Government; these under no pretext can either sell or give liquor to Indians or slaves.

They will give immediate notice of the least disturbance at their house which may lead to disorder, to the commandant or nearest syndic, of its occurrence, so that he may apply the most prompt remedy. And all other persons than those who shall be authorized to keep tavern or dram-shop, who shall be found to have sold liquor, will undergo, for the first offense, three days' imprisonment and $2 fine; the second offense, $50 fine and fifteen days' imprisonment, and for a third offense they shall be sent to New Orleans, under safe conduct, at their own cost and expense.

2d. Every person whomsoever, either keeper of tavern or dram-shop, or any other who shall be found to have given or sold liquor to Indians, will be at once arrested, put in irons, and sent under escort of a detachment of militia, at his cost and expense, to New Orleans, and his effects will be seized and sequestered until the decision of his lordship, the Governor-General.

3d. All commanders of every post will be held responsible to the Government for the least neglect of the articles above, and of the least negligence in listening to the complaints which may be made to him on the subject, and to make the strictest inquiry and investigation to ascertain the truth.

4th. For the post of New Madrid, one single tavern being sufficient, Mr. John B. Olive will be the only one who will have the privilege of selling and putting off liquors, in conformity to present regulations, and for the convenience of travelers on the road to Illinois, in this district, Mr. Edward Robertson will have the right to sell and put off liquors, in conforming strictly to present regulations, and at the Little Prairie, Mr. Charles Guilbault, etc.

5th. The two tavern keepers above named will pay per annum such sums as a tax that the Governor-General may deem just, to be applied to the construction of a prison at this post.

This order will be translated into English by the interpreter of the King, Mr. J. Charpentier, published, and posted up in the public places of this post, and at the doors of the tavern keepers above named, and a copy will be sent to each district dependent upon this post.

ORDER ISSUED JANUARY 6, 1803.

The militia of the upper posts, here assembled, will present themselves at 3 o'clock P. M. to receive their rations to Cape Girardeau; to-morrow, at 10 o'clock A. M., they will assemble in the street opposite the colors, and, as soon as formed, we will start for our first camp at the hole. An officer, a sergeant, a corporal, and seven men from each company will start at 9 o'clock A. M., to prepare the encampment in the same manner as in coming.

The officers will be careful to have gathered up the axes brought with us, and to have them delivered to the vanguard.

The main guard for this day will be detailed from the company of mounted men of this post, and will comprise a corporal and four men, who will not patrol the village, but only an armed sentinel on duty day and night.

CHARLES DE HAULT DE LASSUS.

When Col. De Lassus turned over the government of Upper Louisiana to Capt. Stoddard he sent him the following communication concerning the Mashcoux Indians:

MR. AMOS STODDARD, CAPTAIN OF ARTILLERY AND FIRST CIVIL COMMANDANT OF UPPER LOUISIANA,

Sir:—I think it essential, for the measure you may probably take for the safety and tranquility of these inhabitants, to inform you that there exists in these parts, since nearly ten years, a party of vagabond robbers of the Mashcoux Nation, or self-styled Talapousa Creeks, expelled from their tribe, and not daring to return on account of the crimes they there committed, and who, since that time, have been wandering about on both the east and the west banks of the river, scattered along this side from New Madrid to the upper waters of the Meramec, and constantly committing barbarities in stealing, killing, violating, or burning houses.

In the year 1802 they carried their audacity to the extent of killing an inhabitant of New Madrid named David Trotter, and afterward burnt his house. Some time thereafter this same party, to the number of five, were captured through the watchfulness and vigilance of Mr. Louis Lorimier, commandant of Cape Girardeau, who went with a detachment of militia of his post and took them in custody, since which time I had them taken to New Madrid, where they were detained as prisoners, guarded by the militia of that post, until the decision of the Governor-General, who subsequently sent me his orders to execute, by shooting, the principal culprit, named Tewanaye, with all the necessary care and preparation, as an example, usual in similar cases, and which orders I executed in January of the past year, 1803, in presence of the four other culprits and one of their chiefs, named Aypulethey, and one of consideration called Kaskaloua. This sentence, after some representations of these two chiefs, without bitterness, was finally put in execution with their own consent; and after they had again admitted in full council that it was but an act of well-merited justice, and that their principal chief would be satisfied with it—as it is stated in the copy of the sentence of execution which I transmit you herewith, and which is verified by a party of their nation who came to accompany the chiefs of said nation to collect the balance of this gang of vagabonds—as you will see by the official statement appended hereto of the council held by the commandant of New Madrid, Mr. John Lavalley, in which the chief very clearly says to run after and chastise them, and cut off their ears, and if they cannot be caught to fire on them as on deer.

Sir, yours, etc.,

CHARLES DE HAULT DE LASSUS.

From the acquisition of Upper Louisiana until 1811 there was little difficulty with the Indians. In that year, however, instigated by the English, they began to commit outrages upon the most exposed settlements. During the following winter murders and other depredations became more frequent all along the frontier, from Ft. Madison to St. Charles. The militia of St. Charles District, under Col. Kibby, was called out, and afforded some protection, but it was inadequate to the demands. Early in May, 1812, a convocation of the chiefs of the Little Osages, Sacs, Shawnese, Delawares and other tribes, was held at St. Louis, and with Gen. Clarke they went to Washington, but Tecumseh's influence neutralized the effect of the visit, and on the 26th of the following June a council of the Winnebagoes, Kickapoos, Miamis, Sacs, Foxes, Iowas, Sioux, Pottawattomies and some of the Shawnese was held, and they decided to go upon the war path. The Shawnese and Delawares were generally neutral, or were allies of the settlers. As soon as war was determined upon, murders and outrages were multiplied on all the northwestern frontier. Troops were called for, and several companies of rangers were organized in Missouri. As most of the depredations in the territory were committed in St. Charles District, a number of forts were built there, and at these forts the troops rendezvoused. One of the first companies recruited south of the Missouri River was raised in Cape Girardeau District, by Andrew Ramsey, Jr., in the spring of 1813. The officers were Andrew Ramsey, captain; James Morrison, first lieutenant; Peter Craig, second lieutenant; Drakeford Gray, third lieutenant; William Ramsey, ensign; Wilson Able, Edward Spear, John Giles, John Gray and James Ramsey, sergeants; Daniel Harklerood, George Simpson, Willis Flannagan, Michael Ault, Alexander St. Scott and Edward Tanner, corporals, and Solomon Fossett, trumpeter. The extent of the service of this company could not be ascertained, but it is not thought to have been extensive. In the summer of 1814 Gen. Henry Dodge, of Ste. Genevieve, got together a force of about 300 mounted infantry, including forty or fifty Shawnese Indians. His force consisted of Capt. John Thompson's company from St. Louis, Capt. Abraham Daugherty's company from Cape Girardeau, Capt. Cooper's company from the Boone's Lick settlement, Capt. Bernard Pratte's company from Ste. Genevieve, and the Indians under the especial direction of Capt. J. B. St. Gem. They marched to the upper settlements in St. Charles District, where they were met by a company under the command of Edward Hempstead, who had ascended the Missouri in boats. The whole body of troops then proceeded to the camp of the Miamis, a little below that of the Osages on the south side of the Missouri. The Indians had deserted the camp, and scattered into the woods, but they were soon collected to the number of 152—men, women and children—and taken to St. Louis. From there they were sent to their nation on the Wabash. The Cape Girardeau and St. Louis companies went on to Cape au Gris, thence returned to their homes. Capt. Daugherty's company was mustered into service on the 15th of August for sixty days, their time expiring on October 12. The following were the lieutenants and non-commissioned officers of this company: Medad Randol, first lieutenant; Andrew Patterson, second lieutenant; Robert Buckner, third lieutenant; Frederick Keep, ensign; Michael Rodney, William Cox, James Thompson, Benjamin Anthony, sergeants; Jacob Yount, Henry Shaner, Hall Hudson, John Davis, Nero Thompson and John Ezell, corporals.

In May and June, 1814, there was a company of mounted rangers recruited by Peter Craig, of Cape Girardeau County, who, with many of the company, had served under Capt. Ramsey the previous year. The company was enlisted for one year for service on the frontiers of Missouri and Illinois, and was attached to Col. William Russell's regiment. As it was this company which fought the battle of the "Sink Hole," and did much other arduous service, the official muster roll is here inserted: Peter Craig, captain; Drakeford Gray, first lieutenant; Wilson Able, second lieutenant; Edward Spear, third lieutenant; John Giles, ensign; John Rodney, Enos Randol, Daniel Harklerood, William Fugate and William Blakeney, sergeants; Abraham Letts, Perry W. Wheat, Jeremiah Able, William McCarty, Charles Sexton and Thomas S. Rodney, corporals.

The privates were James Atkinson, John Able, Stephen Byrd, Jonathan Brickey, John Brown, Tessant Barkume, James Brown, William B. Bush, George P. Bush, Peter Barrado, Francois Baraboe, Thomas Boyce, Burrell Castly, John Cameron, Charles Cardinal, William Crump, John Cooper, Jesse Cochran, Baptiste Cotie, Alexander Cotie, James Cowan, Hugh Dowlin, Elias Davis, Ludwell Davis, John Dotson, Samuel Foster, Able Galland, Alexander Giboney, Louis Guliah, Charles Hamilton, Louis Heneaux, Abijah Highsmith, John Houk, Benjamin Hail, John Holcomb, James Hamilton, Frederick Hector, Thomas Hail,

The company was completed and mustered into service on the 2d of July, and was engaged in guarding the frontiers when the battle of the "Sink Hole" occurred. This battle was fought in what is now Lincoln County not far from Cap au Gris. The following is an account of the battle furnished by Col. John Shaw to the Wisconsin Historical Society.*

"Capt. Peter Craig commanded at Fort Howard. About noon five of the men went out of the fort to Byrne's deserted house on the bluff, about one-fourth of a mile below the fort, to bring in a grindstone. In consequence of back water from the Mississippi they went in a canoe, and on their return were fired on by a party supposed to be fifty Indians, who were under shelter of some brush that grew along at the foot of the bluff near Byrne's house, and about fifteen rods distant from the canoe at that time. Three of the whites were killed and one mortally wounded, and as the water was shallow the Indians ran out and tomahawked their victims. The people of the fort ran out and fired on the Indians across the back water, a few inches deep, while another party of about twenty-five ran to the right of the water with a view of intercepting the Indians, who seemed to be making toward the bluff or high plain west and northwest of the fort.

*Col. Shaw was a hunter and explorer. He relates that in 1809 he obtained a permit to search for gold, and taking Peter Spour and William Miller he set out from the extreme western settlements of Cape Girardeau at the head of St. Francois. They crossed a branch of White River, which he named Current River, and the Black and Spring Rivers, and traversed Western Arkansas and Missouri. Returning Col. Shaw participated in the Indian campaigns.

The party of twenty-five and Capt. Craig's soon united. On the bluff was the cultivated field and deserted residence of Benjamin Allen. The field was about forty rods across, beyond which was pretty thick timber. Here the Indians made a stand, and here the fight began. Both parties fired, and as the fight waxed warm the Indians slowly retired as the whites advanced. After the fight had been going on perhaps some ten minutes the whites were reinforced by Capt. David Musick, of Cape au Gris, with about twenty men. He had been on a scout toward the head of Cuiver River, and had returned to within about one-half a mile of the fort and about one and a half miles of the scene of the conflict, and had stopped with his men to graze their horses, when, hearing the firing, they instantly remounted and dashed toward the place of battle. Dismounting in the edge of the timber on the bluff, and hitching their horses, they rushed through a part of the Indian line, and shortly after the enemy fled, a part bearing to the right of the sink hole toward Bob's Creek, but the most of them taking refuge in the sink hole, which was close by where the main fighting had taken place. About the time the Indians were retreating Capt. Craig exposed himself about four feet beyond his tree and was shot through the body and fell dead. James Putney was killed before Capt. Craig, and perhaps one or two others. Before the Indians retired to the sink hole the fighting had become animated; the loading was done quickly and shots rapidly exchanged, and when one of our party was killed or wounded it was announced aloud. The sink hole was about sixty feet in length, and from twelve to fifteen feet in width, and ten or twelve feet deep. Near the bottom, on the southeast side, was a shelving rock under which perhaps some fifty or sixty persons might have sheltered themselves. At the northeast end of the sink hole the descent was quite gradual, the other end, much more abrupt, and the southeast side almost perpendicular, and the other side about like the steep roof of a house.

"On the southeast side the Indians, as a farther protection in case the whites should rush up, dug under the shelving rock with their knives. On the sides and in the bottom of the sink hole were some bushes which also served as something of a screen for the Indians. Capt. Musick and his men took part on the northeast side of the sink hole, and others occupied other positions surrounding the enemy. As the trees approached close to the sink hole, these served in part to protect our party. Finding we could not get a good opportunity to dislodge the enemy, as they were best protected, those of our men who had families at the fort gradually went there, not knowing but a large body of Indians might seize the favorable occasion to attack the fort while the men were mostly away engaged in the exciting contest. The Indians in the sink hole had a drum made of a skin stretched over the section of a hollow tree, on which they beat quite constantly, and some Indian would shake a rattle called She-shuqui, probably a dried bladder with pebbles within, and even for a moment would venture to thrust his head in view, with his hand elevated, shaking his rattle and calling out, "peash! peash!" which was understood to be a sort of defiance, or, as Black Hawk, who was one of the party, says in his account of that affair, a kind of bravado to come and fight them in the sink hole. When the Indians would creep up and shoot over the rim of the sink hole they would instantly disappear, and while they sometimes fired effectual shots they in turn became occasionally the victims. From about 1 to 4 o'clock P. M. the firing was incessant, our men generally reserving their fire till an Indian should show his head, and all of us were studying how we could more effectually attack and dislodge the enemy. At length Lieut. Spears suggested that a pair of cart wheels, axle and tongue, which were seen at Allen's place, be obtained, and a moving battery constructed. The idea was entertained favorably, and an hour or more was consumed in its construction. Some oak floor puncheons from seven to eight feet in length were made fast to an axle in an upright position and port holes made through them. Finally the battery was ready for trial, and was sufficiently large to protect some half a dozen or more men. It was moved forward slowly, and seemed to attract the particular attention of the Indians, who had evidently heard the knocking and pounding connected with its manufacture, and who now frequently popped up their heads to make momentary discoveries, and it was at length moved up to within less than ten paces of the brink of the sink hole on the southeast side. The upright plank did not reach to the ground within some eighteen inches, the men calculating to shoot beneath the lower end at the Indians, but the latter from their position had a decided advantage of this neglected aperture, for the Indians, shooting beneath the battery at an upward angle, would get shots at the Whites before the latter could see them. The Indians also watched the port holes, and directed some of their shots at them. Lieut. Spears was shot dead through the head, and his death was much lamented, as he had proved himself an intrepid officer. John Patterson was wounded in the thigh, and some others were also wounded behind the battery. Having failed in its design, the battery was abandoned after sundown. Our hope all along had been that the Indians would emerge from their covert and attempt to retreat to where we supposed their canoes were left, some three or four miles distant, in which case we were firmly determined to rush upon them and endeavor to cut them off totally. The men generally evinced the greatest bravery during the whole engagement.

"Night was now coming on, and the reports of half a dozen guns in the direction of the fort by a few Indians, who rushed out of the woods skirting Bob's Creek not more than forty rods from the north end of the fort, was heard. This movement on the part of the few Indians who had escaped when the others took refuge in the sink hole was evidently designed to divert the attention of the whites and alarm them for the safety of the fort, and thus effectually relieve the Indians in the sink hole. This was the result, for Capt. Musick and men retired to the fort, carrying the dead and wounded, and made every preparation to repel a night attack.

"The men at the fort were mostly up all night, ready for resistance, if necessary. There was no physician at the fort, and much effort was made to set some broken bones. There was a well in the fort, and provision and ammunition to sustain a pretty formidable attack. The women were greatly alarmed, pressing their infants to their breasts, fearing they might not be permitted to behold another morning's light, but the night passed away without seeing or hearing an Indian. The next morning a party went to the sink hole and found the Indians gone. They had carried off all their dead and wounded except five dead bodies left on the northwest side. From all signs it appeared some thirty of them were killed or wounded. Lieut. Gray reported eight of our party killed, one missing and five wounded. The dead were buried near the fort, and a man sent to St. Charles for medical assistance. Lieut. Gray assumed command."

The killed in Capt. Craig's company, besides himself and Lieut. Spear, were Alexander Giboney, James Putney, Antoine Pelkey, Hubbard Tayon and Francois Lemmey. The wounded were John Patterson, Benjamin Hail and Abraham Letts. The term of service of the greater portion of the company expired within ten days after the battle, and the last were mustered out on the 19th of June, 1815.

Col. Shaw further relates that early in the spring of 1815*, while the Indians were still hostile, the young men of Cape Girardeau, Ste. Genevieve and parts of St. Charles and St. Louis Counties, to the number of 750, formed themselves into a regiment with a view of offering their services for the protection of Upper Louisiana. Meeting at Cape Girardeau, John Shaw was elected colonel, and Levi Roberts, major. Two hundred and fifty of the regiment met at Portage des Sioux, about April, 1815, and, taking command, Col. Shaw marched them up the Mississippi to Rock Island, and thence across toward the Illinois River. Before reaching their destination they were met by an express from Gen. Clark stating that hostilities were over.

Recruits for the Mexican War.—Southeast Missouri did not take a notable part in the Mexican War. Only three or four companies were recruited for that service, but many individuals from the various counties joined commands from other portions of Missouri, and from other States. Early in the summer a company was organized at Ste. Genevieve, by Capt. Thomas M. Horine, and marched to Fort Leavenworth, where it became a part of the Second Missouri Regiment, commanded by Sterling Price. The regiment set out for Santa Fe, which place it reached on September 28. January 24, 1847, it encountered 2,000 of the enemy at Canada, and repulsed them with slight loss. A second encounter took place on the 29th, and on February 4 the regiment attacked the combined force of Mexicans and Indians in a strongly fortified position at Taos. The battle lasted all day, resulting at night in the surrender of the enemy. The total loss of the regiment in these engagements was only fifteen killed, and forty-seven wounded.

On August 23, 1846, Capt. Firmin A. Rozier organized a company of 115 men from Ste. Genevieve and Perry Counties, called the "South Missouri Guards." They were recruited for service in California, but when they reached Fort Leavenworth, where the regiment was organized, the season was so far advanced that no effort was made to cross the plains, and they remained at Fort Leavenworth.

Early in 1847 a company was recruited at Fredericktown, and organized and mustered into service at Jefferson Barracks, with Robert H. Lane as captain. It was enlisted for the war, and was organized as Company I of the Third Missouri Mounted Volunteers, of which John Ralls was elected colonel, and Robert H. Lane, lieutenant-colonel. Upon the promotion of Capt. Lane John Haley was elected to succeed him. The regiment was ordered to Fort Leavenworth, and thence marched for Mexico, by the way of Santa Fe and El Paso, and went into winter quarters at Chihuahua. On March 16, 1848, the regiment, with three other companies or detachments, constituting a force of about 600 men, fought a battle with the Mexicans under Gen. Frear at Santa Cruz. The latter were in the town and behind breast-works, but, in an engagement lasting from 9 o'clock in the morning until sundown, were defeated with a loss of 330 killed. Seven companies of the Third Regiment, of which Company I was one, were then stationed at Santa Cruz until the following July, when they were ordered to Independence, Mo., and in October were mustered out.

Civil War in Southeast Missouri.—The history of the Civil War in Southeast Missouri furnishes but few striking incidents. The conflict partook largely of the character of a guerrilla or partisan warfare, and, with two or three exceptions, there were no regularly planned and executed campaigns by regular troops.

At the beginning the most of the inhabitants of this portion of the State occupied that anomalous position of desiring to preserve the Union, but at the same time were opposed to the coercion of the seceding States. When, however, the alternative of union or disunion was presented, the majority went with the South. This was especially true of the lower counties, while in those having a large German population, as Cape Girardeau, Perry and Ste. Genevieve, the Union men were in the majority.

In May, 1861, the Legislature passed an act providing for the organization of the Missouri State Guards, and the Governor appointed N. W. Watkins, of Cape Girardeau County, brigadier-general to command in the First Military District, which embraced Southeast Missouri. Gen. Watkins was an able lawyer and politician, but he found himself totally unfitted for the duties of his new office, and he soon tendered his resignation, which was accepted. His successor was Gen. Jeff. Thompson, who had previously assisted in the organization of the militia in the vicinity of St. Joseph. His chief characteristic was a braggadocio manner, and he employed his talents in writing loud-sounding proclamations and orders. Upon assuming command he issued the following characteristic pronouncement:

MISSOURIANS! STRIKE FOR YOUR FIRESIDES AND YOUR HOMES!

HEADQUARTERS FIRST MILITARY DISTRICT MISSOURI STATE GUARDS. }
BLOOMFIELD, Mo., August 1, 1861. }

 To the People of Missouri:*

Having been elected to command the gallant sons of the First Military District of Missouri in the second war for independence I appeal to all whose hearts are with us immediately to take the field. By a speedy and simultaneous assault on our foes we can, like a hurricane, scatter them to the winds, while tardy action, like the gentle south wind, will only meet with northern frosts, and advance and recede, and, like the seasons, will be like the history of the war, and will last forever. Come now! Strike while the iron is hot! Our enemies are whipped in Virginia. They have been whipped in Missouri. Gen. Hardee advances in the center, Gen. Pillow on the right, and Gen. McCulloch on the left, with 20,000 brave Southern hearts to our aid. So, leave your plows in the furrow, your ox to the yoke, and rush like a tornado upon our invaders and foes to sweep them from the face of the earth, or force them from the soil of our State! Brave sons of the First District come and join us! We have plenty of ammunition, and the cattle on ten thousand hills are ours. We have 40,000 Belgian muskets coming, but bring your guns and muskets with you, if you have them; if not, come without them. We will strike our foes like a southern thunderbolt, and soon our camp fires will illuminate the Meramec and Missouri. Come, turn out!

JEFF. THOMPSON,

Brigadier-General Comd'g.

*Rebellion Record.

At about this time there was an attempt to put into operation a plan for an extensive campaign of Mississippi by the Confederates. There was to be a simultaneous advance of McCulloch in the west, Hardee in the center, and Pillow in the east. Gen. Hardee advanced to Greeneville with 5,000 men, while Gen. Pillow took possession of New Madrid. The invasion from this force, however, went no further. Gen. Thompson with his State Guards entered upon an active but somewhat desultory warfare, and, while he did not do any serious damage to the Federal army, succeeded in drawing the attention of a considerable force. On August 11, 1861, a detachment dashed into the village of Hamburg, Scott County, where there was a small body of Home Guards, killed one man, wounded five, and captured thirteen. On the 20th of the same month Col. Jason H. Hunter was sent out to develop the Federals in the vicinity of Bird's Point. At Charleston he met Col. Dougherty with the Twenty-second Illinois Infantry, and engaged him in a skirmish in the town, but was driven back in confusion. When he returned to Camp Hunter he was placed under arrest by Gen. Thompson for disobeying orders, his instructions having been not to engage the enemy.

In October Gen. Thompson with his entire force marched northward to Fredericktown, followed by a considerable force under Col. J. B. Plummer, from Cape Girardeau. Before the arrival of Plummer he left Fredericktown, and it was thought by the citizens of the town that he was in full retreat, and they so informed his pursuers. The latter at once turned to follow him, and when about a mile south of town they were met by Thompson in full force. He had marched only a mile or two on his retreat, and facing about had waited for their approach. During the fight that ensued neither side suffered serious loss. Gen. Thompson was driven back, and retreated in safety to Greeneville.

Meanwhile the Federal forces had not remained inactive. On July 17, 1861, B. Gratz Brown, with a regiment of three months' volunteers, was ordered to take possession of Pilot Knob, then the terminus of the St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railroad, where he remained until about the 8th of August, when he was relieved by Gen. U. S. Grant, with his Twenty-first Illinois Regiment. Gen. Grant at once prepared to take the offensive against Hardee at Greeneville, but when ready to begin active operations he was relieved by Gen. B. M. Prentiss. Prior to his arrival he had been appointed brigadier-general, but had not received his commission, which came a few days later. His headquarters were at the house of Col. James Lindsay, now the property of Judge J. W. Emerson, and the spot where he stood when the commission reached him is marked by a monument, recently erected by members of his old regiment.

At about the same time Col. Brown was ordered to take possession of Pilot Knob and Ironton, Col. Marsh, with the Twentieth Illinois, was ordered to Cape Girardeau, and as soon as possible thereafter the work of constructing fortifications was begun. Four forts, named, respectively, A, B, C and D, commanding the approaches to the town on all sides, were built. About the 1st of September Gen. U. S. Grant was appointed to the command of the district of Southeast Missouri, which also included Southern Illinois. He established temporary headquarters at Cape Girardeau, but three or four days later removed to Cairo, Ill. By order of the department commander he was first to take command of a combined expedition from Cairo and Bird's Point, and from Ironton for the capture of Jeff. Thompson. Gen. Prentiss had been ordered to move from Ironton to Cape Girardeau, and the forces at Cairo were to be ready to drop down the river to Belmont and march westward from that point. When Gen. Prentiss reached Jackson he found orders from Grant to halt his troops there, but, disregarding them, he pushed on to Cape Girardeau, where he was met by Grant, who ordered him to return his men to Jackson at once. He believed himself to be the ranking officer, and, feeling much aggrieved at being placed under one whom he considered his junior, he left his command when he had countermarched them to Jackson, and went to St. Louis. This put an end to the expedition against Thompson.

On September 4 Gen. Grant reached Cairo, where he found Col. R. J. Oglesby in command of the post. He at once relieved him, and placed him in command of the post at Bird's Point on the opposite side of the river. Two days later he took possession of Paducah, and placed Gen. C. F. Smith in command of the garrison there. During the next two months no movement of importance was made. Troops were constantly arriving at Cairo, and the time was spent in drilling and disciplining them. By the 1st of November Grant had an army of 20,000 men fairly well drilled but entirely inexperienced in war. On the 5th of November a telegram from St. Louis was received informing him that the enemy were reinforcing Price from Columbus, by the way of White River, and directing him, if possible, to prevent it. Col. Oglesby had been despatched with a force of nearly 3,000 men a day or two before in pursuit of an equally large body of Confederates, who were reported to be on the St. Francois River, about fifty miles to the west. Now Col. W. H. L. Wallace was sent with a regiment to overtake and reinforce Oglesby, and to change the direction of the expedition to New Madrid. At the same time Gen. C. F. Smith was ordered to make a demonstration on Columbus from Paducah, while Gen. Grant, with the remainder of his available force, amounting to 3,000 men, dropped down the river on steamers convoyed by two gun-boats to within about six miles of Columbus, where a few men were debarked to establish connection with the troops from Paducah. Early the next morning it was learned that the Confederates were crossing troops to Belmont to reinforce the camp at that place, and Grant resolved to push down the river, land on the Missouri side, capture and break up the camp and return.* About an hour after daylight he was debarking his troops on the west bank of the Missouri, about one and a half miles above Belmont. At 8 o'clock everything was in readiness for the advance. Two companies from each regiment were thrown forward as skirmishers, and in a short time they met the enemy. The engagement soon became general, and continued for about four hours, the Confederates falling back until finally compelled to take refuge below the river bank. Here the Federals forfeited an opportunity to secure a signal victory. As soon as they reached the deserted camp they threw down their arms and began plundering the tents, giving the enemy time to work along the river bank and get between them and their transports. It also gave them time to dispatch two boat loads of reinforcements from Columbus. Gen. Grant was powerless to control his men, until they found themselves in danger of being surrounded and cut off from retreat; they then formed in line and started for their boats, which were reached with but slight resistance from the enemy. A few shots were fired by the Confederates at the retreating boats, but no serious damage was done. The Union loss in this battle was 485 killed, wounded and missing, while the Confederate loss as reported by Gen. Polk was 105 killed, 419 wounded and 117 missing. This closed the campaign of 1861, and Gen. Grant set about preparing for his expedition against Forts Henry and Donelson.

In February, 1862, Gen. John Pope concentrated an army in Southeast Missouri for the capture of New Madrid, and Island No. 10, to which the Confederates from Columbus had retreated. Forts and earthworks had been constructed in the vicinity of New Madrid and Point Pleasant, and these were first reduced. This occupied the first two weeks in March. The only practicable point of attack on Island No. 10 was from the rear, and in order to make such an attack it was necessary to transfer the gunboats and transports, then above the island, below it. The river at this point makes a sharp bend, and it was decided to cut a canal across the narrow neck of the peninsula. As the river was high, and the bayous overflowed, the work consisted principally in cutting off trees and removing obstructions from the water, although in some places it was necessary to cut through solid earth. The work was begun on March 17, under the direction of Col. J. W. Bissell, of the First Missouri Engineers, and was completed on the 4th of April. The canal was twelve miles long, and for six miles it was cut through heavy timber, the trees being sawed off several feet under water. Through this canal were taken the transports and smaller boats, while two large gunboats, the "Carondelet" and "Pittsburg," under cover of darkness ran the batteries on the island. The former passed down on the night of the 4th, and the latter on the night of the 6th. The Confederate position was now untenable, and on the 7th they evacuated the island, and marched down the river to Tiptonville, Tenn., where, on April 9, they were surrounded and captured. The force surrendered consisted of 273 field and company officers and 6,700 privates. During the remainder of the year 1862, small detachments of militia and other troops kept up a desultory struggle in Southeast Missouri. One of the best of the Confederate officers was Col. W. L. Jeffers, who did much to harass the State Militia. He was a brave and skillful officer, and had seen service in the Mexican War. He is now a resident of Dexter, Mo. On April 6, 1862, he attacked a company of militia under Capt. William Flentze, near Jackson, and scattered them. On August 24, 1862, with 100 men he attacked four companies of the Twelfth Cavalry, Missouri State Militia, under Maj. B. F. Lazear, on Crooked Creek, in Bollinger County, and after a short fight drove them back. On May 16 of the same year he had a fight at Chalk Bluff, Ark., with a Wisconsin regiment, under Col. Ed. Daniels, and defeated them, with a loss of only two wounded. Col. Daniels, however, went on into Dunklin County, and captured the steamer "Daniel E. Miller," at Hornersville. He had previously, on May 11, had a skirmish about ten miles from Bloomfield, with four companies commanded by Col. Phelan, killing one man and capturing eleven.

On October 29, 1862, there was a skirmish at Clarkton, Dunklin County, between some Illinois troops sent out from Columbus, and Col. John M. Clark. The former captured about forty men and over sixty horses and retreated.

In April, 1863, Gen. Marmaduke with about 8,000 men made a raid into Southeast Missouri from Northern Arkansas. At Patterson, Wayne County, he attacked a small force of Federal cavalry, and drove them back toward Ironton. He then pushed on to Cape Girardeau, but, finding that post too well defended to risk an assault, he fired a few shots into the town and withdrew. He was followed by Gens. Davidson and Vandever, who pursued him into Arkansas.

Near the last of August, 1863, Col. R. G. Woodson with the Third Cavalry, Missouri State Militia, made a raid from Pilot Knob to Pocahontas, Ark., and captured Gen. Jeff. Thompson and his entire staff, all of whom were sent to Gratiot prison, St. Louis. From this time until the close of the war the military operations in Southeast Missouri, with the single exception of Price's raid, degenerated into a merciless guerrilla warfare, in which many citizens lost their lives at the hands of such bands as were led by Pope Congers, Timothy Reeves, Hilderbrandt and the Bowlins.

In September, 1864, Gen. Rosecrans, the department commander, with headquarters at St. Louis, received information of the approaching invasion of Missouri from Northern Arkansas by Gen. Price, and, sending this information to Washington, was reinforced by Gen. A. J. Smith, with 6,000 troops that had been destined to join Sherman in Northern Georgia. Gen. Price, reinforced by Shelby, entered Southeast Missouri between the Big Black and St. Francois Rivers, and pushed on toward Pilot Knob. There were but few Federal troops in this portion of the State, and they met with little opposition. A portion of the cavalry under Col. Jeffers marched by the way of Jackson, where they had a skirmish with a Federal company under Capt. Tacke.

On the night of September 24 Gen. Rosecrans ordered Gen. Hugh S. Ewing to take a brigade of the Second Division, Sixteenth Army Corps, then at Jefferson Barracks, and patrol the Iron Mountain Railroad, while Gen. A. G. Smith and his command was to follow. Gen. Ewing, leaving the remainder of his brigade at De Soto, pushed on with the Fourteenth Iowa Infantry to Pilot Knob, where he found Maj. James Wilson with a force of only about 1,000 officers and men, consisting of Companies A, F, E, G, H and I, of the Forty-seventh Missouri Infantry; Capt. Lindsay's company of the Fiftieth Missouri; Companies A, C, D, H, I and K, of the Third Cavalry, Missouri State Militia; Company L, of the Second Cavalry, Missouri State Militia; Company G, First Cavalry Missouri State Militia and Capt. Montgomery's battery.

On the plain south of the village of Pilot Knob was Fort Davidson, a hexagonal work about 700 yards in circumference, and mounting four thirty-two pound guns and three twenty-four pounders. The plain, consisting of some 300 acres, is surrounded by mountains from 500 to 600 feet high, with the exception of a gap between Shepherd Mountain and Pilot Knob, through which runs a small stream known as Stout's Creek. Gen. Ewing obstructed the roads leading up the mountains, cleared the sides next the fort of most of the timber, and dug two rifle pits commanding the best approaches. About four miles southeast of Pilot Knob is a gap known as the "Shut In," through which passes the Fredericktown road. By this road the army of Gen. Price entered the Arcadia Valley. On the 26th of September Gen. Ewing ordered two companies to make a reconnoissance in the direction of Fredericktown, and a small party under Capt. Powers was started out to cross the roads leading from the south to that place. Both detachments met the advance of Price's army near the "Shut In," and were forced back into Iron-ton, where, with Company E, of the Forty-seventh Missouri, a detachment of the Fourteenth Iowa and a section of Montgomery's battery, together with the available cavalry, all under the command of Maj. Wilson, a stand was made. Price's advance was thus temporarily checked, when night and a rain storm put an end to the engagement. Price's army kept coming in during the night, and Gen. Ewing ordered all the quartermaster and commissary stores not needed for immediate use sent up the railroad, while details were set to work to construct six platformed barbettes for the artillery, which was under the command of Lieut. David Murphy. At daylight, on Tuesday the 27th, Wilson was driven back into the gap between Pilot Knob and Shepherd Mountain, and while the enemy were attempting to force the gap Gen. Ewing ordered a detachment of the Fourteenth Iowa to take position on the east end of Shepherd's Mountain, and ordered Wilson to fall back along the side of Pilot Knob, thus opening a clear range from the fort. A long and severe struggle ensued, in which the loss to the enemy was great. Finally Gen. Marmaduke obtained a position on the east side of Shepherd Mountain with two pieces of artillery, and from there, with his division, made an assault, gaining the bed of the creek from which his men kept up an incessant fire on the fort. At the same time Gen. Fagan marched over Pilot Knob, and made an assault from that side upon the fort, but was repulsed, after a gallant charge. Night now came on, and the troops of Gen. Price's command, thinking that they had bagged their game, gave themselves up to enjoyment and jollification. Gen. Ewing, recognizing that to remain longer in the fort was to invite capture, determined to evacuate and, if possible, to make his escape unnoticed. This was rendered very difficult, as a large mass of charcoal at the works of the Iron Company had been fired during the engagement, and now lighted up the entire plain. He ordered Col. Fletcher to make arrangements to have the magazine blown up two hours after his departure, and sooner if discovered. He left by the Potosi road unseen, and two hours later, and an hour before day, the magazine was fired by Daniel Flood, of the Third Cavalry, Missouri State Militia, but the Confederates even then did not realize what had occurred, and it was not until 8 o'clock in the morning that Marmaduke started in pursuit. The Federal loss in this battle was about 200 killed, wounded and missing, while the Confederate loss is estimated at about 1,000. Maj. Wilson was wounded and captured at Pilot Knob, and subsequently, with six men of his command, was shot by order of Gen. Price's officer of the day.

Upon leaving Pilot Knob Gen. Ewing sent a detachment toward Mineral Point to apprise the troops there of his evacuation, but at Caledonia they came upon the advance of Gen. Shelby, who had not been at Pilot Knob, but had marched from Fredericktown by the way of Farmington. Finding the road to Potosi thus blocked Gen. Ewing turned toward Rolla, but upon reaching Webster he decided to march for Harrison, where he was attacked by the force under Shelby, which had been chasing him. He held his ground, however, until reinforcements came, and Shelby was driven off. He then pushed on to Rolla. This ended the war in Southeast Missouri.

Troops Furnished.—Prior to the beginning of the war a company of militia, known as the "Marble City Guards," was organized at Cape Girardeau under the command of Samuel J. Ward. In the spring of 1861, after the first call for troops by President Lincoln, the members of the company whose sympathies were with the South went to Jackson and joined Ward's battalion of State Guards, which was organized for the six months' service. About the same time a company of cavalry was organized at Jackson for the same service. They were known as the "Swamp Rangers," and were commanded by W. L. Jeffers, with Dr. S. S. Harris as first lieutenant; Wash. Watkins, second lieutenant, and Joel Wilkerson, third lieutenant. Shortly after the organization of this company a battalion was formed, with W. L. Jeffers as lieutenant-colonel and Solomon G. Kitchen, major. It was composed of four companies—one from Stoddard County, commanded by Solomon G. Kitchen; one from Boilinger County, commanded by Edward Wilson; one from Washington County, commanded by John J. Smith, and Jeffers' Company, from Cape Girardeau County. At the end of six months the battalion was mustered out of service, and several of the officers organized independent commands. Lieut. Harris recruited an artillery company, which, in March, 1862, was ordered to Fort Pillow, and on the flag ship "Gen. Bragg" participated in the fight there. The company was then ordered to Yazoo City on the ram "Arkansas," and participated in the engagement with Porter's fleet on July 15, 1862. Subsequently it was attached to the regiment of Col. Martin Greene, and served until the close of the war. In February, 1863, Capt. Harris gathered together a company of Southeast Missouri men at Camden, Ark., and organized a battery for Marmaduke's brigade.

A regiment was organized early in 1861 in Dunklin County, for the State Guard service. James A. Walker was elected colonel and D. Y. Pankey, lieutenant-colonel. Among the captains of companies were S. P. Eldridge, Lee Taylor, A. J. Dooley, W. P. Jones and Taylor Pickard. The regiment was organized at Clarkton, and after spending some time in drilling joined Thompson's force, and was in the fight at Fredericktown. After that campaign it returned to New Madrid County, and at the end of six months was mustered out. In the summer of 1862 a battalion was organized at Hornersville, Dunklin County, by Andrew Jones. Jones was soon after killed by deserters, and was succeeded by Charles Williford. The battalion consisted of two companies, the second company being under the command of Lewis Chandler. A regiment was also raised in Stoddard County for the State Guard service by William G. Phelan. It marched from Bloomfield to Camp Hunter, thence to Belmont, Columbus and Belmont, and was with Thompson at Fredericktown. It was disbanded on January 1, 1862. A battalion of State Guards was organized in Butler County, and placed under the command of Daniel L. Jennings. It was composed of four companies, commanded by James M. Jennings, John C. Smart, William Gregory and N. C. Dodson, respectively.

The troops raised in Scott County for the State Guard service were placed under the command of Alexander Waugh, and those organized in Bollinger County, under J. H. Hunter. A company was raised in Mississippi County by Charles B. Price, and another by Capt. Taylor.

After the disbanding of the State Guards a regiment was organized at Belmont, with John Smith as colonel, Solomon G. Kitchen, lieutenant-colonel, and H. H. Bedford, major. Before the battle at Belmont the regiment was ordered to New Madrid. In 1863 it crossed the river to Memphis, and joined Price's command. It then operated with Price until the close of the war.

In the spring of 1862 W. L. Jeffers organized a company of cavalry, with W. E. McGuire as first lieutenant, and John A. Bennett, second lieutenant. He operated in Southeast Missouri and Northern Arkansas. Subsequently he recruited a regiment, which was designated as the Eighth Missouri Cavalry. It was organized with W. L. Jeffers, colonel; Samuel J. Ward, lieutenant-colonel; James H. Parrott, major; Albert O. Allen, adjutant, and John Craig, sergeant-major. Of the companies six were from Cape Girardeau County, one from Scott, one from New Madrid, one from Mississippi and one from Bollinger. Company H was recruited from Scott County men, and was organized at Bloomfield, with Alexander Wright, captain; W. Powers, first lieutenant; Ed. H. Coleman, second lieutenant, and Charles Vaughn, third lieutenant. Company I was from New Madrid County; Edward Phillips was captain; William Riley, first lieutenant; James Ferguson, second lieutenant, and T. W. Lynch, third lieutenant. The companies from Cape Girardeau County were Company A, John Cobb, captain, and James Caldwell, first lieutenant; Company—, Capt. Suggs commanding; Company F, White Craig, captain; William Jenkins, first lieutenant; Thomas Dalton, second lieutenant, and Alexander Summers, third lieutenant; Company G, Stephen J. Campbell, captain; R. M. Snider, first lieutenant, and Ed Robbins, second lieutenant; and Company——, A. J. Brooks commanding. The company from Mississippi County was commanded by Capt. Pritchett. The regiment marched to Jonesboro, Ark., and about two months later joined Gen. Porter's brigade at Pocahontas. It remained with Gen. Porter until his death, when it was placed in Gen. Marmaduke's command. It participated in the battle at Hartsville, after which it withdrew to Batesville, Ark., where it spent the winter of 1863-64. In the spring it was ordered to Northern Louisiana, and was there engaged in recruiting until late in the summer. It then marched northward with Price, and was present at the battle with Steele at Jenkin's Ferry, where Col. Jeffers with his regiment was ordered to bring on the fight. It continued with Marmaduke until the close of the war, participating in all the battles on the raid into Missouri, and was surrendered at Shreveport, La.

In the spring of 1862 Col. Solomon G. Kitchen recruited a battalion of four companies of volunteers, and, crossing the Mississippi, reported to Van Dorn at Memphis. There his battalion was consolidated with some troops from Northern Missouri, and a regiment of cavalry was organized, with Robert McCulloch as colonel; S. G. Kitchen, lieutenant-colonel, and A. J. Smith, major. The regiment formed a part of the command of Gen. Price, and participated in all of his campaigns. When Gen. Price moved down to Meridian, Col. Kitchen returned to Stoddard County and recruited a regiment of which Jesse Ellison was made lieutenant-colonel, and Capt. Walker, of Dunklin County, major. Col. Kitchen also recruited a battalion in Arkansas, which with the above regiment constituted a legion. This force joined Gen. Price in his operations against Steele in Southern Arkansas, and remained with him until surrendered at Jacksonport, Ark., on June 5, 1865.

In 1861 a battalion of cavalry was organized at Bloomfield, consisting of two companies composed mainly of men from Ste. Genevieve and Madison Counties, and commanded by Capts. John I. Casey and William Cousins. In the fall they went to New Madrid, and in January following to a point near Pocahontas, Ark., where they were attached to Col. Lowe's regiment of infantry. In the spring of 1862 the command, with the exception of Capt. Casey's company, was ordered to the east side of the Mississippi with Gen. Price's force. Capt. Casey's company remained at Helena, Ark., during the summer of 1862. When Gen. Thompson crossed the Mississippi he took a detail of picked men from the companies of Capts. Casey and Cousins, and the remainder were consolidated and placed under the command of James Surge, an Englishman. They were then ordered to report at Brownsville, Ark., where the company were dismounted. This proceeding was so distasteful to the men, however, that they were ordered to Thomasville, Ark., where they joined the Third Missouri Cavalry, of which Cotton Green was colonel and Alonzo Campbell, lieutenant-colonel. After the battles of Prairie Grove and Cane Hill they were ordered to join Gen. Porter, and after his death served under Gen. Marmaduke until the close of the war.

The Ninth Regiment Missouri Infantry was made up mainly of men from Southeast Missouri. It was organized in September, 1862, at Little Black River Bridge, in Butler County, with James B. White as colonel, and William S. Ponder, lieutenant-colonel. It marched to Pocahontas, Ark., and thence to Fort Smith, and participated in the battle of Prairie Grove on December 7, 1862. Subsequently it was present at the battle of Helena, thence retreated by the way of Little Rock to Camp Bragg, where it was consolidated with the Tenth Infantry, Col. Moore commanding. The consolidated regiments were then ordered to Shreveport, La., and in April following participated in the battles of Mansfield and Pleasant Hill. They then turned back to assist in the campaign against Steele, and were present at the Jenkin's Ferry fight, after which they fell back to Camden and Shreveport, and there remained until the war closed.

The Second Missouri Infantry (Confederate) was composed largely of men from the counties of New Madrid and Pemiscot. It was organized at Memphis, Tenn., about July 1, 1861, with John S. Bowen as colonel, L. L. Rich, lieutenant-colonel, and — Campbell, major, and was composed of the following companies: Company A, Capt. Sprague, from New Orleans, all Irishmen; Company B, Capt. Duffie, from St. Louis; Company

C, Capt. Hearst, made up of men from St. Louis, New Madrid and Pemiscot Counties; Company D, Capt. Burke, from St. Louis; Company E, Capt. Rice, from Hickman, Ky., men mainly from Southeast Missouri; Company F, Capt. Garland, from St. Louis; Company G, Capt. John A. Gordon, from Pemiscot and New Madrid; Company H, Capt. Hogan, from Pemiscot; Company I, Capt. Thomas J. Phillips, from New Madrid; Company K, Capt. John E. Averill, from Pemiscot.

The regiment went from Memphis to Fort Pillow, thence to New Madrid, Columbus, Ky., and to Camp Beauregard, where it remained until December 25, 1861, when it proceeded to Bowling Green; thence to Nashville, Murfreesboro, Iuka and Burnsville. It then marched to Shiloh Church, and participated in the battle at that place, after which it fell back to camp at Milldale, not far from Corinth. There the men re-enlisted for three years or during the war. Just before the battle of Shiloh Col. Bowen was placed in command of a brigade, Rich was promoted to colonel, and A. C. Riley, first lieutenant of Company I, was made lieutenant-colonel. The promotion of Riley gave offense to Maj. Campbell and some other officers, who resigned their commissions. Col. Rich was wounded at Shiloh, and died soon after, and the command of the regiment devolved upon Lieut.-Col. Riley.

The regiment participated in the battle of Corinth, and then went into camp at Lumpkin's Mill, near Holly Springs, where it was consolidated with the Fourth Missouri, and assigned to Cockerill's brigade. The winter of 1862-63 was spent in Mississippi. Toward spring an expedition was made into Louisiana and thence to Grand Gulf. The regiment next participated in the battle of Champion's Hill, and fell back into Vicksburg, where it was surrendered with the army on July 4, 1863. It then went into parole camp at Demopolis, Ala., where it remained until exchanged in the following September. It was ordered to Corinth, but soon proceeded to Mobile, where several weeks were spent in winter quarters. It was then returned to Lauderdale Springs, and from there went to Gainesville, Ala. A short time was spent in recruiting in North Alabama, and in preparing for the Atlanta campaign. The regiment performed gallant service in all the battles of this campaign. It then returned with Hood's army, participating in the battles of Franklin and Nashville and the lesser engagements of that ill-starred campaign. Of about 140 men of the Second who entered the battle of Franklin not more than thirty came out uninjured. After Hood's retreat from Nashville the remnant of the regiment proceeded to Mobile, and was captured at Fort Blakely. The Second Regiment was one of the best regiments in the army, and has a record for bravery and hard service that is unsurpassed.

Col. Riley was killed at New Hope Church, and was succeeded by Capt. Garland, who was subsequently wounded. The regiment was then placed under the command of Ambrose Keith, who entered the service as first lieutenant in Company H.

The first Union troops raised in Southeast Missouri were the Home Guards, who were enlisted for three months. In Cape Girardeau a battalion of four companies was organized in June, 1861, and placed under command of Maj. George H. Cramer. The companies were commanded as follows: Company A, John M. Cluley, captain; Company B, William J. Stevenson, captain; Company C, Michael Dittlinger, captain, and Company D, Arnold Beck, captain. The battalion was employed in the town and county until September, when it was disbanded. A similar battalion was organized in Scott County in May, 1861, by Maj. Daniel Abbey, acting under authority from Gen. Lyon. There were four companies, under command of Capts. John Orth, Constantine Grojean, James Daniels and Frank Klepman.

In August, 1861, Gen. Fremont gave Lindsay Murdoch, of Bollinger County, a commission as lieutenant-colonel, with orders to recruit a battalion for the defense of Cape Girardeau. With the assistance of Maj. Abbey he raised four companies, which were known as the Fremont Rangers. They were recruited mainly in Bollinger, Scott and Cape Girardeau Counties, and were commanded by Capts. J. T. Burk, William P. Harris and Michael S. Eddlemon. From August 4 to December 25, 1861, the Rangers served without pay or clothing, and did nearly all the scouting in Southeast Missouri.

Of the Missouri State Militia, but one regiment, the Twelfth Cavalry, was organized in Southeast Missouri. It was composed of eight companies, organized during the winter and spring of 1862. Company A was organized at Cape Girardeau, on February 10, 1862, with Lindsay Murdock as captain; George W. Hammel, first lieutenant; Erich Pape, second lieutenant. Company B was from Wayne County, and was organized on January 23, 1862, with William T. Leeper as captain; Evan Francis, first lieutenant; C. W. Purcell, second lieutenant. Company C was recruited mainly in Stoddard County. It was organized on the 4th of February, when Thomas B. Walker was made captain; Anthony Arnold, first lieutenant; John McMillin, second lieutenant. The officers of Company D, which was organized on February 27, were William Flentge, captain; Henry Walfers, first lieutenant; Lewis Stortz, second lieutenant. Company E was organized in Perry County, on March 26, with Peter Hogan as captain; Ferd. Charveau, first lieutenant, and Thomas Goin, second lieutenant. Company F was recruited in Perry and Bollinger Counties, and was organized on the 26th of March, with Levi C. Whybark as captain; M. S. Eddlemon, first lieutenant; Samuel G. Bidwell, second lieutenant. Company G was recruited in Bollinger and Wayne Counties, and organized on March 29. The officers were A. R. Dill, captain; Philip Sutherlin, first lieutenant, and Henry W. Worth, second lieutenant. Company H was from Washington County, and was commanded by William T. Hunter.

The regimental organization was completed on May 14, 1862, when Albert Jackson was appointed colonel; Samuel P. Simpson, lieutenant-colonel; Benjamin F. Lazear, major, and H. M. Mathews, surgeon. Neither of the senior officers took the field, and the command of the regiment during its separate existence devolved upon Maj. Lozear. On February 2, 1863, the regiment was broken up. Three companies, A, B and H, were attached to the third cavalry as Companies K, L and M, and three, D, E, F, to the fifth cavalry, becoming Companies K, L and M of that regiment. Companies C and G, of the Twelfth, were broken up and distributed to the companies of the Fifth. The Third Regiment was then at Pilot Knob, where it remained until the following month, when it marched to Patterson. There, on April 20, 1863, it was attacked by Marmaduke's command, and forced back to Pilot Knob. From that time until the latter part of 1864

the regiment acted in detachments, doing guard and escort duty, and fighting guerrillas. After Price's raid it was concentrated at St. Louis, and thence was ordered to St. Joseph, Mo. It was then employed in that portion of the State until mustered out, about May 1, 1865.

The companies of the Twelfth Regiment which were attached to the Fifth were stationed at Rolla, and were engaged in scouting in that vicinity until Price's raid. They then went in pursuit of him, under Gen. John McNeil, and participated in the engagements at Jefferson City, California, Boonville, Lexington, Big Blue, Independence, Hickman's Mills and Fort Scott. On November 15 they returned to Rolla, where they remained until mustered out of service.

Of the several regiments of Enrolled Missouri Militia organized in Southeast Missouri, the Fifty-sixth was raised in Cape Girardeau County. It was organized on October 4, 1862, with W. H. McLane as colonel, G. Thilenius, lieutenant-colonel, and Caspar Uhl, major. The companies were commanded as follows: Company A, P. Schreiner; Company B, William Reinhardt; Company C, Lemon Haile; Company D, William N. Wilson; Company E, R. H. Ruhl; Company F, S. W. Whybark; Company G, J. S. Needham; Company H, Elisha Sheppard, and Company I, Adolph Tacke.

The Sixty-fourth Regiment was organized in Perry County on October 27, 1862. The officers were Robert M. Brewer (colonel), Joseph C. Killian (lieutenant-colonel), Charles A. Weber (major), and Thomas Hooss (adjutant). The company commanders were as follows: Company A, William T. Wilkinson, succeeded by John J. Seibel; Company B, Felix Layton, succeeded by W. H. Bennett; Company C, John C. Ochs, succeeded by Anton Hunt; Company D, Thomas G. Chadwick; Company E, Henry Little; Company F, Joseph Meyer; Company G, W. J. Abernathy, succeeded by Henry B. Knox; Company H, Chris. Feig; Company I, Emanuel Estel; Company K, Joseph Lukefahr.

The Sixty-eighth Regiment was formed chiefly from companies in Iron and Wayne Counties. The original organization was perfected on November 20, 1862, with James Lindsay, colonel; George W. King, lieutenant-colonel; Robert L. Lindsay, major, and C. R. Peck, adjutant. In March, 1864, John W. Emerson was appointed colonel, vice Lindsay, dismissed. The companies composing the regiment were as follows: Company A, William P. Adair, captain; Company B, Ross Jekyll, captain, succeeded by W. B. Connelly; Company C, E. A. Killian, captain, succeeded by Franz Dinger; Company D, Morgan Mace, captain; Company E, W. J. Ezell, captain; Company F, W. W. Bunyard, captain, succeeded by Pleasant A. Hodges; Company G, James E. Davis, captain; Company H, H. H. Finley, captain; Company I, Jasper Beikin, captain; Company K, P. L. Powers, captain.

The Seventy-eighth Regiment was organized from companies in Ste. Genevieve and surrounding counties on April 21, 1863, with F. Leavenworth as colonel; George Bond, lieutenant-colonel; Joseph Hodgmeiller, major, and Leon Bogy, adjutant. The companies were commanded as follows: Company A, C. H. Edleman; Company B, Thomas Stone; Company C, Philip Wagner; Company D, John B. Everett; Company E, Lawson Hughes; Company F, Andrew Miller; Company G, Herman Kustner; Company H, John B. Benham; Company I, S. E. Montgomery; Company K, William Roth.

The Seventy-ninth Regiment, E. M. M., was organized from companies in Scott and Mississippi Counties in June, 1863. Henry J. Deal was made colonel, George M. Kayser, adjutant, and Solomon D. Golder, surgeon. The companies were as follows: Company A, Edwin P. Diehl, captain; Company B, L. W. Pritchett, captain; Company C, Samuel Coleman, captain; Company D, George C. Vail, captain; Company E, W. W. Campbell, captain, succeeded by C. Grojean; Company F, Samuel Tanner, captain; Company G, James H. Howard, captain; and company J, John L. Rainsbury, first lieutenant.

Up to January 1, 1864, the enlistments from each county in the various commands of regular volunteer troops were as follows: Second Infantry, Cape Girardeau 58 and St. Francois 14; Eighth Infantry, Cape Girardeau 33; Twenty-ninth Infantry, Cape Girardeau 186, Stoddard 43, Scott 69, Perry 17; Thirtieth Infantry, Perry 92, Ste. Genevieve 13; Second Artillery, Cape Girardeau 68, Bollinger 18; Sixth Cavalry, St. Francois 30, Madison 19, Wayne 17, Butler 26; Tenth Cavalry, Cape Girardeau 52, Perry 10, Ste. Genevieve 19, Stoddard 21, Scott 31; Engineer Regiment, Cape Girardeau, 116.

The Second Infantry was organized and mustered into service at St. Louis, on September 10, 1861, and soon after marched for Southwest Missouri. It was engaged in the battle of Pea Ridge, marched afterward to Batesville, thence to Cape Girardeau, and from there to Corinth and Rienzi, Miss. In September, 1862, it was ordered to Cincinnati, Ohio, and thence to Louisville. On October 1, 1862, it marched for Nashville, and on the way participated in the fight at Perryville. It reached Nashville on December 26, and took part in the battle of Murfreesboro. It was subsequently engaged in the battles of Chickamauga and Chattanooga, defeated Wheeler at Charleston, Tenn., and repulsed him again at Dalton, Ga., on August 14, 1864. The regiment, with the exception of recruits, was mustered out September 29, 1864.

The Twenty-ninth Missouri Infantry was recruited under the call of July, 1862, and the companies were mustered into service in September and October following. The regiment was organized at Cape Girardeau on October 18, 1862, with John S. Cavender, colonel; James Peckham, lieutenant-colonel, and B. H. Peterson, major. Companies F, G and H were recruited in Southwest Missouri. Of Company F Christian Burkhardt was the first captain. He was promoted to major in November, 1864, and was succeeded by Herman Bader. The first captain of Company G was James McGarvey, with Thomas Rhoades, of Commerce, Mo., first lieutenant. Company H was commanded successively by N. A. Cole, Thomas Doak, Willie H. Gray and David Allen, Jr. The regimental organization being complete, it was ordered to report to Gen. Davidson, at Patterson, but was soon returned to Cape Girardeau, and, on December 8, was embarked for Helena, where it arrived on the 16th. It was assigned to Gen. Blair's brigade, and participated in the campaign in Louisiana and Mississippi under Sherman. During the following summer it took an active part in the operations against Vicksburg, and bore its part in the siege and reduction of that place. In the latter part of September it was ordered to Chattanooga, participating on the way in the engagement of Tusculum. It arrived in the vicinity of Chattanooga in time to join Hooker in the storming of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge and the engagement at Ringgold, Ga. The winter of 1863-64 was spent at Woodville, Ala. On April 30, 1864, the regiment rejoined the First Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps, and was with that command in all the battles of the Atlanta campaign and the campaign against Hood. Returning to Atlanta it was mounted, and thereafter led the advance of the Fifteenth Corps during its campaign in the Carolinas. It was mustered out in Washington, and arrived in St. Louis on June 9, 1865.

The Thirtieth Regiment Missouri Infantry was completed on October 30, 1862, by the consolidation of eight companies of the Thirtieth Regiment with two companies recruited for the Thirty-fourth Regiment, which failed of organization. The officers were B. G. Farrar, colonel; Otto Schadt, lieutenant-colonel, and John W. Fletcher, major. Company B was organized in Perry County on September 15, 1862, with William T. Wilkinson as captain; George S. Ziegler, first lieutenant, and C. M. French, second lieutenant. The regiment formed a part of Blair's brigade, and early entered the field, sharing in most of the battles of the campaigns on the Mississippi and in the interior. The winter of 1864 was spent in Louisiana on guard and scout duty, and during the following summer the regiment participated in various expeditions in Mississippi and Louisiana. On November 30, 1864, it was consolidated into a battalion of four companies, and placed under the command of W. T. Wilkinson, who was advanced to the rank of lieutenant-colonel. The battalion was in active service in Louisiana and in the vicinity of Mobile Bay until June, 1865, when it was transferred to Texas. It was mustered out at Columbus, Tex., on the 21st of August following.

Early in August, 1864, Col. Thomas C. Fletcher was authorized to raise the Forty-seventh Regiment, and was assigned to Southeast Missouri to recruit it. Commissions were issued to a number of active, loyal men, with orders to bring in detachments or companies. The work was entered upon so zealously that more companies than could be assigned to the Forty-seventh were organized, and at the request of Col. Fletcher Gen. Rosecrans ordered another regiment, the Fiftieth, to be formed. The Forty-seventh Regiment was organized in September, 1864, and as soon as completed the companies were sent to their respective counties to assist in the defense against Gen. Price. Companies A, G and H were engaged at Patterson, and fell back to Pilot Knob, where they were joined by Companies F and I, and did gallant service. After the battle with Company D they marched to Rolla. Soon the regiment was ordered to join Gen. Thomas in his defense of Nashville, but did not arrive at that place until three days after the battle. They were then marched to Pulaski, Spring Hill and Columbia, and guarded the communication of Gen. Thomas until March, 1865. About the 1st of April the regiment was mustered out.

The original regimental officers were Thomas C. Fletcher, colonel; A. W. Maupin, lieutenant-colonel; John W. Emerson, major. In November, 1864, Col. Fletcher, who had been elected governor, was succeeded by Lieut.-Col. Maupin. The companies were recruited and officered as follows: Company A, Iron and Wayne Counties, J. S. McMurtry, captain; J. T. Sutton, first lieutenant, and P. A. Hodges, second lieutenant. Company B, Jefferson County, W. J. Buxton, captain; J. C. Hammel, first lieutenant, and B. F. Butler, second lieutenant. Company C, Perry County, C. A. Weber, captain; Felix Layton, first lieutenant, and Thomas Stone, second lieutenant. Company D, Washington County, J. W. Maupin, captain; S. J. Crowe, first lieutenant, and A. J. Gilchrist, second lieutenant. Company E, Iron County, F. Dinger, captain; George J. Fetley, first lieutenant, and John Schwab, second lieutenant. Company F, St. Francois County, W. P. Adair, captain; C. Helber, first lieutenant, and W. B. Connelly, second lieutenant. Company G, Wayne and Bollinger Counties, Morgan Mace, captain; Samuel W. Whybark, first lieutenant, and W. B. Wilson, second lieutenant. Company H, Wayne County, P. L. Powers, captain; W. P. Tate, first lieutenant, and E. P. Settle, second lieutenant. Company I, Madison County, H. M. Bradley, captain; C. H. Cummings, first lieutenant, and W. A. Dunlap, second lieutenant. Company K, Ste. Genevieve County, Gustav St. Gem, captain; Leon Bogy, first lieutenant, and Robert D. Brown, second lieutenant.

As before stated, the surplus companies recruited for the Forty-seventh Regiment were organized into the Fiftieth, but before the organization was effected Gen. Price made his raid, and the companies were sent to their respective counties, Company F being the only one left at Pilot Knob. After the din and smoke of battle had cleared away the organization of the regiment was begun, and David Murphy commissioned as lieutenant-colonel, but it was not until the spring of 1865 that the last four companies were mustered into service. Murphy then became colonel and B. Montgomery lieutenant-colonel. All the companies performed duty in the vicinity of their own counties until June, 1865, when they were ordered to St. Louis. There companies C, D and F were mustered out, and the remainder of the regiment reorganized with some men from the Forty-fifth Infantry, afterward being stationed at Camp Lincoln until August 1, 1865, when they were also mustered out.

Company A of this regiment was raised in Mississippi County, and was commanded by E. P. Diehl. Company B was organized on the 30th of November, 1864, with Charles Perry as captain, and James A. Daniels as first lieutenant. Company C was organized in Cape Girardeau County on November 8, 1864, and placed under the command of Charles F. Bruhl. Company D was recruited in Scott County, and was organized with W. W. Campbell as captain, W. H. Thurbor, first lieutenant, and Henry Smith, second lieutenant. Company E was organized in November, 1864; Harrison Hannahs was elected captain, but was soon after made major of the regiment, and was succeeded by Arthur Wilkinson. Company F was organized in Iron County on the 30th of November, with Robert L. Lindsay, captain; Henry O. Clarke, first lieutenant, and W. J. Counts, second lieutenant. Company G was from Perry County, and was commanded by Christian Popp. Company H, Lindsay Murdoch, captain; Company I, William R. Vaughn, captain, and Company K, Clinton E. Spencer, captain, were not organized until the spring of 1865.

The Sixth Regiment, Missouri Cavalry, was organized in February, 1862, by the consolidation of Wright's and Wood's battalions, and Henry P. Hawkin's company. C. Wright was appointed colonel; S. N. Wood, lieutenant-colonel; H. P. Hawkins, first major, and Samuel Montgomery, second major. The regiment served in detachments in Southwest Missouri and Arkansas until December, 1862, each detachment participating in various battles and skirmishes. The regiment was then ordered to Memphis, Tenn., and there joined the fleet which was to operate against Vicksburg. It participated in all the battles fought by Sherman in his campaign against that city; among them Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, Greenville, Champion's Hill, Black River and Bridgeport. After the fall of Vicksburg it assisted in the capture of Jackson. It was then sent to Louisiana, and from that time was in active service in the Department of the Gulf until its muster out.

The Tenth Regiment Missouri Cavalry was organized in December, 1862, under Col. F. M. Cornyn at Camp Magazine, near Jefferson Barracks, and was immediately sent south. For a time it was divided and stationed at Helena, Memphis, and Columbus, Ky., but in February it was concentrated at Memphis, and was sent to Tuscumbia to attack Van Dorn's rear. From that time until the close of the war it operated in Northern Mississippi and Alabama, and won distinction for its bravery and activity.

The third company of the Engineer Regiment of the West Missouri Volunteers was recruited and organized at Cape Girardeau in August or September, 1861, and was engaged upon the defenses of Cape Girardeau and Bird's Point until March, 1862, when, in a battalion of four companies, it became the Pioneer Corps of Gen. Pope's army in its advance upon New Madrid, and Island No. 10. After the evacuation of Island No. 10 the regiment proceeded to Northern Mississippi with Pope's army, and participated in the operations against Corinth. The remainder of the year was spent in West Tennessee and Northern Mississippi and Alabama, the regiment being divided up into detachments, and employed in repairing railroads, bridges, cars, locomotives, etc. During 1863 the regiment operated in two battalions. The first battalion participated in the operations against Vicksburg, while the second battalion was engaged in repairing the railroad between Grand Junction and Corinth until June 20, and afterwards in getting out timber and ties, with headquarters at Pocahontas. In December, 1863, the regiment was consolidated with the Twenty-fifth Missouri Volunteers, and was then ordered to complete the western part of the Nashville & Northwestern Railroad. It was engaged in this work until September, when it was ordered to report to Gen. Howard before Atlanta. After the surrender of that city it was employed in building an inner line of fortifications until Sherman began his march to the sea. Meanwhile the terms of many of the men had expired, and the twelve companies were now consolidated into a battalion of five companies. This battalion accompanied the Army of the Tennessee to the sea, and through the Carolinas in charge of the pontoons.

Battery F of the Second Illinois Light Artillery was recruited in Cape Girardeau and Scott Counties, and was organized on December 11, 1861, with John W. Powell as captain; Michael Dittlinger, senior first lieutenant; Joseph W. Mitchell, junior first lieutenant; David Bliss, senior second lieutenant; G. A. Tirmenstein, junior second lieutenant; Fred Roebach, commissary sergeant; H. R. Henning, orderly sergeant, and J. B. Walker, Lucius Moore, William Buchanan, Albert Gratenheim, W. H. Powell and Alfred S. Looker, duty sergeant. It remained at Cape Girardeau until March, 1862, when it was ordered to Savannah, Tenn. The battery was stationed at various points in West Tennessee and Mississippi until January, 1863, participating in the battles of Corinth and Shiloh and lesser engagements. It was subsequently sent to Louisiana, and was in active service until the close of the war.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

Roman Catholic Church.—The only church organizations that were permitted to exist in Louisiana Territory prior to its transfer to the United States, were those of the Roman Catholics. Indeed, had the public instructions of the Governor-General been followed by the post commandants no one not of that faith could have resided within the Territory, as witness the following from the orders of Manuel Gayoso:

6. The privilege of enjoying liberty of conscience is not to extend beyond the first generation. The children of those who enjoy it must positively be Catholics. Those who will not conform to this rule are not to be admitted, but are to be sent back out of the province immediately, even though they possess much property.

7. In the Illinois none shall be admitted but Catholics of the class of farmers and artisans. They must also possess some property and must not have served in any public character in the country from whence they came. The provisions of the preceding article shall be explained to the emigrants already established in the province who are not Catholics, and shall be observed by them.

8. The commandants will take particular care that no Protestant preacher, or one of any sect other than Catholics, shall introduce himself into the province; the least neglect in this respect will be a great reprehension.

These seemingly rigid regulations were, doubtless, counteracted by private ones of a different character. At least, there was a tacit understanding among the commandants that the examination of immigrants as to their religious belief was a mere matter of form, rather than an actual scrutiny for the purpose of ascertaining the truth. Only such questions as could be answered in the affirmative by any person believing in the Christian religion were propounded, such as "Do you believe in Almighty God? In the true Apostolic Church? In the Holy Trinity, Holy Evangelists, etc.?" A person answering these questions satisfactorily was pronounced "un bon Catholique," and was permitted to make a settlement. Of course the organization of Protestant Churches or the public practice of the Protestant religion was not permitted, but neighbors often met together in prayer meetings, and occasionally a preacher crossed the river from Illinois, and was present at these meetings. The commandants in general were not at all fanatical, and these little offenses, if observed, were passed over in silence.

The first religious work in this Territory was doubtless done by the Jesuit missionaries at the old village of Ste. Genevieve. The following concerning the early history of the church at this place is from an address by Gen. Rozier: "The first church in Upper Louisiana was built by the Catholics in 'Le vieux village de Ste. Genevieve,' previous to 'L'annie des Grandes Eaux,' being a large wooden structure, which was removed to the present town of Ste. Genevieve in 1794. When this church became old and dilapidated it was abandoned in about the year 1835. The erection of the old rock Catholic Church was completed in 1831 under the surveillance of Rd. X. Dahman, an old soldier and officer in the cavalry service of Napoleon, the emperor. It was consecrated November 22, 1837, by Bishop Rosatti, of St. Louis. This old rock church was struck by lightning on July 17, 1841. It struck the gable end, and the fluid descended along the roof to the sacristy, then pierced the wall, striking the frame of the picture of Ste. Genevieve; it then descended to the altar, taking away all its gilding, and passed to the ground floor. Mr. John Doyle at the time was praying before the altar, and was struck by the lightning and considerably stunned, yet recovered from the shock. There is now a large brick church erected over the site of the old rock church, under the supervision of Rev. Francis X. Weiss. The corner-stone of this new edifice was laid by Rev. Charles Ziegler, a native of Ste. Genevieve, now a parish priest of St. Louis.

"As early as 1760 three Jesuit missionaries settled at Ste. Genevieve in their cassocks, with breviary in hand, and the cross upon their breasts. They commenced their religious instructions to a few inhabitants, and visited the surrounding tribes of Indians amongst whom vespers and matins were chanted.

"The first baptism in Le vieux village de Ste. Genevieve was on the 24th of February, 1760, and was performed by a Jesuit missionary named P. F. Watrin. The first religious marriage which occurred at the same place was on the 30th of October, 1764, celebrated by Father J. L. Maurin. The parties married were Marck Constatino Canada and a Miss Susan Henn, the latter being formerly of Pennsylvania, of German descent. This Marck Constatino lived, previous to this, eight years with a tribe of Indians known as the Chawanons, being near Ste. Genevieve. Susan Henn was made a prisoner about five years before this marriage by the same tribe of Indians. They had lived together and had two children, one named Marie, three years old, and the other Genevieve, two years old. After this marriage they regained their liberty."

The following is a list of ministers that officiated at Ste. Genevieve under the Spanish, French and territorial governments: Fathers P. F. Watrin, J. B. Salveneuve and J. Lamorinie from 1760 to 1764; Father J. L. Maurin 1764-68; Father P. Gibault, Oliver, 1814-16; Father Henri Pratte, 1816-21; Rev. Francis X. Dahman, 1822-40; Rev. Hypolite Gondolpho, 1840; Rev. Jean Marie St. Cyre, 1849; Rev. P. L. Hendricks, 1862; Francis X. Weiss, 1865 to 1877.

Of the priests mentioned above two deserve special mention. They are Pierre Gibault and James Maxwell. The former came to the Illinois from Canada as a missionary in the summer of 1766, and was a very zealous and active worker until his death, which occurred about the beginning of the present century. He was always a friend of the Americans, and rendered material assistance to Gen. Clarke in his campaign against Kaskaskia and Vincennes. He was the priest at the former place when it was captured, and it was largely due to his influence that no resistance was made. He also accompanied the expedition to Vincennes. Gen. St. Clair said of him in a report to Congress: "He was very useful to Gen. Clarke upon many occasions, and has suffered very considerable losses." He was engaged in administering to the spiritual wants of the people of Ste. Genevieve, Kaskaskia, Vincennes and Kahokia until about 1794, when he made a permanent location at New Madrid. There he remained, making occasional missionary visits to neighboring settlements until his death, some eight years later. He was the owner of a considerable amount of property, which he left by will to near relations.*

James Maxwell was a native of Ireland, a man of education

*The date at which Father Gibault came to the Illinois has long been a matter of doubt; but the following passport, found among the records of New Madrid fixes the time:

and superior talents. He mingled freely with his people, an active participant in all their sports and merrymakings. In the first Territorial Council of Nine he was one of the two representatives from Ste. Genevieve. He had his residence in New Bourbon, and was in the habit of riding into Ste. Genevieve for the church services. One morning as he was mounting a spirited horse to return home he was thrown to the ground, sustaining injuries from which he died. He had been in charge of the parish for seventeen years, and it is safe to say that no priest was ever more dearly loved by his people than was James Maxwell.

The later history of the Catholic Church in Southeast Missouri is closely connected with that of the Order of Lazarists or Vincentians.* In the spring of 1815 Rev. W. L. Dubourg, who since 1812 had been Administrator Apostolic of the extensive diocese of New Orleans, which included Upper Louisiana, went to Rome, where he was consecrated bishop of this diocese. At Rome the new bishop engaged several members of the above named order to accompany him to his diocese. Among these were the saintly Father Andreis and the zealous Father Joseph Rosati, afterward first bishop of St. Louis. They in company with Bishop Flaget, of Bardstown, arrived in St. Louis on October 17, 1817. From there they returned to Ste. Genevieve, which then numbered about 1,400 inhabitants, and was under the spiritual care of Father Pratte. The Vincentian fathers founded a missionary station at Ste. Genevieve on January 1, 1818. Bishop Dubourg, who had in the meantime arrived from Europe, celebrated Pontifical High Mass. It was the Bishop's ardent desire to see an institution established for the training of candidates to the priesthood. After some deliberation a piece of land, 640 acres in the present Perry County, in what was popularly known as the "Bonnes," was purchased from Ignatius Layton, at the price of $800. Upon this tract were erected several log cabins, the largest of which, a one-story structure, was occupied by the seminary. The first students were received in the year 1819. After the death of Father Andreis in 1820 Rosati became superior of the society and president of the seminary, which, despite many diffaculties, grew in importance as time went on. Of those that joined the society in America are conspicuously known the Fathers J. M. Odin and John Timon. The former afterward became the first bishop of Galveston and the second archbishop of New Orleans, the latter, first bishop of Buffalo. Father Timon, ordained in the year 1825 by Bishop Rosati, attended to the spiritual wants of the Catholics in Perry and Cape Girardeau Counties. He frequently preached at the courthouse in Jackson, and brought back many to the profession of faith, who were not known to be Catholics. On one of these occasions a Protestant by the name of Ralph Daugherty, hearing the explanations of Father Timon, desired to become a Catholic. His example was gradually followed by the members of his family with the exception of his wife. Several members of the Sanford family also became Catholics. This event occasioned the establishment of an afterward flourishing mission of Cape Girardeau, where Mr. Daugherty possessed valuable property, which he sold to the Vincentian fathers. The present college and St. Vincent's Church stand on this property.* Divine services were in the beginning held at Daugherty's house, and, subsequently, in a store house which was transformed into a church. A regular parish was formed at Cape Girardeau in 1836, and Father Odin was installed as the first parish priest on April 10 of that year. The parish made good progress, and the building of the present brick church was commenced. It was dedicated on July 19, 1852. It is a brick structure of gothic architecture, and has a beautiful location facing the river. Since the founding of St. Vincent's College in 1843 a member of it has acted as parish priest.

The foundation of a church for the German Catholics of Cape Girardeau was thought of as early as 1858, when a committee of two, J. Meyer and J. Goetz, was appointed to consult with Archbishop Kenrick, regarding the establishment of a separate congregation for the German speaking Catholics. The Archbishop sent them to Vicar-Gen. Melchers, who suggested that a lot should be obtained before any further steps were taken. Accordingly a lot was purchased by ten men, but nothing more was then done. A part of the lot was afterward sold, and a part is still held by O. Niebur, in trust for the congregation. An effectual impetus was at last given to the work in the year 1867, when Father Rainerius Dickneite, O. S. F., gave a mission in the German language, at the English church, to which the German Catholics had gone up to that time. Their great friend and protector was the Vincentian Father, L. C. Meyer, now president of St. Vincent's College, at Los Angeles, Cal. He favored their desire, and did all in his power to fulfill it. After the mission given by Father Rainerius, a building committee was appointed to which belonged J. Landsmann, Ch. Fuerth, J. Schwepker, H. Sander and J. Goetz. A lot was purchased for $650, and on March 25, 1868, work was begun. The whole building when completed cost $14,000. Besides several improvements which have been made since then, a new schoolhouse was built in 1882, and in 1885 a priest's residence was completed. Since 1875 two Sisters of the Order of St. Francis have taught the parochial school, which is attended by about 100 pupils. The Sisters also have a hospital, and a boarding house for school children.

The pastors of this parish have been as follows: Rev. J. Herde, 1868-70; Rev. Gells, six weeks; W. Hinssen, 1870-74; J. Schmidt, 1874-76; S. Kleiser, 1876-78; W. Sonnenschein, 1878-79; Francis Willmer, 1879-81; E. Prunte, since December 30, 1881.

In 1845 a Catholic Church was organized in Benton, and a small house was built on a lot donated by Mr. Meyers. In 1850 it was burned down by an incendiary. In 1848 a log church was built at New Hamburg. It was occupied until 1857 or 1858, when a stone church was begun. The latter was burned during the war, but it was rebuilt at once at a cost of about $30,000. Among the pioneer Catholics of this vicinity were Sebastian Holder, Christian Holder, W. Bucher, Mathias Holder, John Glauss, John Martin, Louis Pifferkorn, David Koppler and Joseph Stuppy.

In 1878 St. Augustine Church of Kelso was organized from members set off from New Hamburg. A frame house was built the same year, but it will soon be replaced by a brick structure.

The congregation now numbers ninety-five families, and is under the pastoral care of Rev. Fred. Klein.

In 1856 St. John's Church at Leopold, Bollinger County, was organized by Rev. John Van Luytelaar, with the following twelve families: J. G. Sonderen, J. Scharenbourg, John Holweg, Jacob Holweg, Arnold Jansen, Herman Elfrant, W. Wardraeker, J. W. Tuling, F. Meyer, A. Rickhoff, Clement Beel and John Derbraak. A log building of two rooms was first erected, but soon after it was replaced by a frame structure 30x52 feet, to which in 1883 an addition of thirty feet was made. Since 1872 a school has been maintained, and in 1879 a new school-house was erected. The church now has about 600 communicants, and is in charge of Rev. Francis Bettels.

As related elsewhere, a French colony founded St. Michaels in Madison County about 1802. These settlers were all Catholics, and about 1820 a church was built at what was known as the New Village. Here occasional services were held by missionaries. It was a log structure, and about 1826 or 1827, it was taken down and removed to Fredericktown. A regular parish was then established, and Father Francis Cellini became the first priest. He was one of the party that came to America at the invitation of Bishop Dubourg. He had been a surgeon in the Italian army, and had been knighted for his services. He never forgot his former profession, and while at Fredericktown manufactured considerable quantities of proprietary medicines, which were sold under the names of Cellini's Balm and Cellini's Bitters. His ability as a surgeon also became known, and he was sought by people from various parts of the country, when they had a case requiring superior skill. Father Cellini's housekeeper was a Mrs. Smith, a lady of considerable wealth, who purchased a large tract of land immediately adjoining the town. She donated the site for the church, and furnished the greater portion of the means for the erection of the necessary buildings. She died in a convent in St. Louis. Father Cellini remained in charge of the parish until 1842. There was then a lapse of about one year before his successor, P. B. Savelli, was appointed. Father Savelli remained until 1845, when he was succeeded by Father Tucker, a native of Perry County. At about this time a brick church was erected, and in 1858 a new priest's residence was completed. Father Tucker remained in charge of the parish until his death in December, 1880. He was very abstemious and exceedingly economical, and after his death it was found that he had stored away several thousand dollars in nooks and corners about the house. The greater portion of this was left by will to the Little Sisters of the Poor and the Bishop. Father Tucker's successor was Rev. B. A. Tanrath, who established a parochial school and repaired the church. The present pastor is Rev. John Rothensteiner.

In 1870 a church was built in Farmington, and a congregation of about twenty families was organized by Henry Milsepen, the German vicar-general. The first priest was Rev. John Daly, who for about twelve months had charge of the congregations of Farmington and French Village. Since that time it has been under the care of the parish of Iron Mountain, which was established soon after the close of the war.

The first Catholic Church at Bonne Terre was built by Father Daly on land donated by the Whilebon family. After a few years this church, owing to its distance from the village, was discontinued, and in 1881 the Desloge Lead Company donated a lot upon which the present church was erected at a cost of $3,000. This church was built by Rev. E. J. Dempsey, the first resident priest. In 1881 Father M. C. Walsh assumed charge of the parish, and through his exertions the church was freed from debt. In 1885 a fine school building was erected at a cost of $3,500, and in 1888 a priest's residence costing $5,500 was completed.

Father Walsh was born in Tipperary, Ireland, on November 1, 1844. His parents, Edward and Mary (Cleary) Walsh, came to America when he was an infant and located in St. Louis. They were poor people, but educated, and they determined to fit their son for the priesthood. At the age of thirteen he was placed in St. Patrick's school in St. Louis, and later was sent to St. Mary's Seminary in Perry County. In July, 1862, he entered St. Vincent's College at Cape Girardeau, and then, on May 30, 1867, was ordained to the priesthood. He was first placed in charge of nine counties in North Missouri with Macon City as a residence. Subsequently he served at Hannibal, Kansas City, St. Louis and other places, and in 1884 visited Wayne, Butler, Oregon and Ripley Counties from Bonne Terre.

About 1870 St. Boniface German Catholic Church of Perryville was established, and a brick edifice was erected to which, in 1887, an addition was made. The congregation is now under the care of Rev. C. Mueller.

The present Ste. Mary's Church at Ste. Mary's College is a stone structure, which was completed in 1838 or 1839. The congregation is under the care of the college, of which Rev. D. McCarthy C. M. has been the superior for thirty years or more. The present college building was erected just prior to the late war.

The Ste. Genevieve Catholic Church, which was dedicated on September 29, 1880, by Bishop Ryan, is the largest structure of the kind in Southeast Missouri. It is over 120 feet long, 70 feet wide and 50 feet high, and has a seating capacity of over 1,000. Its cost is estimated at $40,000.

Besides those already mentioned there are the following Catholic Churches in Southeast Missouri: St. Joseph's Church, at Uniontown, Perry County, Rev. F. Krieger, pastor; St. Joseph's Chapel in the Ursuline Convent at Arcadia, Rev. L. C. Wernert, pastor; St. Maurus at Biehle's, Perry County, Rev. A. M. H. Acker, pastor; St. Philomena's at Bloomsdale, in Ste. Genevieve County, Rev. P. A. Trumm, pastor; "The Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary," a Belgian congregation in Bois Brule Bottom, Father De Ceunynck, pastor; "Our Lady of the Rosary," Claryville, Perry County, attended from Bois Brule; St. Lawrence, Punjaub, Ste. Genevieve County, Rev. C. L. Van Tourenhout, pastor; St. Ann's, French Village, St. Francois County, attended from Panjaub; St. Joseph's, Zell, Ste. Genevieve County, Rev. H. Pigge, pastor; St. Mary's, Ste. Genevieve County, Rev. E. Wynne, pastor; "Our Lady of Good Help," Pilot Knob, attended from Arcadia; Sacred Heart, Poplar Bluff, attended from Doniphan; The Immaculate Conception, Jackson, Missouri, Rev. J. Lang, pastor.

St. Henry's, at Charleston; St. Francois de Sales, Texas Bend, Mississippi County, and the Immaculate Conception of New Madrid, have no regular attendant at present.

Methodists.—The Methodist circuit riders have always been pioneers in religious work on the frontiers. This was true in Missouri, and as soon as the Territory was thrown open to Protestant ministers the organization of Methodist Churches was begun. In 1806 the Western Conference, which then included all of the territory west of the Alleghany Mountains, met in Greeneville, Tenn., and in locating the ministers for the following year appointed John Travis to the Missouri Circuit. He came and established two circuits, the Missouri and the Meramec, the latter of which was entirely south of the Missouri River. The next year Edward Wilcox was assigned to the Meramec Circuit, and in 1808 the conference appointed Joseph Oglesby as his successor, but he did not travel it. His place was taken by Thomas Wright, one of the converts made by Wilcox, while Z. Maddox, a local preacher, was appointed to look after Cape Girardeau District, and during the year he partly organized a circuit.

The first Methodist society west of the Mississippi was organized about three miles west of Jackson, some time between 1806 and 1809. Among the members were William Williams and wife, John Randol and wife, Thomas Blair, Simon and Isaiah Poe, Charnal Glasscock and the Seeleys. Soon after a house of worship, which, with some slight alterations, is still occupied by the congregation, was built of large hewed poplar logs from two to two and one-half feet thick. A camp ground was also established near by.

In 1809 the conference appointed Jesse Walker to the Cape Girardeau Circuit and David Young and Thomas Wright to the Meramec Circuit. This territory then formed a part of the Indiana District which was presided over by Samuel Parker, who during that year visited the town of Cape Girardeau and preached the first sermon ever heard there. He preached at the house of William Scripps, whom he had known in Virginia. Mr. Scripps was an Englishman, who came to America in 1791, and to Cape Girardeau about 1808. He was a tanner by trade, and had two sons, John and George H. The former early manifested an interest in religious matters, and at the conference in 1814 he was admitted on trial. He was subsequently taken into full connection, and during the remainder of his life was engaged in preaching the gospel. About 1820 he removed to Illinois.

In March, 1810, Rev. Jesse Walker, accompanied by John Scripps, then a mere youth, crossed the Big Swamp to New Madrid District, and organized the New Madrid Circuit, which he traveled in connection with his other circuit. At the end of the year he reported thirty members on the new circuit. On Good Friday of this year was begun the first camp meeting ever held in Cape Girardeau County, at the camp ground near McKendree Chapel. Presiding Elder Parker and Rev. Jesse Walker and Thomas Wright were present.

The conference in 1810 assigned John McFarland to the Meramec Circuit, and reappointed Jesse Walker to Cape Girardeau Circuit, but the latter did not remain, and the work of both circuits was done by McFarland. The next year John McFarland was placed in charge of both the Cape Girardeau and New Madrid Circuits, and Thomas Wright was appointed to the Meramec Circuit. Wright held the first camp meeting in Ste. Genevieve County, in what is now Madison County, in 1812, soon after the earthquakes. At the conference in that year Benjamin Edge was assigned to Cape Girardeau Circuit, and William Hart to the New Madrid Circuit. Edge was a man of strong eccentricities, but of great power. He was sharp nosed, and ugly of feature, but possessed strong personality, and was held in high esteem as a minister. The next year Thomas Wright was placed on the Cape Girardeau Circuit and Thomas Nixon on the New Madrid Circuit. Notwithstanding the constant work on these circuits, there seems to have been but little increase in membership, as at this time Cape Girardeau Circuit reported but 123 members, and New Madrid, 136.

At the conference of 1814 John C. Harbison was received upon trial. He came to Cape Girardeau District about 1798, and had been engaged in teaching school at Mount Tabor, and in practicing law. He was of Scotch-Irish parentage, and had lived in Pennsylvania and Kentucky. He brought his parents to Cape Girardeau, and after living in the town for a time removed to the farm now owned by Robert Ranney. He died in 1826. One of his sons, John Harbison, is still living in Scott County.

In 1814 Thomas Wright was returned to Cape Girardeau Circuit, and the New Madrid Circuit was placed in charge of Asa Overall. At the same time Saline Circuit was formed, to include the country between the Meramec and Apple Creek. Within the bounds of this circuit were several quite strong Methodist communities. One of these was the Murphy settlement, where a house of worship was erected at a very early day. The first sermon in this community is said to have been preached at the house of Mrs. Sarah Murphy, by Joseph Oglesby, in 1804. New Tennessee, Cook's settlement and Calloway's settlement were also early preaching places. At the close of the conference year of 1814-15, Saline Circuit reported 150 members. For the conference year 1815-16 the appointments were as follows: Philip Davis to the New Madrid Circuit, Jesse Haile to the Cape Girardeau Circuit, and Thomas Wright to the Saline Circuit.

In May, 1816, the Missouri conference was organized at Shiloh Meeting House, near the site of Bellville, Ill., at which time John Scripps and John C. Harbison were received into full connection. The appointments for this year were Thomas Wright and Alexander McAllister to Cape Girardeau and New Madrid Circuits, and John C. Harbison to Saline Circuit. During this year a new circuit was added, and the list of appointments made in 1817 was as follows: Saline Circuit, Thomas Wright; Cape Girardeau Circuit, to be supplied; New Madrid and St. Francois Circuits, Joseph Spiggott and Rucker Tanner. The latter was a native of New Madrid District. He was very dark complexioned, and in youth was of a rather reckless character. It is related of him that on one occasion he accompanied an elder brother on a trip to New Orleans. His brother was even more reckless than he, and, having exhausted all their money, he prevailed upon Rucker to permit him to sell him as a slave, which he succeeded in doing. He obtained the money, and left his brother to his fate. Rucker after some difficulty managed to gain his freedom, but found himself penniless in a strange country. He started to walk back to his home, but finally hired to a local preacher, with whom he lived for some time. While there he decided to enter the ministry, and in this he was encouraged by his employer. He returned to his home, and, to the astonishment of his friends, who welcomed him as one from the dead, he gave out an appointment to preach at a certain time. The news spread through the settlement, and the congregation that greeted him was larger than had ever before been gathered in that community.

In 1818 the conference appointments, which were continued the next year, were as follows: Saline Circuit, Thomas Wright; Cape Girardeau Circuit, John Scripps, and St. Francois Circuit, John McFarland. On September 14, 1819, was begun the first conference held west of the Mississippi. It met at McKendree Chapel, as did the conferences of 1821, 1826 and 1831. The appointments for this year were as follows: To the Saline and Bellevue Circuits, John McFarland and Joseph Spiggott; St. Francois Circuit, Philip Davis; Cape Girardeau Circuit, Samuel Glaize, and New Madrid Circuit, William Townsend.

At the conference of 1820 Cape Girardeau District was formed, and Thomas Wright appointed presiding elder. The circuits were supplied as follows: Bellevue, John Harris; Saline and St. Francois, Samuel Bassett; Spring River, Isaac Brookfield; White River, W. W. Redman; Cape Girardeau, Philip Davis; New Madrid, Jesse Haile.

The appointments for Cape Girardeau District from that time until 1840 were as given in the following list:

1821—Thomas Wright, presiding elder; Cape Girardeau, Thomas Davis; Saline, Philip Davis; St. Francois, John Cord; Spring River, Abraham Epler; New Madrid, Washington Orr.

1838—James M. Jameson, presiding elder; Farmington, A. Baird; Cape Girardeau, John F. Gray and John T. Peery; New Madrid, Uriel Haw; Bloomfield, Ed. Allen; Greeneville, M. B. Evans.

1839—Jacob Lanius, presiding elder; Cape Girardeau, Nelson Henry and Ed. Allen; New Madrid, Uriel Haw and James G. T. Dunleavy; Bloomfield, M. B. Evans; Greeneville, Lysander Wiley; Farmington, Melville Will; Ste. Genevieve, Samuel S. Colburn.

Up to this time there were less than a half dozen church edifices belonging to the Methodists of Southeast Missouri. One was erected in Perry County, about five miles from Perryville, about 1825, and named Yorke Chapel. It was subsequently replaced by a stone church, which is still standing. A chapel called Mt. Zion was built in what was known as the Virginia settlement, about four miles from Fredericktown, between 1835 and 1840. A church was organized in Mathews' Prairie, in what is now Mississippi County, about 1830, and soon after a house of worship, a small log structure, was erected, on the land of Elizabeth Smith. Among the members of this church were Absalom McElmurry and wife, Elizabeth Smith, Elijah Bruce, Samuel Duncan and family, William Bush, Joseph Moore and wife, James Moore and wife, Richard and Mary Crenshaw, Uriel Haw and wife, Charles Moore and wife, and Isaac Vernon and wife.

In 1838 the house was burned, and in 1840 or 1841 a frame church building was erected in Charleston. It was occupied until 1856, when it was torn down, and a brick structure erected, which was burned in 1870, but immediately rebuilt. Kay's Chapel, Haw's Chapel and Rush's Ridge were also early churches in Mississippi County.

Between 1840 and 1845 several churches were erected. One of these was at Jackson. The trustees at that time were Greer W. Davis, David H. Davis, Caleb Crane, Welton O'Bannon, Judge John D. Cook, Hiram Gilliland and William D. Randol. The deed for the lot was given by Greer W. Davis in April 1841, at about which time the church was completed. A brick church was built at Cape Girardeau at near the same date. It was blown down by the cyclone of 1851, and a short time afterward a small frame house was erected on the corner opposite the Episcopal Church. It was broken down by a snow storm, in 1856.

About 1842 the Methodists at Bloomfield built a small house of worship, on a lot donated by the county. The trustees of this church were Edmund Wood, Thomas Niell, Samuel Sifford, Thompson Couch and John Eaker.

About 1838 a church was built at Fredericktown, on the lot now occupied by the present brick structure, which was erected about 1880. Among the early members of this church were T. F. Tong, F. T. Overfield, Thomas Cooper, William M. Newberry and Andrew Russell and their families.

The following extracts from the diary of Jacob Lanius, presiding elder of the Cape Girardeau District, in 1839-40, furnishes an excellent view of the condition of the church in this portion of the State at that time:

Thursday, November 14.—Started for my New Madrid quarterly-meeting, and after a ride of thirty miles through steady rain reached Brother Caleb Crain's, near Jackson. Here is a society of about twenty members in a tolerable state of prosperity only. The next day passed through Jackson, a little old village, and took breakfast at the house of Greer Davis, a member of the bar, and a respectable member of our church. Traveled thirty miles to-day and lodged at the house of old Mother Houts, near Benton, the county seat of Scott County. Here the church once prospered but is now in moral ruins.

16th and 17th.—Held the first quarterly-meeting for New Madrid Circuit at Pleasant Plains meeting-house in Sandy Prairie. Brothers Haw and Dunleavy, the pastors of the circuit, and Henry and Owens attended as ministers in holy things. Two professed faith in Christ. This circuit has nearly 400 members, but religion is at very low ebb. This is a land of swamps and earthquakes, so that you have no access to the circuit save by crossing a swamp. I crossed on a levee three miles long. The land is very fertile, but the country sickly.

23d and 24th.—Held the first quarterly-meeting for Cape Girardeau Circuit at McKendree Chapel, three miles from Jackson. Some good omens.

30th.—Held quarterly-meeting for Farmington Circuit, which embraces my residence, in the town of Farmington. Here Methodism once flourished, but now lies in ruins. A class of only about twelve, no meeting-house, and under the necessity of occupying the Presbyterian Church. Some deep feeling on Sabbath, but all the seed fell on "stony ground."

December 14th.—Held quarterly-meeting for Ripley Mission at Brother Sharp's on Current River. Congregation small, only four families in two miles. Country as sparsely settled, prospect dark.

21st.—Held the quarterly-meeting for Greeneville Circuit at old Father Dee's cabin, seven miles south of Greeneville. On Sabbath we occupied Bowman's Chapel, near the dwelling, but the cold weather and smoke operated very much against us. However, when I called for mourners at night about one dozen came forward.

28th.—Held quarterly-meeting for Bloomfield Mission in the town of Bloomfield. Here we occupied the courthouse, an unfinished edifice that does honor to the county. The meeting was pretty good, the love feast most excellent. The church numbers about twenty members and is doing pretty well. This mission is also surrounded by swamps. In going to it I crossed a dismal swamp about three miles wide.

January 4, 1840.—Held quarterly-meeting for Ste. Genevieve Circuit in the New Tennessee settlement in Ste. Genevieve County, at the house of John McFarland's family, an itinerant now a local of our church, one of the best of human kind. This meeting was a blessing to many in the church, but the wicked seemed little affected. I never preached much harder in my life, but all to no purpose, seemingly. This meeting closed my first round in the district. The district numbers about 1,200 members, the great mass of whom are measurably destitute of the power of godliness, though the most of them have the form, or a part of it at least, and are strictly moral. There is a want of vital religion. The preachers have pruned the church since conference, and I hope God will follow this wholesome course with His blessing.

11th and 12th.—Held a two days' meeting at Fredericktown at which time the district stewards were expected to meet. * * * * Second quarterly-meeting for Cape Girardeau Circuit appointed for February 1, in the town of Cape Girardeau, but, the creeks being up, and the whole face of the country being covered with a sheet of ice, I was compelled to turn back, after having started, and so failed to reach the meeting, but I have since learned that the Lord was with them, and some good was done. A little revival of religion began in Farmington during the holidays, and as the result of it eight persons joined the church and three the Baptist Church.

Left home on Wednesday morning, and after traveling through mud and water almost impassable succeeded in reaching the seat of New Madrid quarterly conference. The meeting was held in Lewis' Prairie, two and one-half miles from the old town of that name; Brothers Haw and Dunleavy attended and assisted in the work. Thirteen were at the altar of prayer on Sabbath night, and eight united with the church. This was the best meeting of the year, and we left the best prospect that has appeared in the district.

February 15th.—This was the time for the Bloomfield quarterly-meeting, but I failed to attend owing to ill health. I learn that the meeting was very good. Four were admitted on trial, and the church was refreshed by the Spirit.

March 14th and 15th.—Held the second quarterly-meeting for Greeneville Circuit at Brother Robert McCullough's in Wayne County. Here I found a society of about twenty members and a little congregation. The class is in a pretty good condition at present, seem all alive and full of some kind of fire. I trust it is the right kind. Several came forward as mourners, and one old lady joined the class. Brothers M. Wiley and Christian Eaker afforded ministerial aid on the occasion.

March 21st and 22d.—Held quarterly-meeting for Ste. Genevieve Circuit at Yorke Chapel in the Abernathy settlement in Perry County, five miles from Perryville, the county seat. Here we have a society of seventy-three whites and more than thirty blacks, but alas, how cold and formal! Very few appeared to enjoy the life and power of religion. Only two additions to the church. The brethren here dwell in ceiled houses, while the house of God lies in ruins, the foundation only having been laid. I hope before the close of the year the church will be completed.

March 28th.—Held the second quarterly-meeting for Farmington Circuit at Fredericktown. Brothers H. Baird and L. Wiley assisting as ministers; congregation respectable and attendance good in spite of unfavorable weather; six mourners one night, and three accessions to our ranks. This completes my second round. It was more interesting than the first. Have missed three quarterly-meetings on account of the difficulty of traveling.

April 4th and 5th.—Assisted Brother Wiley of Farmington Circuit with a two days' meeting at John White's among the Dutch (my countrymen) on Castor. This meeting was the best this year, about twenty mourners on Sabbath night, some of whom were converted and quite a number received into the church.

11th.—Commenced the quarterly-meeting for New Madrid Circuit in Benton, the county seat of Scott; the congregation small and careless, and the professors cold. This was once a numerous society, but removals and deaths have reduced almost to a unit. Satan seems to have his seat here and intemperance reigns.

18th and 19th.—Held a two days' meeting in the town of Cape Girardeau, assisted by Brothers Henry, Dunleavy and Owens. Here we are much opposed by Catholics, and Protestants are struggling for existence; have no meeting house but are trying to build one.

25th and 26th.—Held a two days' meeting in the town of Jackson. Here we are compelled to worship in the courthouse, but are erecting a convenient church. Large congregation on Sabbath. This is another hard place. But few Christians and many speculators in religious principles.

May 30th and 31st.—Held the third quarterly-meeting for Cape Girardeau Circuit in Eaker's settlement on Crooked Creek amongst my countrymen, the Dutch. Here we have a large society, but many members are in a lukewarm state. This region was once the kingdom of Bacchus. One passes an old still-house, and sometimes a new one every two miles.

June 20th and 21st.—Held the third quarterly-meeting for Ste. Genevieve Circuit in New Tennessee. One was received on trial. Arrangements are being made to build a stone chapel. It is much needed, for we worship in a dwelling-house or under a grove at present.

July 3d and 5th.—Held the last quarterly-meeting for the New Madrid Circuit, in Mathews' Prairie, Scott County. It was a camp-meeting. Owing to the premature coming of the sickly season only four families camped out of a class of sixty whites and forty blacks. On Sabbath the congregation was the largest I have addressed for two years, say 1,000 persons. A few professed faith.

11th-13th.—Held quarterly-meeting for the Farmington Circuit at a new chapel called Mt. Zion, in the New Virginia settlement, four miles from Fredericktown.

Sept. 30th.—Have closed the last round on the district—the camp-meeting round. Much good was done at some of these meetings, especially at that at Yorke Chapel, in Perry County. More than twenty united with the church there, and quite a number were savingly converted.

During the next four or five years the church experienced a good degree of prosperity. Many new societies were organized, and several of the older ones erected houses of worship. In May, 1844, the General Conference for the United States met in New York, and during its deliberations passed the famous "Finley Resolution," suspending Bishop Andrew, of Georgia, from the exercise of his office until he should dispose of certain slaves of which he was the owner. The vote on the resolution was taken on the 1st of June, and on the 5th the following "declaration of the Southern members" was presented:

The delegates of the conference in the slave-holding States take leave to declare to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church that the continued agitation of the subject of slavery and abolition in a conference, and especially the extra-judicial proceedings against Bishop Andrew, which resulted on Saturday last in the virtual suspension of him from his office as superintendent, must produce a state of things in the South which renders the continuance of the jurisdiction of the General Conference over these conferences inconsistent with the success of the ministry in the slave-holding States.

This declaration was signed by all the members of the Southern Conferences, and by one member of the Illinois Conference, and was then referred to a committee of nine, with instructions to devise a scheme for a friendly division of the church, if an amicable adjustment of the difficulties then existing on the subject of slavery was found impossible. The committee reported on the 7th of June, a plan of separation, and after much discussion the report was adopted by a nearly unanimous vote. A call was then issued for a convention, to be composed of the delegates from the conferences in the slave-holding States, to meet in Louisville, Ky., on May 1, 1845. The convention met at the appointed time, Bishops Soule and Andrew presiding, and after full deliberation declared the Southern Conferences a distinct church, under the name of "The Methodist Episcopal Church, South."

The Missouri Conference met in Columbia, Mo., on September 24, 1845. Bishop Soule presided, and made an elaborate address in favor of the Southern Church. A vote was finally taken upon the question of a union with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and with a very few exceptions the members were found in favor of uniting with the new church. The appointments for Cape Girardeau District for this year were as follows: John K. Lacey, presiding elder; Cape Girardeau Circuit, A. Peace; Crooked Creek, J. O. Wood; New Madrid, J. H. In 1861 no regular appointments were made, and thereafter there were no meetings of the St. Louis Conference until the autumn of 1865. Meanwhile churches were destroyed and societies disbanded. The only places at which services had been held during this period were at Charleston, Bertrand, Big Lake and Rush's Ridge. In 1865 Southeast Missouri was constituted the Iron Mountain District, with W. S. Woodward as presiding elder. The appointments on the circuits were as follows: Richwoods, G. C. Knowles; Fredericktown, J. S. Frazier; Perryville, J. M. Proctor; Jackson, to be supplied; Charleston, H. N. Watts; New Madrid, L. W. Powell; Greeneville, S. A. Blakey; Grand Prairie, James Copeland; Bloomfield, J. C. Thomson.

In 1866 the old districts of Cape Girardeau and Greeneville were restored, but in 1868 the name of the latter was changed to Potosi. In 1871 the districts of Iron Mountain and Charleston took the place of Cape Girardeau and Potosi, and in 1873 a new district called Poplar Bluff District was formed. The presiding elders of the various districts since 1865 have been as follows: Cape Girardeau District—W. S. Woodward, 1866-67; A. Peace, 1867-68; William Pitts, 1868-69; J. C. Berryman, 1869. Greeneville District—J. C. Williams, 1866-68. Potosi District—J. C. Williams, 1868-71. Iron Mountain District—J. C. Williams, 1871-72; A. T. Scruggs, 1872-74; J. H. Headlee, 1874-76; D. J. Headlee, 1880-84; Ira R. Hicks, 1884-85; H. Hanesworth, 1885.

The changes in the circuits and the pastors in charge have been too numerous to be noted here in detail, and such matter is readily accessible to any one desiring more minute information. In 1887 Charleston District contained the following stations: Charleston, established in 1872; membership, 253; value of church, $6,000; C. M. Hensley, pastor. Cape Girardeau, membership, 132; value of church, $1,200; W. Mooney, pastor. Farmington, membership, 185; value of church, $3,200; W. F. Wilson, pastor. New Madrid, membership, 153; value of churches, $2,800; E. F. Senter, pastor. Fredericktown, membership, 216; value of churches, $3,400; J. W. Robinson, pastor. Sikeston and Bertrand were for several years prior to 1887 under one charge. They have a membership of 348, and churches to the value of $3,300. Sikeston is now a station under the care of V. J. Millis. The circuits within the Charleston District are as follows: Commerce, including Commerce, Macedonia, Head's Schoolhouse, Campbell's Schoolhouse and Lusk's Chapel, S. A. Mason, pastor; Morley, including Morley, Oran, Blodgett, Sandy Prairie and Cross Plains, S. H. Renfro, pastor; Point Pleasant, including Point Pleasant, New Hope, Union, Ruddell's Point, Mound and Beech Grove, supplied by A. G. Horton; Bertrand, including Bertrand, organized in 1844; East Prairie, organized in 1865; Thrower's Chapel, organized in 1880, and Diehlstadt, organized in 1886, W. H. Blalock, pastor; Belmont, including Haws Chapel, Rush's Ridge, Concord and Locust Grove Schoolhouse, supplied by R. G. Parks; Caruthersville, S. Smith, pastor; Oak Ridge, including Oak Ridge, Shiloh, New Salem, Salem, Millersville, Goshen, Shawneetown, Oak Hill, Neely's Landing and McLain's, J. K. Mathews, pastor; also three or four churches in Cape Girardeau County, supplied by local preachers; Yorke Chapel, T. Lord, pastor; Farmington, J. A. Russell, pastor; Marquand, T. W. Glass, pastor, and New Prospect, supplied by M. M. Blaese. The total membership of Charleston District in 1887 was 6,004. In 1880 it was 2,954.

In the Poplar Bluff District there is but one station, Poplar Bluff, which for some time was united with the church at Dexter under the care of one pastor. It has been a station since 1884. W. E. Boggs is the present pastor. Among the circuits in the Poplar Bluff District are: Grand Prairie, including Brannum, Liberty, Harkey's Chapel and Cotton Plant, R. A. McClintock, pastor; Williamsville, including Shiloh, organized about 1830; Walton's Chapel, a branch of Shiloh, organized in 1887; Free-land (in Carter County), Chapel Hill, organized about 1873; Prospect, organized in 1885; Dee's Chapel, organized in the "thirties"; Williamsville, organized about 1884, and Cool Springs, organized in 1888, Geo. H. Adams, pastor; Piedmont, including Piedmont, organized about 1876; Des Arc, organized in 1882, and Mill Springs, Webster Full, pastor; Clarkton, including Malden, organized in 1881; Clarkton, Knight's Schoolhouse, Salem, Zion and Gravel Hill, J. A. Jenkins, pastor; Arcadia, including the churches in Iron County, H. C. Fleenor, pastor; Bloomfield, R. Walton, pastor, and Picketon, L. W. Pickens, pastor. There are also several other circuits in the counties west of the territory mentioned. The total membership in 1887 was 5,260.

As has been related on former pages of this volume, the Missouri Conference of 1845 voted, by a large majority, to unite with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. There were, however, several members, prominent among whom were Rev. Anthony Bewley and Rev. Nelson Henry, who preferred to remain with the old church. Several of these left the State, but on December 25, 1845, a convention of adherents to the Methodist Episcopal Church was held on Spring River, in Missouri, at which Mr. Bewley presided, and arrangements were made for keeping alive the church in Missouri and Arkansas. George Sly, David Thompson, Joseph Doughty, Mark Robertson, and Bewley and Henry were the laborers in Missouri. Very little was done until 1848, when the General Conference of 1848 re-organized the Missouri Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This conference met on September 13, 1848, with the Illinois Conference, at Belleville, Ill. Three districts were formed, one of which included the work in Arkansas and the greater portion of Southeast Missouri. To this district Nelson Henry was appointed presiding elder, and under his direction the Bloomfield Mission was organized.

The first quarterly meeting was held at the house of W. W. Norman on October 14, 1848. Nelson Henry was the presiding elder, and John W. McKnight the pastor in charge. The next meeting was held at the house of Jonas Eaker. The next year

J. J. Buren was the presiding elder, and W. W. Norman the pastor in charge, and they continued during the conference year, 1851-52. The circuit at that time included nearly all the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southeast Missouri. The first quarterly meeting of the next year was held at Bloomfield on November 1, 1852; D. N. Smith was the presiding elder and E. N. Lowe the pastor.

In 1853 a committee consisting of W. W. Norman, H. C. Rich and J. C. Bottom was appointed to superintend the erection of a church in Bloomfield. Some of the other appointments at this time were Grand Prairie, Big Lake, Gravel Hill, Spring Creek, Dick's Creek, Poplar Creek and Mount Zion. From 1852 until the beginning of the war the pastors in charge were John McKnight, 1853; Richard Thornton, 1854; J. S. Gooch, 1855; Thomas Golding, 1856; Asa D. West, 1857; Hiram Lipe, 1858; Francis Beggs, 1859 and 1860.

The work of the church in both Missouri and Arkansas progressed favorably, and in 1852 the Arkansas Conference was formed. This growing strength of the old church in these States aroused to the fullest extent the opposition of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The ministers were denounced as abolitionists, and were attacked by pro-slavery mobs, and more than one servant of the Lord met his death at their hands. Indeed, little else could have been expected. The Methodist Episcopal Church was hostile to the institution of slavery. The large majority of the people of Missouri were pro-slavery, and the feeling on the subject ran very high at this time. In the year 1854 an educational society of Jackson, Mo., offered the buildings and grounds belonging to them to the Missouri Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, on condition that a good school be established. The offer was accepted and the school put into operation, with encouraging prospects. Wishing to secure permanency and enlargement, application was made to the Legislature for a charter. After considerable discussion the bill came before the House on February 21, 1855, and was rejected by a vote of sixty to thirty-six. The chief reason urged against it was the anti-slavery sentiment of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1855 the Missouri conference was to meet at Independence, Mo., on October 11, but a public meeting was held in that place on August 13, and so vigorous a remonstrance was made that it was decided to hold the conference in St. Louis. These are some of the evidences of the opposition to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and this continued to increase until the beginning of the war.

Notwithstanding all opposition considerable progress had been made in Southeast Missouri, and four circuits had been formed. Rev. Samuel Huffman was the presiding elder of the St. Louis District to which these circuits belonged, from 1858 until 1861. In the latter year the circuits were supplied as follows: De Soto, F. S. Beggs; Jackson, J. Linan; Fredericktown, J. E. Baker, and Bloomfield, also under the care of F. S. Beggs. Early in the year these men were driven from their circuits, and from that time until 1864 no organized work was attempted. In the spring of that year Allen Williams, John Brooks and William G. Stanfil organized a Sunday-school at Zion Church, seven miles northeast of Bloomfield, and, meeting with success, Rev. William Norman was invited to preach. The next year the conference sent a preacher, Rev. S. G. Miller, to the circuit, and he began the work of organizing societies. There are now on the circuit the following churches: Bloomfield, 14 members; Mount Zion, reorganized in 1865, 44 members; Pleasant Valley, reorganized in 1867, 30 members; New Hope, which came in a body from the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1884, 20 members; Fairview, organized in 1882, 29 members; Puxico, organized in 1885, 23 members; Advance, 18 members; Bethel, 13 members; King's Chapel, 33 members, and Mount Pleasant, 17 members, a total of 10 churches and 240 members. The last four societies are of recent organization, and all of those mentioned, with one or two exceptions, have houses of worship. Since 1865 the pastors in charge of the circuit have been as follows: J. B. Daniel, J. T. Hughes, S. G. Miller, J. S. Harris, A. J. Gaither, P. Huddleston, E. W. McDonald, N. M. Shurick, R. H. Hanson, F. Ballaine, D. W. Crow and G. W. King.

In 1864 Farmington Circuit, embracing the counties of St. Francois, Ste. Genevieve and parts of Iron, Madison, Washington and Jefferson, was reorganized, with Rev. N. J. Giddings as pastor. In 1866 the circuit was divided, and Rev. W. A. Boucher was appointed to the Farmington Circuit. At about this time the church edifice in Farmington, formerly occupied by the Christians, was purchased, refurnished and dedicated to the use of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This church, with three other societies, is now under the pastoral care of Rev. Mr. Creamor. Perryville Circuit now embraces the churches in Perry and Ste. Genevieve Counties. They are Perryville, Cedar Fork, Cross Roads, Ste. Mary's, Independence and perhaps one or two others.

In Cape Girardeau County there has been a considerable number of adherents to the Methodist Episcopal Church since the division in 1845. The society at McKendree Chapel, the oldest organization in the State, remained as a body loyal to the old church, and there is now a fairly strong circuit in that county. Since the close of the late war several societies of the Congregational Methodist Church have been organized in Missouri, and there are now reported in the State 33 ministers, 34 churches and 1,500 members. The majority of these churches are in the counties of Madison, Bollinger, Cape Girardeau, Dunklin, New Madrid and Howell. The conference was organized in 1874 by Epps Tucker, of Alabama. At that time there were but three churches and one minister—Rev. Mr. Watts, the father of N. B. Watts, of Fredericktown.

German Methodists.—There are a few congregations of German Methodists in Southeast Missouri, mostly in Cape Girardeau County. Apple Creek Chapel, of this denomination, was organized in 1848 as a mission, and was attached to the German Methodist congregation, six miles southwest of Jackson, until 1852. The original members were William Schultze and wife, Rosina, Heinrich Tuschoff and wife, Mary, and Heinrich Westmeier and wife, Charlotte. William Schultze was the exhorter, and Heinrich Tuschoff, steward and Sunday-school superintendent. In 1852 a house of worship, a small frame building which is still occupied, was erected, and was dedicated by Rev. Jacob Mueller. In the third year of the pastoral administration of Rev. H. Schultze a parsonage was built, and the mission became a circuit. The pastors have been as follows: Charles Hollman, 1849; Frank Horstmann, 1851; Jacob Mueller, 1853; Theo. Heyer, 1854; C. Hoech, 1856; Henry Schultze, 1860; H. Brune, 1861; W.

Wilkening, 1862; C. Rodenberg, 1865; Y. Young, 1867; H. Hankmeyer, 1869; C. Mardorf, 1872; William Schultze, 1874; W. Wilkening, 1875; F. Koenig, 1877; Ph. Jacoby, 1880; H. Brinkmeyer, 1882; J. P. Wilhelmi, 1884; G. Hurni, 1885; F. Kies. 1888. The present membership is seventy-one.

A church was also organized near Gordonsville, in 1848, by Philip Ruhl, then presiding elder. The original officers were Christian Bartels, Friedrich Schlueter, August Günther, Conrad Boettler and Henry Doerris, Sr., stewards, and John Antonsen, Dedrich Brase and Henry Doerris, Jr., trustees. In 1849 a small frame building was erected, and in 1875 it was replaced by the present commodious brick structure. A good schoolhouse and a comfortable parsonage have also been provided. The pastors of this church have been Charles Hollman, Frank Horstmann, Jacob Mueller, James Hayer, Christoph Hoech, Hy. Schultze, H. Hankmeyer, Fried. Stofregen, William Wilkening, Ferd. Arnsberger, H. Hankmeyer, Charles Ebler, E. W. Simon, William Wilkening, Alfred Wüsch, P. Scaer, M. Nuetzmann and S. Saegesser. The congregation numbers 162 members. In 1867 a mission was established at Cape Girardeau, and was connected with the Apple Creek Circuit until 1884, when it was made a station.

Protestant Episcopal.—There are but two Protestant Episcopal Churches in Southeast Missouri—one at Cape Girardeau and the other at Ironton. The first Episcopal minister to come into this portion of the State was Rev. Thomas Horrell, who emigrated from Maryland to Cape Girardeau County in 1818. He had no church there, but frequently read service and baptized many people. His wife, Ann Mackall, was of a restless disposition, and under her influence he did not tarry long in any one place. After leaving Cape Girardeau County he went to St. Louis. In 1876 George Moore, a native of New York, located at Cape Girardeau, and through his influence a house of worship was erected at the corner of Fountain and Division Streets. It is a brick structure, and was built at a cost of $3,000. Mr. Moore became the first rector. He was succeeded by Rev. T. F. C. James, a native of England, who was installed about 1882, and has since continued in charge of the parish.

St. Paul's Church at Ironton was organized as an Episcopal mission on April 13, 1869, with Judge J. W. Emerson as warden and A. T. Shepherd as secretary. At that time there were but two communicants—a Mrs. Markham and her daughter. The church has been under the care of the following clergymen: O. H. Staples, G. E. Purucker, E. M. Peck, W. H. Fay and the present rector, C. G. Davis. There are now thirty-nine communicants. The church building is a neat, gothic, frame structure, which was built at a cost of over $6,000.

Baptists.—The first Baptists to make a permanent home west of the Mississippi were Thomas Bull and his wife, and the mother of the latter, Mrs. Lee, who located in Cape Girardeau District, about one and a half miles south of Jackson, in the year 1796. The following year Enos Randol and his wife, and the wife of John Abernathy, also Baptists, arrived. A year or two later Rev. Thomas Johnson, a Baptist preacher, who had been a missionary among the Cherokees in Georgia, came to visit his friends in Cape Girardeau District, and while there he baptized Mrs. Agnes Ballew in Randol's Creek. This was, doubtless, the first Protestant baptism administered west of the Mississippi. Mr. Johnson could not, under the then existing government, organize a church, but in 1805 Rev. David Greene, a native of Virginia, who had preached in the Carolinas, but was then a resident of Kentucky, came to Upper Louisiana to preach to some of his former parishioners who had settled in Tywappity Bottom, and there he organized a church. The congregation, however, numbered only some half dozen members, and soon disbanded. Mr. Greene continued preaching among the various settlements, and, finding the field a promising one, he removed his family to Cape Girardeau District, where, in 1809, he died.

On July 19, 1806, Mr. Greene organized Bethel Baptist Church it is believed at the house of Thomas Bull. The members were Thomas English, Leanna Greene, Jane English, Agnes Ballew, William Smith, Thomas Bull, Edward Spears, Anderson Rogers, John Hitt, Clara Abernathy, Catharine Anderson, Rebecca Randol, Francis Hitt and William Mathews. At the meeting in September Thomas Bull was chosen "a writing clerk," a position which he held until 1825. In April, 1807, Rev.

William Mathews was chosen "a singing clerk." On October 11, 1806, the congregation resolved to erect a house of worship, which resolution was put into effect as soon as possible. A small log structure was completed on the farm of Thomas Bull, but it proved to be too small, and in 1812 was replaced by a hewn-log building, which is still standing. The membership was now 80, and one year later it had increased to 186. In June, 1814, 45 members were dismissed to organize a church in what is now St. Francois County, but even after this dismissal there remained 173 members. In 1809 Bethel Church was received into Red River Association, which met at old Red River Church, near Clarksville, Tenn. It remained a member of this association until 1816, when it was decided to form a new association of the churches in Missouri.

On the second Sabbath in June, 1816, a convention for the organization of Bethel Association met at Bethel Church, and was opened by prayer by Thomas Donohue. A sermon was delivered by Elder James Edwards, after which an organization was effected. The delegates present were as follows: Bethel Church—Thomas Bull, John Sheppard, Elder Benjamin Thompson and Robert English; Tywappity Church—Henry Cockerham, J. W. Baldwin and William Ross; Saline Church—Elder Thomas Donohue and John Duvall; St. Francois Church—William Street and Jonathan Hubble; Turkey Creek Church—William Johnson, Daniel Johnson, E. Revell and S. Baker. Elders Henry Cockerham, John Farrar, Thomas Donohue and James P. Edwards were appointed to preach and constitute churches. The convention adjourned to meet the last Saturday in September at the same place to complete the organization of the association. At this meeting there were present delegates from the following churches, representing an aggregate membership of 230: Bethel, Tywappity, Providence, Barren, Bellevue, St. Francois and Dry Creek.

Providence Church was constituted in August, 1814, by Elders Wilson, Thompson, John Farrar and James E. Welch, in a small log house on the St. Francois River, in Madison County, not very far from Fredericktown. The Barren Church was organized on the first Saturday in July, 1816, and was administered to by Thomas Donohue until his death. It soon after became extinct. Among its members were Obadiah Scott, Elisha Belcher and Mr. Duvall. St. Francois Church was constituted in 1814, but it had previously existed as the "St. Francois arm of the Bethel Church." It held its meetings in what is now Wayne County, and its pastor was William Street. Tywappity Church was the successor of the first church organized, which was re-established in 1809.

Bethel Church was at this time in a highly prosperous condition. In March, 1818, Rev. Thomas P. Greene, the father of Samuel M. Greene, of Cape Girardeau, was called to the pastorate, and administered to the church until 1826, when he was succeeded by Elder Benjamin Thompson.

The following facts, taken from the records of this church, furnish a clue to the customs and usages of the Baptist societies at that time: In 1808 Thomas Wright and two other members of his family were excluded from the church for holding Armenian views, and in 1811 John Reynolds was excluded for joining the Masonic Lodge. At a meeting in 1818 it was resolved that Hannah Edwards be allowed to wear gold earrings for the benefit of her health. The following is an entry on the minutes of March 11, 1820: "Church in conference. Query: If a member is constrained to shout shall the church bear with it. Answer. Yes."

Of the early ministers of Bethel Association may be mentioned Henry Cockerham, John Farrar, William Street, Wilson Thompson, James P. Edwards, Wingate Jackson and Thomas P. Greene. Cockerham was one of the first settlers in Scott County, and was a man of considerable wealth. John Farrar was ordained on June 18, 1814, and resided in Madison County until 1825, when he removed to Washington County, where he died in 1829. William Street was an early settler in Wayne County, and was a large land and slave owner. He was very highly esteemed, both as a citizen and as a minister. He died about 1843. Wilson Thompson was born in Kentucky in 1788, and in 1811 he came to Cape Girardeau District, where he engaged in teaching school and preaching. His uncle, Benjamin Thompson, was converted by him, and became a preacher of some note. During a revival season extending over some eighteen months in 1812-13 he is said to have baptized between 400 and 500 persons. A short time after he removed to Ohio. James P. Edwards came to Cape Girardeau from Kentucky in 1811. He had studied law, but on April 10, 1812, he was ordained to the ministry, and in 1818 removed to Illinois. Wingate Jackson was born in Virginia in 1776, and removed to Kentucky with his parents at about the time of the transfer of Louisiana to the United States, and located in New Tennessee, where he died in 1835. Thomas P. Greene was a native of North Carolina. In 1807, at the age of seventeen, he removed to Tennessee, and ten years later located in Cape Girardeau County, where he remained until 1831, when he went to St. Louis and became pastor of the Second Baptist Church. He died July 11, 1843.

In 1820 Elder Wingate Jackson established a church in New Tennessee, in Ste. Genevieve County. It was named Hephzibah Church, and embraced in its membership Elder Wingate Jackson, Obadiah Scott, Noah Hunt and Joel and Enos Hamers. In 1822 Bethel Association appointed three elders to travel and establish churches in Arkansas. They constituted two churches—Union and Little Flock—both of which were received into membership. In 1825 Pendleton Church was constituted in a settlement six miles west of Farmington. James Halbert was its pastor until 1838, when he was succeeded by William Polk, who ministered to the congregation for twenty years or more. In the summer of 1841 New Hope Church was organized at the house of L. Parks, five miles east of Farmington, with fifteen members. In 1859 there were three new churches, Mount Zion, White Oak Grove and Locust Grove, admitted to membership in Bethel Association, which then embraced a membership of 834. But during the same year eight churches were dismissed to form the Central Missouri Association.

In 1870 there was only ten churches and 311 members. Two years later, however, there were reported 627 members.

In 1887 the following report of membership was made by the churches of Bethel Association: New Hope, 48; Pendleton, 65; Bethany, 65; Colony, 66; Texas, 54; Bethel, 75; Pleasant Union, 34; New Tennessee, 66; Little Vine, 81; Liberty, 56; Saline, 49; Pleasant Valley, 55; Pleasant Hill, 82; Rock Creek, 79; Big Creek, 111; Oak Grove, 64; Spring Valley, 41; and Brush Creek, 23; a total of 1,114. The most of these churches are in St. Francois and Ste. Genevieve Counties, but there are one or two in Madison and Iron Counties. The association belongs to the United Baptists, is mildly anti-mission, and practices feet-washing as an ordinance.

In 1824 nine churches were dismissed from Bethel Association, to form Cape Girardeau Association, and on June 12 of that year a convention met at Hebron Church to effect an organization. The ministers present were Benjamin Thompson, James Williams, Ed. Kerr, J. P. Edwards, Jeremiah Brown, David Orr, Thomas P. Greene, James Halbert, John M. Peck and Wingate Jackson, the last three of whom were from Bethel and Missouri Associations. The churches represented were Bethel, Dry Creek, Tywappity, Apple Creek, Ebenezer, Big Prairie, Hebron, Jackson and two churches in Illinois. Hebron Church was organized in the neighborhood of where the "poor farm" in Cape Girardeau County now is, on May 11, 1822, with the following members: Polly Greene, Abraham Randol, Rebecca and Mary Randol, Simon and Rebecca Poe, James and Francis Holcomb, James and Nancy Randol, Susanah and Matilda Williams, and Benjamin and Sarah Hitt. Jackson Church was constituted in 1824, with only seven members. They were Isaac Sheppard, William Surrell, John Juden, Sr., John Juden, Jr., James Massey, John Daugherty and Francis Thomas. Apple Creek Church was at first known as an arm of Bethel Church, and was given a separate organization about 1820. Ebenezer Church was organized in the Big Bend on June 9, 1821, with five members dismissed from Bethel Church.

Cape Girardeau Association, when organized, embraced the counties of Cape Girardeau, Scott, Mississippi and Perry, and was in a prosperous condition until about 1837. During that time new churches were received as follows: Pleasant Hill, Scott County, in 1828; Mount Moriah, in Mathews' Prairie, in 1830; Union, in 1832; Cypress, in Scott County, in 1827; Harmony, in Mississippi County, in 1830; Mount Zion, in 1830, and Cape Girardeau in 1834. The last named church was organized by Thomas P. Greene on August 13, 1834, with nine members.

Between 1835 and 1840 the question of missions began to cause trouble in Cape Girardeau Association, and much bad feeling was engendered between the mission and anti-mission factions. The association had been doing local missionary work since its organization, and had met with little or no resistance; but the growth of the missionary spirit and the agitation of the anti-mission doctrine in other associations soon developed the anti-mission strength of this association. The anti-mission party was found to be the stronger of the two factions, and in 1840 eight churches withdrew and formed the New Cape Girardeau Association. They were Cape Girardeau, Mount Zion, Harmony, Mount Moriah, Pleasant Grove, which was organized in Perry County, in 1839, Cypress, Pleasant Hill and Little River. This left twelve churches in the old organization, which took the name of "Cape Girardeau Association of Regular Baptists." The principles of the old body were contrary to the spirit of the age, and it began to decay almost from the separation. Old members died or left it for other denominations, and few new members were received. Now there are scarcely a half dozen organizations of Regular Baptists in all Southeast Missouri. The new Cape Girardeau Association, on the other hand, was prosperous from the first, but during the war it suffered severely, and from 1864 to 1867 there was but one minister, John H. Clark, doing work within the bounds. It recovered, however, soon after, and in 1876 there were reported 29 churches. Since that time the territory has been greatly reduced, and now embraces only Cape Girardeau County. The following was the report of churches and membership in August, 1887: Cape Girardeau, 59; Hubble Creek, 59; Hickory Ridge, 42; Caney Fork, 19; Gravel Hill, 71; Burfordsville, 10; Jackson, 69; Millerville, 14; Oak Ridge, 150; New Bethel, 63; Pleasant Grove, 107; and Stroderville, 19, a total of 682.

Hubble Creek Church was organized in 1860 by Elders J. H. Clark and J. C. Maple. Among the first members were J. C. and Susan Taylor, B. S. and Martha S. Taylor, Martha Gordon, M. E. A. Taylor, R. M. and T. W. English, Z. T. and M. A. Lail, James Benson, A. Benson, A. B. and S. E. Chary and A. J. English. Meetings were held in a log schoolhouse until 1865, when a frame building was erected.

The original members were William Wilson, Robert McKnight, Charles Hinkle, Daniel Sides, Edward Wilson (colored), Elizabeth Dunlap, Elizabeth Chandler, Jane and Jerusha Wilson, H. E. and Permelia Hempstead, and Daniel and Lena Sides. In 1860 a portion of the members became dissatisfied and built a new church, and in 1864 Rev. J. G. Rutter organized the Oak Ridge Baptist Church, with five members: William Clippard, Natie M. Clippard, Samuel W. and Eliza J. Lewis and Elizabeth Hickman. In 1876 the Goshen Church was united with the Oak Ridge Church. The pastors of this congregation have been J. G. Rutter, B. L. Bowman, V. T. Settle, T. A. Bowman, D. W. Graves and W. H. Welker.

Clark, Mary and Nancy E. Stroder, John E. and Sarah Moore, Ella and Mary Arnold and Sarah E. Clark. Millersville Church was organized in June, 1887, by Rev. J. C. Hembree, and at once began the erection of a house of worship, which has just been completed.

Burfordsville Church was organized in April, 1887, by Elders W. H. Welker and J. C. Hembree, and has since been under the pastoral care of B. L. Bowman. Gravel Hill Church was organized in 1871. The present organization of the Jackson Church was made in January, 1856, by Rev. J. B. Fuqua and Dr. A. Sherwood, with only four members, but during the same year thirty-seven members were received. In February, 1857, H. H. M. Williams, D. L. Conrad, T. J. Johnson, George M. Beattie and J. J. Thornburgh were appointed to superintend the building of a house, which was completed the following November. The pastors of this church have been as follows: G. W. Coker, two years; J. H. Clark, two years; J. C. Maple, four years; J. P. Bridwell, one year; James Reid, eight years; T. H. Bowman, three years; J. P. Hickman, seven years, and W. D. Stevens since 1887.

Black River Baptist Association was organized with six churches dismissed from Cape Girardeau Association, on November 14, 1835, at Greeneville, Wayne County. Henry McElmurry was chosen moderator, and S. B. McKnight, clerk. The churches were represented as follows: Black River, by H. McElmurry and William Macom; Cherokee Bay, Elder S. Winingham; Columbia, by Samuel Mitchell and Mathias Mack; Big Creek, by George Graham; Bear Creek, by William Smith, and Greeneville, by William Bennett and Anthony Jarrett. The total membership of these churches was 188. Big Creek, Bear Creek and Greeneville were all constituted in 1835, and Black River in 1831. In June, 1836, Providence Church, in Stoddard County, was organized, and was represented in the association of that year by Elder William Keys and John Harty. During the same year Mount Zion Church was organized on Brush Creek, in Wayne County. The association prospered, and new churches were constituted as follows: Mount Pleasant, in Wayne County, in July, 1837; New Hope, in 1838, by Elder W. W. Settle; Union, in 1839, by Elder William Keys; Salem, in 1840, by Elder S. Winingham; Shiloh, in 1841, by Elder B. J. Clark; Cane Creek, in Butler County, in 1842, by Elder Henry McElmurry; Mount Tabor, in 1842, by Elder William Macom, and Hopewell, in 1842, by Elder Henry McElmurry. In 1850 the number of churches had increased to twenty-four, and the aggregate membership to 1,079, but now twelve churches were dismissed to form St. Francois Association. Up to this time the boundaries of Black River Association included Wayne, Stoddard, Dunklin, Bollinger and a part of Madison.

In 1857 another colony of five churches was set off to organize Cane Creek Association, but there were still eighteen churches remaining. In 1860 the association met at Bloomfield, at which time the following churches were represented: Providence, Bloomfield, organized in 1846 as Stoddard Baptist Church, one mile northeast of Bloomfield; Gravel Hill, constituted in 1859 in Stoddard County; Bethany, in Stoddard County, organized in 1853; Mount Pleasant, Kennett and Grand Prairie, organized in Dunklin County in 1854; Bethlehem, organized in 1847; Palestine, organized in Dunklin County in 1857; Shiloh, organized in Pemiscot County in 1857; Oak Grove, organized in 1858 in Dunklin County; Pleasant Valley, White Oak Grove, organized in Stoddard County in 1858; New Hope, Mount Union, Duck Creek, Pleasant Grove, Ebenezer, Point Pleasant, Union, Friendship, Concord and Cartersville. The last three were organized in 1860. The aggregate membership of the association at this time was 962. During the war there were no meetings of the association, and in 1866 only three churches were represented, but one new church was admitted at this session, and eight at the next. In 1869 thirty churches reported a membership of 1,726, with 338 baptisms during the year. In 1881 the association had become so large that it was divided into two districts, and the following year the churches in the territory east of Little River were dismissed to organize a new association. The fifty-second annual meeting of the Black River Association was held in the Shady Grove Church, in Dunklin County, on August 5, 1887, at which time the following membership was reported: Antioch, 127; Bloomfield, 38; Dexter, 21; Duck Creek, 122; Liberty, 38; Liberty Hill, 13; Mount Pisgah, 14; Philadelphia, 127; Providence, 60; Spring Hill, 37; Pleasant Hill, 11; Four Mile, 18; Friendship, 50; Holy Grove, 94; Harmony, 45; Malden, 18; New Prospect, 18, Oak Grove, 153; Rush Creek, 18, and Shady Grove, 66—a total of twenty churches and 1,098 members. The first eleven of the above named churches are in Stoddard County, and the remainder in Dunklin.

The delegates from the twelve churches dismissed from Black River Association in 1850 met on the second Sabbath in October of that year at Castor Church, in Madison County, and organized the "St. Francois Association of United Baptists." The churches were Little Flock, organized in 1849; Little Vine, organized in 1846; Castor, organized in 1845; Webb's Creek, organized in 1849; Grassey, organized in Wayne County in 1850; Sinking Creek, organized in 1845; Perkin's Creek, organized in 1848; Cedar Creek, in Wayne County, organized in 1844; New Hope, constituted in 1840; Big Creek, constituted in 1835, and Mount Pleasant, organized in Wayne County, in 1837. These churches were in Madison, Wayne and Bollinger Counties. The first annual meeting of the association was held at Little Vine Church, in Madison County, on September 27, 1851, at which time the following ministers were present: C. T. Graham, W. W. Settle, J. Duncan, J. B. Wallis, A. Hughes, R. S. Eaton and S. M. Ranhoff. At this session Zion Church, in Wayne County, and Salem Church, in Bollinger County, were admitted. The association prospered and increased, and in 1860 it included twenty churches. During 1861 and 1862 no meetings were held, but in 1863 ten churches reported, and a session was held at Big Creek, Madison County. In 1874 the association numbered thirty-seven churches and 1,400 members, but two years later several churches were dismissed to organize Wayne County Association, and in 1878 there were only twenty-three churches and 1,200 members. At the meeting in 1887 the twenty-one churches reported the following membership: Bethel, 22; Friendship, 37; Little White Water, 75; Marble Hill, 150; Mount Carmel, 86; Bollinger's Mill, 50; New Salem, 52; Pleasant Hill, 34; Trace Creek, 62; Twelve Mile, 99; Big Creek, 66; Beulah, 35; Brush Creek, 68; Castor, 138; Ebenezer, 36; Fredericktown, 27; Mount Pisgah, 66; Shady Grove, 51; Sylvan, 32; Twelve Mile, 99; White Water, 8; Hickory Grove, 31—a total of 1,135. Two churches, Mount Lebanon and Mount Pleasant, were not represented.

The church at Fredericktown was organized in January, 1870, by Elders W. W. Settle and Silas Livermore. The congregation met in a hall, and was preached to by Mr. Settle until his death in 1871. It then became scattered, and was reorganized in 1872 with thirteen members. It is now under the pastoral care of Rev. V.

T. Settle. Marble Church was constituted in November, 1840, by Elders B. Clark and Moses Bailey, at the house of the latter, on Hog Creek. The original members were Moses and Sarah Bailey, Polly Clark, Rachel Shanks, Margaret Bailey and perhaps John C. Williams, Peter Bess and Isaac Lankershaw. The church was first called New Hope. After a few years a division of the congregation took place, and the part from which the Marble Hill Church descended met at the house of Joseph Slinkard, on Crooked Creek. About 1851 the church was moved to town, where a house of worship was erected some five years later. Castor Church was organized by Elders Graham, Settle and Eaton, in July, 1845, fourteen miles south of Fredericktown. A log house was built in 1847, and in 1859 a frame building was erected. A new house is now nearly completed in the town of Marquand. As has been stated Big Creek Church was organized in 1835, but no house of worship was built until 1854. The first pastor was Henry McElmurry. His successor was Rev. C. T. Graham, who continued in that capacity for twenty-two years.

Wayne County Association was organized at McKenzie Creek Church on October 16, 1875, with the following churches, representing an aggregate membership of 444: McKenzie Creek, Phillipi, Oak Grove, Good Hope, Black River, Bethel, Lebanon, Logan's Creek, Big Lake Creek, Mount Pleasant, Liberty Hill and Pleasant Grove. The ministers present were Isaac Lane, A. R. L. Meador, J. W. Wilson, J. B. Wallace, M. A. Taylor and Daniel Sheets. The second session was held with Lebanon Church, and Pleasant Valley, Greeneville and Otter Creek Churches were admitted. In 1878 Des Arc, Mill Creek, Mount Zion, Little Lake and Little Flock were received, and in 1887 the churches and membership reported were as follows: Piedmont, 114; Lebanon, 99; Phillipi, 24; Oak Grove, 34; Logan's Creek, 39; Liberty Hill, 27; Des Arc, 54; Otter Creek, 28; Mount Pleasant, 97; Little Lake, 82; Big Lake, 60; Mill Creek, 54; Big Brushy, 76; New Prospect, 79; Black River, 57; Bethel, 80; Greeneville, 47; Mount Zion, 40; Little Flock, 22; Sinking Creek, 52; Trace Creek, 58; Bethlehem, 35; Pleasant Spring, 29; Bear Creek, 34; Cedar Creek, 54; Williamsville, 12; New Prospect No. 2, 14; Mount Olive, 63; Rowland Hill, 121; Patterson, 9; Van Buren, 8—a total of 1,522 members and 31 churches.

In 1857 Black River Association dismissed 5 churches, situated in Ripley and Butler Counties, for the purpose of organizing a new association, to be known as Cane Creek Association, but the organization does not seem to have been effected until 1861. The five churches were Cane Creek, Black River, Antioch, Mars Hill and New Hope. Of these churches Black River was the oldest, having been constituted in 1831. Cane Creek was organized in 1842; Mars Hill, in 1845; Antioch, in 1850, and New Hope in 1854. In 1875 seven churches reported. They were Bethel, Cane Creek, Friendship, Good Hope, Indian Creek, Liberty, Little Flock and Poplar Bluff. In 1886 Cane Creek Association reported 9 ordained ministers, 19 churches and 492 members. The Poplar Bluff Church was first organized on May 25, 1867, by William R. Combs, who served as pastor until 1872, when the church became extinct. It was reorganized in May, 1882, and in June of the following year a house of worship was completed.

Charleston Association was organized in 1876, with four small churches and a total membership of 146. Since that time the association has been very prosperous, and new churches have been added from year to year until in 1887 there were reported 18 churches and 656 members; 13 are in Scott County, 3 in Mississippi and 2 in New Madrid. The churches are as follows: Benton, Bethany, Bethel, Diehlstadt, Harmony, Hickory Grove, Hopewell, Little River, Morley, Mount Moriah, New Providence, Oran, Pleasant Hill, Pleasant Valley, Savannah, Sikeston, Unity and Zion.

Mount Moriah Church was organized in Mathews' Prairie in 1830, and in 1835 a log house was built. The deacons at that time were Isaac Sheppard and John Kennedy. About 1859 a house of worship was erected in the town of Charleston, where the congregation has since worshipped.

Harmony Church, in Mississippi County, was first organized in 1830, and reorganized on April 29, 1855, by W. D. Terry, M. W. Holland, H. B. Graves and G. W. Coker.

The church at Diehlstadt was first organized in Scott County as Cypress Church in 1827, and was reorganized under the same name, in August, 1847, by Elder H. E. Hempstead, with four members. On August 28, 1867, it was again reorganized by Rev. J. G. Shearer. The present church building was completed in 1881, and dedicated by Rev. I. E. Anderson.

Oran Church was originally constituted as Little River Church, about 1845, by Rev. Thomas Owens, with five members. In 1871 it was reorganized as Sylvania Church.

Hopewell was constituted in November, 1874, by Elder D. M. Green, with six members. Meetings are held in a log house, erected the same year.

Hickory Grove Church was organized, in October, 1881, by Revs. I. E. Anderson, W. C. Darby and W. K. Rainbolt, and the following year a log house was erected.

Bethany Church was organized by Elders B. L. and T. A. Bowman on March 7, 1881, with twelve members.

Pleasant Valley Church was constituted, on October 25, 1885, by Elders H. H. Richardson and I. E. Anderson.

The church at Morley was organized, in July, 1871, by Rev. J. Reid, with about ten members. Two years later a house of worship was completed, but since that time services have not been held continuously.

New Providence, Unity and Benton were organized in 1886, and Savannah and Zion in 1887.

New Madrid Association was organized from the churches in New Madrid and Pemiscot Counties in 1883, and in 1887 the following churches and members were reported: Dry Bayou, 47; Evergreen, 52; Landmark Rest; Little River Landmark, 38; Macedonia, 54; Amity, 45; Oak Grove, 50; Zion, 70; Liberty, 12, and Beulah, 35—10 churches and 403 members. The ministers in the association are R. M. Morgan, C. Downing, W. W. Ellis, W. G. Henson, T. Hogan and A. M. O'Quin.

Franklin Association was organized at the house of J. C. Duckworth, in 1832, with Rev. James Williams as moderator. It embraced the counties of Franklin and Washington and parts of Jefferson, St. Francois, Gasconade and Crawford. The first meeting was held at Meramec Church September 14-17, 1832, at which time there were present delegates from ten churches, representing a membership of 374. In 1835 the association met at Providence Church in St. Francois County, and at that time there were reported 20 churches, 11 ordained ministers and 797 members. A large part of the territory covered by this association is also occupied by the United Baptists, but it has been steadily growing in strength. In 1887 the report of churches and membership was as follows: Black River, 150; Barnesville, 84; Centreville, 79; Chestnut Ridge, 97; Cortoise, 21; Farmington, 50; Emmaus, 21; Harmony, 69; Ironton, 34; Liberty, 93; Little Vine, 75; Mount Zion, 96; Miner's Rest, 60; New Prospect, 31; Prospect, 102; Providence, 137; St. Francois, 89; Union, 202; Pilgrim's Rest, 38; Hopewell, 20, and Pleasant Grove, 23—a total of 21 churches and 1,652 members.

Union is one of the oldest congregations, if not the oldest, in the association. It was organized on May 7, 1832, by James Williams, Thomas P. Greene and James Cundiff. It is now one of the largest country societies in the State.

The church at Ironton was organized about 1872, but it had no regular pastor until 1876, when a house of worship, a comfortable brick structure, was erected. There had been an organization at this place, made about 1858, but it was broken up during the war.

The Farmington Church is of recent origin, and no church building has been erected, but services are held in the college chapel.

In 1859 Bethel Association dismissed the following churches to form a new association in Iron County: Mount Pleasant, Big Creek, Pleasant Grove, White Oak Grove, Sugar Tree Grove, Mount Gilead, Mount Zion and Locust Grove. Elders William Polk, Henry Young and James Ritter volunteered to meet and assist in the organization. This was the origin of the Central Missouri Association, from which, in 1867, seven churches were dismissed to form Concord Association. The latter was organized on the first Saturday in December, 1867, when the representatives of four churches—Big Creek, Bethlehem, Mount Zion and Pilgrim's Rest—met at Big Creek Church, in Iron County. Isaac Lam was chosen moderator, and E. C. Smith, clerk. This association belongs to the wing of the church known as United Baptists, and practices foot-washing as an ordinance. The first annual meeting was held in October, 1868, when New Prospect, Pleasant Exchange, Mount Gilead and Sugar Tree Grove were admitted, Highland Church was admitted the following year. In 1870 two churches—Pilgrim's Rest and Mount Zion—were excluded for violating United Baptist practices. The following year Dining Chapel, Pleasant Valley, Locust Grove, White Oak Grove, Black Oak Grove and Friendship were received into membership. In 1886 the association reported to the General Association sixteen churches and 400 members. The most of them are in Iron and Reynolds Counties.

In many counties of Southeast Missouri there are a large number of General Baptists. The first church of this denomination in Missouri was organized in Ozark County, in 1847, by Elder Thomas Norris, and named Mount Lebanon. In 1862 Liberty Association was organized in either Bollinger or Cape Girardeau County, by William Dornell and Uriah Stratton. In 1878 this association was composed of the following churches: Mount Gilead (Stoddard County), Oak Ridge, Union, Bethlehem, Beachwell, White Oak Grove, Pleasant Grove (Dunklin County), New Bethel, Mount Gilead (Dunklin County), Pleasant Grove, Bollinger (Bollinger County), Cane Creek, Union Ridge, New Harmony, Sulphur Spring, Gravelly Hill, Friendship, Mount Carmel, New Liberty, Pine Grove and Hickory Grove. The aggregate membership was 893. The next year several of these churches were set off to form another association, which was denominated New Liberty Association. The organization was made with J. F. Patterson as moderator. Seventeen churches—nine in Stoddard, five in Dunklin, one in Butler and two in Clay County, Ark.—composed the association. Its growth has since been very rapid, and it now embraces twenty-seven churches and 1,609 members. The following are the churches and the membership of each: New Hope, 38; Mount Gilead, 46; Pleasant Grove, 48; Mount Pisgah, 38; Friendship, 56; New Bethlehem, 71; St. Joseph, 93; Beech Grove, 58; Guide Star, 29; New Bethel, 88; Bethany, 50; Mount Gilead (Dunklin County), 130; Mount Gilead (Stoddard County), 56; White Oak Grove, 69; Beachwell, 202; Bethlehem, 58; Gravel Hill, 50; Pleasant Hill, 38; Lone Oak, 68; Malden, 80; Pleasant Valley, 38; Bunker Hill, 16; New Gravel Hill, 77; Liberty Hill, 77; Canaan, 32; Liberty, 10; Hopewell, 34.

In 1885 Western Liberty Association was organized from churches situated for the most part in Madison and Wayne Counties. In 1887 this association reported twenty-four churches and 523 members. The following is a list of the churches and their membership so far as given: Antioch, 64; Black Mountain, 30; Cedar Chapel; Cool Springs; Freeland, 14; Fair View, 11; Free Union, 25; Green Hill; Happy Zion, 32; Mount Pisgah, 55; New Home, 29; New Liberty, 33; Pleasant Valley, 14; Pilgrim's Rest; Shady Grove, 20; Shiloh, 41; Union Hill, 82; Union Grove, 13; Walnut Grove; Bethlehem, 15; Oak Grove, 7; Mount Zion, 9; Pine Grove, 30 and O'Bannon, 13.

There is also a considerable number of Free-Will Baptist organizations in Southeast Missouri, mainly in the counties of Madison, Wayne, Stoddard and Bollinger, and a movement is now on foot to unite them with the General Baptists, under the name of the General Free-Will Baptists.

Christian Church.—That class of believers known as Disciples of Christ or Christians originated in that great wave of religious awakening which swept over the country at about the beginning of the present century. At very nearly the same time Elders B. W. Stone in Kentucky and Thomas and Alexander Campbell in Pennsylvania, all formerly of the Presbyterian Church, began preaching the doctrines of what has since been denominated the Christian Church, but at first termed by outsiders "Campbellite" or "Stoneite." The original purpose of these reformers was to heal the divisions in the religious world, and to establish a common basis of Christian union. This was to be accomplished by taking the expressed teachings of the Bible as the only creed. The interpretation of these teachings, however, it was found could not be left to the individual, and the doctrines of baptism by immersion and baptism for the remission of sins became the distinctive features of this new sect. Churches were rapidly formed, and the new teachings spread into nearly all of the States, but gained an especially strong foothold in Kentucky and Tennessee. The first teacher of the new faith in Missouri was Rev. William McMurtry, a carpenter by trade, who came from Virginia in the year 1819, and located in Madison County. In 1822 he organized a church in a log schoolhouse, at what is now the village of Libertyville. It was formed with three members, which four years later had increased to only nine. In 1844 a frame church building was erected, which in 1860 was replaced by the present brick structure. Among the pastors who have served this church have been William McMurtry, John C. Farmer, Sterling Price, John C. Farmer (second term), A. G. Lucas, Mr. Chance, B. F. Wilson, T. E. Sheppard, J. D. Dillard, R. Watson, T. P. Reid, W. H. Hale and several others. The congregation now numbers 120 members. Soon after the organization of Liberty Church a society was formed in Madison County, three miles east of Fredericktown, where a church, called Antioch, was built some time in the "thirties." Among the first members were George Nifong, Jacob Nifong, Ephraim Potter, Joseph Bennett, James Marshall and their families.

About forty years ago a Christian Church was organized in the New Tennessee settlement in Ste. Genevieve County. Robert Griffith, J. M. Powell, Valentine Underwood and Peter Bloom were among the members.

In 1854 a society was organized at Farmington by Elder S. S. Church, of St. Louis. A large brick church building was erected, but was not fully paid for. The debt was finally assumed by Stephen E. Douthett, who held the property for the use of the church until his death. It was then purchased by the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is now held by them. In 1875, through the efforts of Thomas E. Douthett, the Christian Church was reorganized, and the house formerly occupied by the Methodist Episcopal Church South was purchased. It was afterward exchanged for the old Presbyterian Church.

The four churches mentioned above were almost the only ones in this portion of the State until within the past ten or fifteen years. They are now increasing quite rapidly. In Madison County there are four or five congregations—one at Fredericktown, at Mine La Motte, on Whitewater, at Higdon's Chapel and at Marquand.

In 1877 a church was organized at Poplar Bluff by Elder E. R. Childress, with fifteen or twenty members, but it gradually declined, and became extinct within three or four years. In May, 1887, it was reorganized by Rev. G. A. Hoffman with twenty-two members, and during the same year a house of worship was erected. Recently the church has received a large number of additions, and now has a membership of 145.

In 1879 a Christian Church was organized at Dexter by Rev. Thomas Sheppard, with a very small membership. In 1883 a church building was erected, and the society now numbers thirty-two members.

In 1886 a church was organized at Malden, which now numbers thirty members, and there is also a society of recent organization at Kennett.

In Wayne County there are organizations at Piedmont, Greeneville, Mill Springs, Greenwood Valley and Coldwater, and all have houses except the last named, which worships in a Baptist Church.

There is a church at Marble Hill, in Bollinger County, and in St. Francois County there are organizations of recent date at Bismarck, Knob Lick and Bonne Terre. A new church has also been built on the Saline, in Ste. Genevieve County.

Presbyterians.—The Presbyterians did not begin preaching the gospel in Missouri until after the Methodists and Baptists had been engaged in the work for several years. The first Presbyterian society was organized in the Belleview settlement, in Washington County, on August 2, 1816. The second was Bon Homme Church, in St. Louis County, on October 6, 1816, and the third, the First Church of St. Louis, on November 23, 1817. The presbytery of Missouri was formed by the synod of Tennessee, and held its first meeting in St. Louis on December 18, 1817. It then included all the territory in the United States west of the meridian passing through the mouth of the Cumberland River. The ministers of the presbytery were Solomon Giddings, Timothy Flint, Thomas Donnell and John Mathews. In 1831 the synod of Illinois was formed, and the presbytery of Missouri was divided into three presbyteries, St. Louis, Missouri and St. Charles. The next year the synod of Missouri was formed, and held its first meeting at St. Louis on the second Thursday in October, 1832. The number of churches in the synod at that time is not known, but forty had been organized. The ministers numbered eighteen. In 1837 the Presbyterian General Assembly passed the famous "Excision Act," severing all ecclesiastical relations with several synods, and causing the organization in 1838 of what was popularly known as the New School General Assembly. This action led to a division of synods, presbyteries and churches throughout the United States. In 1839 the presbytery of Missouri decided to adhere to the old general assembly, and the following year a similar decision was reached by the St. Charles Presbytery, by a vote of nine to five. The opposing members, however, withdrew, and organized the North Missouri Presbytery, while the remaining members changed the name of St. Charles to Palmyra. The St. Louis Presbytery also became divided, but each faction retained the original name. At its meeting in 1843 the synod of Missouri (old school) passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the request of the presbytery of St. Louis be granted, and that a new presbytery be and the same is erected, to be called Potosi, to be bounded on the north by the southern line of the counties of Jefferson, Franklin, Gasconade and Osage, and on the west by the east line of the presbytery of Missouri.*

The presbytery was organized at Farmington, on April 4, 1844, at which time the ministers present were John F. Cowan, who preached the opening sermon, D. E. Y. Rice and Robert G. Barrett. John McLean and James M. Covington were absent.

The churches represented were North Apple Creek, by J. McNeely; Whitewater, by Peter Statler; Second Apple Creek, by Seth Hall; Belleview and Potosi, by Robert Sloan, and Farmington, by John D. Peers. The churches not represented were Brazeau, Jackson, Salem, Clark's Creek, Pleasant Hill, Castor and Steelville.

The transactions of the presbytery present little of interest beyond the usual routine of such a body until 1866, when the question of ecclesiastical relations came up. In that year the general assembly of the old school church in the North took such decided action in reference to matters growing out of the war as to give great offense to a large number of ministers and churches. The synod of Missouri thus became divided. A part wished to sever all ecclesiastical relations with the general assembly, and these declared themselves an independent synod, but finally united with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States. The party approving the action of the general assembly continued in connection with that body as the synod of Missouri. The presbytery of Potosi did not approve of the action of the general assembly, nor did it yield allegiance to the independent synod, but avoided a discussion of the question until after the union of the old school and new school assemblies, when the greater portion of the presbytery applied for admission to the independent synod, and went with it into the Southern General Assembly. It now contains sixteen churches, with an aggregate membership of 996.

One of the oldest churches in the presbytery of Potosi is the First Church of Apple Creek, in Cape Girardeau County, which was organized on May 21, 1821, by Rev. Salmon Giddings, with forty-one members, of whom Mitchell Fleming, John Gilliland and Oliver Harris were elected ruling elders. The organization took place in a grove a short distance from where the church now stands, and at the same place, the following spring, a sacramental meeting was held by Rev. Thomas Donnell. The number of communicants had increased to about seventy, and during this and the following year the eldership was increased by the election of Ebenezer Flinn, James Hope, John Harris, John Little and James Stevenson. To these were added, between 1828 and 1832, John N. Adams, Josiah McNeely, John McNeely, Ed. L. Harris, Elam Harris, John Wallace and Elam L. Adams. The church had no regular pastor until 1832, when Rev. John F. Cowan was installed in that position and continued until April, 1836. During the next four years the church was supplied by Rev. John McLean and Rev. J. L. Frary. In 1840 the church became divided on the questions then agitating the Presbyterians of the United States, the new congregation taking the name of the South Apple Creek Church, and the old church adding the prefix North to its original name. In 1842 R. G. Barrett became stated supply to the old church, and in April, 1843, was installed as pastor. He died the next year, and was succeeded by Rev. A. Munson, who continued until June, 1866. The church now has a membership of eighty-four, and maintains a flourishing Sabbath-school.

The South Apple Creek Church was organized in 1841 with Elders Ebenezer Flinn, E. W. Harris, E. L. Adams and Elam Harris and a large number of other members from the old church. The pastors have been J. L. Frary, 1841-43; Rev. D. E. Y. Rice, 1843-51; A. Munson, 1851-65; James Stafford, 1865-72; O. W. Ganss, 1872-73; John Branch, 1873-74; C. W. Alexander, 1874-78; J. B. Rubey, 1878-79; O. P. Keach, 1879-83; J. W. Roseborough, 1883. The present membership of the church is 140. For about ten years prior to the war a very flourishing school was taught at Pleasant Hill. It was established by Rev. Mr. Bidler, with Robert Caldwell as an assistant. After one year Prof. Andrews assumed the management of the institution, and remained a year or two. Prof. J. G. Wells then became the principal, and so continued until the beginning of the war. He was an excellent educator, and under his management the school obtained wide reputation for its excellence.

A church was organized at Brazeau on September 12, 1819, with twenty members, and has since been in continuous existence. It is now the strongest church in the presbytery, having a membership of 132.

The church at Farmington grew out of the missionary labors of Rev. Joseph M. Sadd, who located in the town about 1830. He began holding services in the courthouse, organized a prayer meeting and a Sabbath-school, and soon after his arrival, assisted by Rev. Thomas Donnell, held a protracted meeting. Finally, on May 18, 1832, the church was organized with seven members. They were Elizabeth Cobb, Corinna G. Sadd, Alexander Boyd, Sarah Boyd, Frederick Woolford, Nancy Woolford and John F. Rudy. Mr. Boyd had served as ruling elder in Belleview Church, and was installed in the same position in this church. In 1833 M. P. Cayce and wife were received from the Presbyterian Church in St. Charles, and the former was installed as ruling elder. About two years later the eldership was still further increased by the election of John D. Peers, Newton F. Cayce and Thomas L. Kirkwood. Mr. Sadd continued his ministry until April, 1835, when he removed to Scott County. During the next three years the church was supplied by Thomas Donnell and Luther H. Vandoren. In January, 1838, Rev. James M.

Covington became the stated supply, and remained with the church until his death in 1844. He was succeeded by Rev. Amos H. Rogers, who, as stated supply and pastor, continued until 1852. From that time until 1856 the pulpit was filled by Rev. James T. Paxton, who was succeeded by Rev. Thomas C. Smith. In July, 1859, Rev. David E. Curtis began his ministerial labors, which extended over a period of two years. For the next five years the church was without any regular supply. In January, 1867, Rev. G. W. Harlan became pastor, and continued in that capacity until the close of 1881. He was succeeded by Rev. James A. Creighton, who remained six years. The present pastor is Rev. Mr. Ruffner.

The first house of worship was dedicated in 1836, and was refitted and rededicated in April, 1868. In 1886 the old church was sold to the Christian congregation, and an elegant and commodious brick structure was erected. It is one of the handsomest churches in Southeast Missouri.

In April, 1850, the presbytery received a petition for the organization of a church at Cape Girardeau, which was granted, and on the second Sabbath of the following June a church was organized with eighteen members, among whom it is thought were the following: Margaret McClean, Mary Ferguson, M. M. Rice, Dr. Elam Harris, M. R. Thornton, A. R. Curry, Augusta Stokes, Julia Moore, M. Criddle, M. A. Wilkinson, R. Willis, M. Morris and M. Wilson. Dr. Elam Harris was chosen ruling elder, but died soon after, and in 1855 J. J. Gardiner and L. B. Andrews were chosen elders. The first stated supply of the church was Rev. D. E. Y. Rice, who died on June 2, 1854. The church led a somewhat precarious life until 1869, when it was reorganized, and W. W. Faris installed as pastor. He remained with the church less than two years, and it was then without a supply until January, 1873. Since that time the church has been supplied as follows: O. W. Ganss, 1873-75; T. C. Barrett, 1875-79; J. A. Graves, May to September, 1881; J. W. Roseborough, July, 1882 to April, 1885; E. G. Mathena, May, 1886 to October, 1887.

The ruling elders since the reorganization have been as follows: W. G. Provines, ordained in 1869; S. M. Green, installed in 1870; W. A. Ponder, ordained in 1871; T. J. Williams, installed in 1878; George B. Clark, installed in 1882; W. V. Leach, J. S. McGhee and D. A. Glenn, ordained in 1886. The church building was erected in 1854, and was repaired in 1870.

The present church at Jackson was organized by Rev. A. Munson, on May 15, 1864, but there had been an organization in the town many years previous, and as early as 1817 or 1818 Rev. Timothy Flint preached there for more than a year. He met with little encouragement, however.

The original members of the present organization were Mrs. Sarah Daugherty, Charles Welling, Mary J. Welling, Mrs. Emily Anderson, Irwin Anderson, Mrs. Hannah McGuire, Mrs. Mary B. Davis and Ann Taylor.

The pastors have been A. Munson, W. W. Faris, O. W. Ganss, William McCarty, C. W. Alexander, J. B. Rubey, J. A. Graves, J. W. Roseborough, S. W. Mitchell and E. G. Mathena. The ruling elders are H. L. Caldwell, Charles Welling and T. M. Wilson. The church building was erected in 1870, and dedicated by Rev. W. W. Faris.

The New Madrid Presbyterian Church was organized on September 20, 1856, by Rev. L. P. Rowland, with the following members: Thomas L. Fountaine, Mrs. Catharine Davis, David Welschance, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Hatcher, Mrs. Susan Dunklin, Mrs. Elizabeth Welschance and Harriet Hatcher. Services were held in the Methodist Church until 1875, when a frame church building was erected. The pastors have been W. B. T. Wilkie, William McCarty, Uncas McClure, J. A. Graves, J. H. Rhea, Weisel Beale and J. F. Curtis. The church now has a membership of seventy-three. The officers are Joseph Hunter, A. M. Shead and A. G. Mathewson, elders, and H. L. Shidler and R. L. Hunter, deacons.

The organization of the Presbyterian Church at Clarkton was the result of great labor and privation on the part of its pioneer ministers. Rev. William McCarty, the evangelist of Potosi Presbytery, visited the town long before it had railroad communication with the outside world, crossing the "pole road" from Point Pleasant, often wading through mud shoe-top deep, and walking twelve miles to preach to this people, almost destitute of the gospel.* The organization took place on December 1, 1872, Revs. W. B. T. Wilkie, William McCarty and Elder W. A. Ponder being present. The members were Z. B. Penney and V. H. Harrison, elders, Judge John H. Stokes, Charles E. Stokes, Clement McDaniel, Mrs. E. B. Austin and Mrs. Lucretia Stokes. A house of worship was erected in 1875, and dedicated on April 3, 1882, by Dr. R. P. Faris. A parsonage is now in process of erection. The pastors have been J. V. Worsham, Uncas McClure, J. A. Graves, J. C. Buchanan and Weisel Beale. In June, 1887, a church was organized at Kennett with a membership of forty-one.

The Presbyterian Church at Oak Ridge was organized on October 31, 1884, by Revs. W. Beale and J. W. Roseborough. The members were Oliver S. Harris, Cora C. Harris, Martha A. McNeely, Julia Hatcher, F. M. Bollinger, Elizabeth Bollinger, James C. and Mary A. Henderson. J. C. Henderson was elected elder, and Oliver S. Harris, deacon. The present membership is about fifteen.

On May 24, 1879, a church was organized in Wayne County, and named Water Valley. It now has a membership of about twenty. There was also an organization effected at Syenite on June 4, 1885.

Upon the division of the synod of Missouri, in 1840, a convention of the new school members was called to meet at Hannibal on October 7, 1841. This convention made arrangements for a meeting of the synod, which was held in St. Louis on April 8, 1842. There were present thirteen ministers and three elders, representing the new school element in the presbytery of St. Louis and St. Charles, the presbytery of Missouri having adhered as a body to the old school. The name of St. Charles Presbytery was changed to North Missouri, and soon after the presbyteries of Lafayette and Harmony were formed. In 1845 the four new school presbyteries were in working order and in a highly prosperous condition, but the decided opposition of the general assembly to slavery had a bad effect upon the church in Missouri, and it very nearly reached extinction. In May, 1857, the general assembly in session at Cleveland, Ohio, passed a resolution on the subject of slavery that sent out all of the new school churches in the South except those of Missouri. The synod of Missouri decided to stand independent, but in 1859 it formally renewed its allegiance to the general assembly, and that body, in 1860, annexed to it the presbytery of Kansas. No meetings were held in 1861 and 1862, but in 1863 it met at Troy, Kas.

In 1870 the synod of Missouri (new school) and that part of the synod of Missouri (old school) which remained in connection with the Northern General Assembly united. A presbytery of Potosi, which was declared to be the legal successor of the original presbytery of that name, was created, to consist of twenty-two counties of Southeast Missouri. The first meeting was held on September 29, 1870, at Whitewater Church in Bollinger County. In 1872 the presbytery reported six ministers, one licentiate, thirteen churches and 494 communicants.

The oldest church in this presbytery is Whitewater, in Bollinger County. In 1830 the American Missionary Society sent Rev. Joseph M. Sadd to Missouri, and during one of his tours he visited the North Carolina Colony in Bollinger County. These people had belonged to the German Reformed Church, which in doctrine and practice was quite similar to the Presbyterian Church. Their pastor, the Rev. Samuel Whybark, had become old and feeble, and died a year or two later. Mr. Sadd found here a good field for his labors, and on June 24, 1832, under a tree on the banks of Whitewater River, he organized the Whitewater Presbyterian Church. The members were Mathias Bollinger, Peter Statler, David Conrad, Moses Bollinger, Mary Statler, Sally Yount, Polly Bollinger, Rebecca Conrad, Sally Statler, Elizabeth Bollinger, Peter Ground, Peggy Ground, Sophia Whybark, Sophia Yount, Sally Conrad and Peggy Bollinger. Mathias Bollinger and Peter Statler were chosen and ordained elders. The meetings were first held at the house of Moses Bollinger, and later in an old still-house fitted up for a church. Finally, by a united effort of the congregation, a log structure was erected and dedicated to the service of God. Mr. Sadd continued his labors in the church until 1835, during which time eighteen members were added. The church, with an occasional vacancy, was then supplied until the beginning of the Civil War by the following ministers: Thomas Donnell, 1836; James M. Covington, 1838-42; Robert G. Barrett, 1842-44; Amos H. Rodgers, 1845-49; John F. Cowan, 1850-52; A. Munson, 1852-55; J. H. Moore, 1855-57; L. P. Rowland, 1857-60; D. E. Curtis, 1860-61; A. A. Mathes, 1861. There is no record of any services between 1861 and 1867. In the latter year Rev. John Branch became pastor and continued until 1872. From that time until 1876 the pulpit was filled by Revs. Rowland and McCoy. In September, 1876, Rev. E. P. Keach was invited to preach by the congregation, and has since been pastor. Two churches of considerable size have branched off from this one. They are at Bristol and Marble Hill. There has also been a beginning made at Smithville.

The church at Marble Hill was organized in 1868, but no house of worship was erected until 1884. The original members were Levi E. Whybark and wife, Samuel W. Whybark and wife, J. J. Conrad and wife, Mrs. Murdock, Keziah E. Sutherlin and Uriah B. Titus.

There is a small congregation at Fredericktown, which was organized in 1880, but no regular services are held. On March 21, 1880, a Presbyterian Church was organized at Poplar Bluff by Rev. J. W. Allen of St. Louis, and in 1884 the congregation completed a house of worship at a cost of $2,000.

There is also a flourishing church at Ironton under the pastoral care of Rev. D. A. Wilson.

Cumberland Presbyterians.—The Cumberland Presbyterians have a number of churches in Southeast Missouri, all of which belong to West Prairie Presbytery. Probably the oldest organization of this denomination is at Clarkton, in Dunklin County. This church was organized in 1855 by Rev. G. W. Jordan, with the following members: Jacob Trout and wife, William Pickard and family, Thomas P. Hord and wife, John Agnew and family, and John Timberman and wife. The first church building was a hewed-log structure, built in 1856. The present house was completed in the fall of 1886, and dedicated the following spring by Rev. B. G. Mitchell. The pastors have been G. W. Jordan, F. N. Roberts, E. J. Stockton, James McKnight, Mr. Cobb and W. W. Spence. The present membership is 65.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Dexter was first organized as Mount Union Church on March 21, 1870, with Abner Warren, John Sitton and D. W. Mays as the first elders. The name was changed in 1875, and in 1879 the church was re-organized with M. P. Riggins and L. O. Glasscock ruling elders. There are now about 40 members, and services are held in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On July 10, 1884, a congregation was organized at Malden, with a membership of about 20, which soon after increased to 60, but has since somewhat declined. The pastor is Rev. W. W. Spence. In 1887 a church was organized at Kennett, with a branch in Grand Prairie. There is also a flourishing congregation in Dunklin County known as Canaan. Among the other churches in Southeast Missouri are Piedmont, Bloomfield, Pilgrim's Rest, Providence, Union, Bethel, De Lassus, Doniphan and Irondale.

The ministers belonging to West Prairie Presbytery in 1887 were C. M. Eaton, W. H. Cook, W. W. Spence, E. H. White, J. M. Birdwell, Henry Hillman and P. Langford.

West Prairie Presbytery was organized by an order from McAdoo Synod at West Prairie Church (Clarkton, Mo.) on November 12, 1858. The ministers present were James Kincaid, S. Brown, J. W. Jordan and W. B. Province. It included nine congregations and 360 members. The work having extended into the State of Arkansas, and the southern boundary of the presbytery having been fixed upon the southern line of Missouri, White River Presbytery of Arkansas laid claim to four congregations, which in 1877 were dismissed to join the latter body.

The following are the churches and their membership at the present time. Bloomfield, 17; Canaan, 59; De Lassus, 6; Dexter, 54; New Providence, 21; Doniphan, 97; Irondale, 26; Malden, 45; Mount Carmel, 18; Patterson, 41; Pleasant Grove, 13; New Hope, 33; Piedmont, 16; Pilgrim's Rest, 24; Union, 44; West Prairie, 67; Blackwell, 12; Kennett, 9; Kennett Branch, 8; Good Hope, 10; Mount Horeb, 21—a total of 21 churches and 641 members.

Evangelical Lutheran.—The Evangelical Lutheran Church was introduced into Southeast Missouri by the German colony that located in Perry County in 1838. This colony was divided into five small communities—Wittenberg, Seelitz, Dresden, Altenburg and Frohna, to which was added somewhat later Johannesberg. These parishes were cared for by the following pastors: Wittenberg and Frohna, Rev. Ernst Gerhard Wilhelm Keyl; Altenburg, Rev. Gotthold Heinrich Löber; Seelitz, Rev. Moritz Bürger, and Dresden and Johannesberg, Rev. Carl Ferdinand Wilhelm Walther. These communities, however, were too small to support so many pastors, and in a short time Seelitz, Dresden and Wittenberg were united with Altenburg, and Frohna was served by a vicar sent from Altenburg. There was also a small community about eight miles from Altenburg called Paitzdorf, which was settled in the latter part of 1839 by several families from Saxe-Altenburg under the leadership of their former pastor, Carl Friedrich Gruber.

The colonists were nearly all very poor, and they and their pastors were compelled to undergo hardships experienced only by a people in a strange land and an unaccustomed climate, but they suffered and persevered as heroically as the Pilgrims on the rock-bound coast of New England had done more than 200 years before. They were compelled to labor with insufficient implements and without draft animals. They were scarce of food and wretchedly sheltered, and many of their number succumbed to malaria and exposure. Under such conditions the prospect of building churches and schools was not flattering, but the pastors were not discouraged. While the people were busy with clearing the land and raising their little crops of corn and potatoes the pastors with their own hands were engaged in building schoolhouses and churches. Soon after the arrival of the colonists Candidates Brohm, Fürbringer and Büniger, all of whom have since attained prominent positions in the church, in company with the late Dr. C. F. W. Walther, then pastor at Johannesberg, laid the foundations of a college at Altenburg. They felled trees and rolled the logs together, and erected a little log house with one door and a window or two. There they opened a school, but soon Pastor Walther and candidate Büniger were called to St. Louis, leaving their companions, Fürbringer and Brohm, to carry on the work. They continued for two years, at the end of which time Candidate Fürbringer was called to a pastorate in Illinois. Candidate Brohm then carried on the school alone until he was attacked by a fever. After his recovery he was assisted by Pastor Löber until he was himself called to a pastorate in New York. Pastor Löber then continued the work, assisted by Pastor Keyl, of Frohna, until 1843. In that year the college was placed under the care of Rector Gönner, who was employed as a teacher, and paid a regular salary.

Up to 1849 the college was the property of the colonists in Perry County and St. Louis, but in that year it was transferred to the synod of Missouri, Ohio, etc., and soon after it was removed to St. Louis. It is now known as Concordia, of that city.

In 1839 the colony began the erection of a parsonage, and two years later a schoolhouse was completed. H. F. Winter was employed as teacher, and continued for over twenty-five years. On March 14, 1844, the corner-stone of a new church was laid. It was constructed of stone, and is still standing.

In the year 1849 the colony was attacked by cholera, and many deaths occurred. Pastor Löber stood nobly at his post, comforting and caring for the sick and dying, until, worn out by overwork, he was taken sick of a fever and died on August 19, 1849. He was succeeded by G. A. Schieferdecker, who remained, with a brief intermission, until 1858. The last two years of his pastorate were disturbed by dissensions over doctrinal points, which was known as the "Chiliastenstreit," resulting in the dismissal of the pastor. He had a considerable following, and refused to give up the parsonage, but after some litigation was ousted. His successor was Rev. Paul Beyer, who remained until 1863, when he accepted a call from a church in Chicago. Rev. J. F. Köstering was then installed as pastor at Altenburg, and continued in that position until 1887. The present pastor, Rev. A. G. Grimm, assumed the charge of the church in December, 1887. The congregation now numbers 140 voting members and about 425 communicants. The congregation at Frohna has been under the pastoral care of Rev. William Zschoche since 1883, and now numbers 608 souls. There are also congregations in Perry County, at Uniontown and at Perryville. The latter was organized in 1867 by Rev. Mr. Besel, with the following members: Gottlieb Boxdorfor, John P. Muench, John F. Gerstocker, John Bergman, Fred E. Bergman, Charles A. Weber, John Graef, John J. Lang and William Klamp. A schoolhouse had been built the year before, and in December of that year was dedicated as a church. The first regular pastor was Rev. C. H. Demetrio, who was called in 1869, and remained until 1886, when he was succeeded by Rev. William Matthes. In 1872 a comfortable parsonage was built, and in 1884 a new brick schoolhouse was completed at a cost of $900. The congregation now numbers 54 voting members and over 400 communicants.

On May 11, 1867, the circuit court of Ste. Genevieve County incorporated the German Lutheran Evangelical Church of Ste. Genevieve upon the petition of the following persons: Christian Lucke, Henry Wilder, Philip Medast, Charles Weiss, F. C. Fertner, August Wilder, William Mavoss and F. A. Klein. On September 5, 1875, a commodious brick church building was dedicated, and both a congregation and school have since been maintained. The present pastor is Rev. J. A. F. W. Müller, of Chester, Ill.

St. Paul's Church, at Farmington, was organized by Rev. C. F. Obermeyer in 1874. Among the members were Peter Mell, Conrad Meyer, Charles Giessing, William Herbst, Philip Westmeyer, Carl Best and Henry Stier. A house of worship, a moderate sized frame structure, was erected the same year, and dedicated on May 25, 1875. The pastors have been C. F. Obermeyer, 1874-77; U. Iben, 1877-84 and G. Tönjes, since 1884.

An organization was made at Iron Mountain prior to the late war, and has since then been maintained. The present pastor is R. Smukal, who also administers to a congregation at Pilot Knob.

The organization of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Cape Girardeau was begun in 1854, with eight members, among whom were Caspar Roth, Ernest Mantz, Charles Dosselman, Anthony Schrader and Louis Roth. Other members came in soon after, and on June 1, 1854, the original constitution was adopted. The following year a house of worship, a small brick building, was completed.

The first pastor and founder of the church was Rev. A. Lehman, who, in 1856, was succeeded by Ernest Harms. The latter remained until August, 1859, and from that time until August, 1868, the church was under the pastoral care of Rev. Mr. Riedel. The fourth pastor was Rev. G. Polack, who arrived in August, 1868, and remained about ten years. His successor was Rev. B. Sievers, who was in charge until October, 1885. The present pastor, Rev. J. Schaller, was installed on November 1, 1885. In 1878 the erection of a new church was begun, and was completed the following year. It is a commodious brick structure, with a handsome spire, in which is a clock. The church now numbers sixty-five voting members, and nearly 500 communicants. The trustees are William Regenhardt, E. D. Engelman, Fred. Vasterling, Caspar Roth, Henry Meyer, C. Steinmeyer and August Stein. Since the organization of the church a school has been maintained. It was at first taught by the pastors, but now two teachers are employed, and about 200 pupils are instructed annually.

One of the oldest Evangelical Lutheran Churches in Cape Girardeau County is Trinity Church, at Dissen, in Apple Creek Township. It was organized in the year 1848 by Rev. F. J. Blitz, with the following members: Fred. Lewing, Lewis Kaiser, Edward Engelman, Gottlieb Krause, Henry Grossheider, John Beck, Caspar Klaus and Henry Wehnmeller. The next year a log building was erected for church purposes, and used until near the close of the late war, when a new stone edifice was built at a cost of about $4,000. The congregation also owns twenty acres of land, and a brick parsonage which was erected in 1883. A school is maintained in connection with the church, where pupils are instructed in the rudiments of the German language and the main doctrines of the church. The pastors of this congregation have been J. F. Blitz, F. Riedel, G. Gruber, F. W. John, H. Harmening, H. Hunziger, F. P. F. Voigt and F. Meyr. Mr. Meyr also has charge of a small congregation at Kurreville, where a church was first erected about 1860. The original members of this society were William Maintz, Henry Maintz, Henry Kurre, Henry, Charles, John and Chrisjohn Haupt, Fritz Reihn, Henry Menike, Henry Shatte and John Kurre.

Hanover Church, in Randol Township, Cape Girardeau

County, was organized in 1852 by Daniel Bertling. During the same year a frame church house was erected. It was occupied until 1887, when the present brick building was completed. The congregation now numbers about twenty-two voting members. Among the pastors have been A. Lehmann, K. Kretzmann, H. Guemmer and O. R. Hueschen.

Trinity Church, at Egypt Mills, was dedicated in 1881 by H. Guemmer. The trustees are L. Niedling, F. Hente and H. Steinhoff. The present membership is forty-two.

The church at New Wells was organized in 1857 by A. Schieferdecker, and at about the same time a log house was completed. Joseph Meyer, G. Starzinger and M. Koessel were then the leading members. The present commodious frame building was erected in 1873, at a cost of $5,000, and was dedicated on January 25, 1874. The pastors have been as follows: A. Schieferdecker, A. Lehman, R. Frederking, R. H. Biedermann, J. M. Johannes, R. H. Biedermann, E. Lehman and F. W. Pennekamp. The church now numbers eighty-three members.

Emmanuel Church, near Tilsit, Mo., was organized on May 10, 1866, by Rev. G. A. Müller, with fifteen members, among whom were H. Althenthal, W. Rose, W. Bruns and Christ. Friedhoff. A brick church building was erected the same year, but it was not dedicated until April 20, 1868. The pastors have been G. A. Müller, G. Erders, F. J. Th. Jungck, A. Lohr, W. Matthes and H. A. E. Schaefer. The present membership is forty-nine.

The Lutheran Church of Gravelton is called the Zion Evangelical Lutheran Church, and was organized about 1857 by Rev. John R. Moser, a native of North Carolina, with a membership of twenty-five. Services were held three miles distant. Some of its organizers were Judge L. A. W. Cloninger and Maj. M. N. Abernathy. The latter was a very early settler of the vicinity, and is now living in Stoddard County. Moser served until 1870. The Rev. P. C. Henkel, D. D., of North Carolina, served until 1876, and after this Prof. L. M. Wagner, A. M., from 1876 to the present. In 1878 a fine church edifice was built with a seating capacity of 300, a parsonage near the church also being constructed. The church is in a prosperous condition, and has a membership attendance of about 200 or more.

The early records of Zion's Church, near Gordonsville, have been destroyed. A frame church building was erected in 1866, and since that time the pastors have been C. H. Lucker, G. Erders, G. A. Müller, Rev. Besel, W. L. Fischer, Henry Birkner and John Pflanz.

Eisleben Church, situated in Kelso Township, Scott County, was organized under David Roth and Daniel Reubel in 1850 or 1851, and now has forty-nine voting members. The church is under the care of Rev. H. F. Grupe, who was ordained pastor in 1871.

German Evangelical Church.—The oldest German Evangelical Church in Southeast Missouri is at what is known as Dutch-town, in Cape Girardeau County. Its history dates back to about 1836, when several Swiss families located in the vicinity of Rodney's Mill, which was purchased by two of the colony, Benedict Schneider and Benedict Mullet. The colonists were wont to meet together at private residences to sing hymns and to listen to the reading of a sermon by one of their number. This was kept up until the year 1846 or 1847, when a church was organized by Rev. Jacob Kobler. Services were continued at private residences until the winter of 1850-51, when a small log building was erected. This was occupied as a house of worship until the completion of the present brick house, which was dedicated on May 15, 1887. The original officers and members of this church were John Eggiman, Christian Kuss and Andrew Suedekum, trustees; Chr. Kothe, Hy. Butz, John Schneider, H. Homburg, Benedict Buetiger, Carl Allers, Hy. Achterman, George Keller, Hy. Steimel, Chr. Bohnsack, Benedict Mullet and Benedict Eggiman. The present membership is about twenty. The pastors have been Revs. Jacob Kobler, Umbeck, Ulrich, Brunner, Herman, Jacob Schwab, Christian Frey, G. Press, Stoerker, Ludwig, John Thaal and John Koletschke.

The German Evangelical Church at Jackson was first organized in May, 1867, with twenty-eight members, and the following trustees: Charles Hahrenberg, Jacob Frederich, Adam Hoffman and Herman Geyerd. Rev. F. Kies was employed as the first pastor and remained two or three years. In the erection of a church building the congregation became involved in debt. To add to this embarrassment internal dissensions sprang up, and, in consequence, no regular pastor was employed from 1872 to 1886. In the latter year a reorganization was effected, and Rev. John Koletschke employed as pastor. The members now number twenty-six. There are, also, two or three other congregations in Cape Girardeau County belonging to the Iowa Synod.

Congregational and Universalist Churches.—Of the Congregational Church there are two societies in Southeast Missouri, one at Bonne Terre and the other at Mine La Motte. There is also a congregation of Universalists at Morley, where a house of worship has recently been completed.

UPPER LOUISIANA TRANSFER.

The following documents relating to the transfer of Upper Louisiana to the United States will be read with interest in connection with the history of Southeast Missouri. Frequent mention on former pages has already been made of this transaction, one of the most important in the early affairs of this country.

Lower Louisiana was formally transferred to France, at New Orleans, and on Monday, December 20, following, it was transferred by Laussat to Gov. Claiborne and Gen. James Wilkinson, commissioners of the United States, appointed to receive it. On December 30 Gov.-Gen. Manuel de Salcedo and the Marquis of Casa Calvo addressed an order to Col. De Lassus, commanding him to deliver up to the agent of Laussat the command of his post and its dependencies, and on the 12th of January, 1804, Laussat forwarded a letter to him informing him of the cession of Louisiana to the United States, and authorizing him to transfer the government of Upper Louisiana to Capt. Stoddard, for the United States. These letters were sent in care of Capt. Stoddard, then at Kaskaskia, who, as soon as they arrived, addressed the following letter to Col. De Lassus:

KASKASKIA, 18th Feb., 1804.

Sir:—I have just received by express from New Orleans a variety of despatches relative to the late retrocession of Louisiana. Those addressed to you and intrusted to my care by the French and Spanish commissioners I do myself the honor to forward by a sergeant of our army, who is bound on business to Capt. Lewis. In a few days the troops under my command will ascend the Mississippi in public boats. I shall proceed before them by land, and concert with you the necessary arrangements before their arrival at St. Louis. The inclosed letter to Mr. Chouteau I would thank you to deliver to him.

Please accept the assurances of my respectful consideration.

AMOS STODDARD,

Captain U. S. Artillerist, Agent and Commissioner for the French Republic.
To Col. Charles Dehault De Lassus, Lieut.-Gov. Upper Louisiana.

To this Col. De Lassus replied:

ST. LOUIS, 20th February, 1804.

Sir:—I received, yesterday, your letter of the 18th of this month, with those entrusted to your care, and which you had the kindness to send to me, and which contained the orders of the brigadiers and commissioners of His C. M. for the retrocession of this colony to the French Republic and the disposition of the French prefect, which authorize you to receive possession of this part of Louisiana.

I hasten to reply to you by the same sergeant of the U. S. Army by whom you had forwarded to me your despatches, and notify you that M. Louis Lorimier, Jr., is bearer of the necessary orders for each of the commandants of the posts of this province, and which, joined with those delivered to them by the said commissioners, will sufficiently authorize them to receive the commissioners that you may deem proper to send to receive from them possession of said posts; and as Mr. Laussat, prefect, advises me that he has written to them also upon the same subject, and if those letters are addressed to you, and if you wish to avail yourself of the opportunity of Mr. Louis Lorimier to send said letters to them, you can hand them over to him with confidence, and he is hereby directed to present himself to you for that object.

I am also informed by your letter that troops under your orders are about to march for this post, and that you come ahead of them so that we may understand ourselves before their arrival. I shall have the honor to receive you, offering to you in advance the most gracious reception which will be possible to bestow upon you in the name of the King, my sovereign.

I have handed to Mr. Pierre Chouteau the letter that you had recommended to me. I shall be obliged to you if you make known to me in advance the day of your arrival, and if you are coming by land or water.

I write you in French, being informed that the Spanish language is not understood by you.

I have the honor, etc.,

CHARLES DEHAULT DE LASSUS,

Captain U. S. A. and Agent and Commissioner of the French Republic.

Five days later Capt. Stoddard reached St. Louis, and addressed the following letter to Col. De Lassus:

Sir:—The Colonial Prefect, Mr. Laussat, agent and commissioner on the part of the French Republic, by an instrument under his hand directed to me bearing date at New Orleans the 12th of January, 1804, has been pleased, in consequence of the authority with which he is invested, to appoint me sole agent and commissioner of the post of the said republic, with plenary powers to demand and receive in the name of his nation the quiet and peaceable possession of Upper Louisiana, together with all the military posts at St. Louisiana, its dependencies from His Catholic Majesty, lieutenant-governor and commandants agreeably to the late treaty of retrocession; and, I do, by these presents, demand the quiet and peaceable delivery in due form of the said territory, posts and dependencies accordingly.

Accept the assurances of respectful consideration.

AMOS STODDARD, Captain, etc.

Col. De Lassus' reply was the following:

ST. LOUIS OF ILLINOIS, Feb. 25, 1804.

Sir:—As the terms of the letter which I have the honor to receive from you accord entirely with those of the brigadiers of His C. M., dated New Orleans, Dec. 31, 1803, and are also in accordance with the requisition of Pierre Clement Laussat, dated New Orleans, January 12, 1804, and which contained the documents that had been sent to you, which you had the kindness to forward to me from Kaskaskia on the 18th, and which I received on the 19th of the present month, in virtue of their contents I have made the necessary arrangements to give you possession of Upper Louisiana.

I am ready to give you possession of this province on the day and hour you may name in the most authentic form the circumstances and nature of the country will permit.

I have the honor to be, etc.,

CHARLES DEHAULT DE LASSUS.

Orders were then issued to the troops composing the garrison of the post as follows:

Regiment of Infantry of Louisiana, Post of St. Louis:

From this day, henceforth, all the men of this department, including the guard, will keep themselves in full uniform and with strict regard to personal neatness, etc., so that all the garrison may be in readiness to take arms at the first verbal order through Sergt. Juan Roboyna to evacuate the fort, with arms at shoulder and knapsack on the back.

Pursuant to this order no one will absent himself from these quarters, either by day or night, except those necessarily so, such as water-carriers, hostlers, etc., until the day of the delivery of these fortifications to the United States.

As all this detachment is composed of individuals, the larger portion of whom have been long in the service and know how to comport themselves in a praiseworthy manner, the commander expects, from the day of the transfer and afterwards, until we take up the line of march, to embody ourselves with our countrymen. Each man will so conduct himself as to uphold the reputation of the Spanish troops, so justly acquired and extolled for ages; and I flatter myself that during the time they may remain at this post their conduct will be such as to earn for themselves the respect and esteem of the American troops.

At the moment when the United States Commander enters this government house to receive possession a salute will be fired from the fort by a soloo from all the cannon that are mounted and in battery. This will be carried into execution by a signal from a soldier stationed for the purpose at the corner of the gallery of the house by waving his hat to the sentinel at the fort, when the firing will commence, taking good care that there will be a regular interval of time between each successive discharge.

CHARLES DEHAULT DE LASSUS.

On March 2, 1804, Col. De Lassus sent the following circular letter to the commandants of the several posts:

To M. Baptiste Valle Ste. Genevieve.
To M. Deluziere, New Bourbon.
To M. Louis Lorimier, Cape Girardeau.
To M. Jean Lavallee, New Madrid.

On the 9th day of the present month I relinquished the command of this place and of all Upper Louisiana to Mr. Amos Stoddard, captain of artillery of the United States, and commissioner for the French Republic, who since has retained it in the name of the said States. I apprise you of this for your guidance, according to orders I issued to you of date February 20, last past, notifying you to communicate the same to the syndics of your dependency.

God have you in His holy keeping,

CHARLES DEHAULT DE LASSUS.

St. Louis of Illinois, March 2, 1804.

When the boats bearing the troops from Kaskaskia arrived they landed at Cahokia, where they remained until all arrangements for the transfer had been completed. On March 9, 1804, they were transferred to the west side of the river under Lieut. Worrall, acting as adjutant for Capt. Stoddard. The latter, accompanied by Capt. Meriwether Lewis of the United States army and others, proceeded to the government house, where he was received by Col. De Lassus in the presence of his official and prominent citizens. Col. De Lassus then issued the following proclamation to the people:

March 9, 1804.

Inhabitants of Upper Louisiana:

By the King's command I am about to deliver up this post and its dependencies! The flag under which you have been protected for a period of nearly thirty-six years is to be withdrawn. From this moment you are released from the oath of fidelity you took to support it. The fidelity and courage with which you have guarded and defended it will never be forgotten, and in my character of representative I entertain the most sincere wishes for your perfect prosperity.

After a brief address by Col. De Lassus to Capt. Stoddard, placing him in possession of the government house, and an appropriate reply from the latter, the firing of the salute was begun. Meanwhile the official document testifying to the transfer was executed in the following terms:

In consequence of a letter sent from New Orleans of 31st December of last year (1803) by the Marquis de Casa Calvo and Don Juan Manuel de Salcedo, brigadier-general of the royal armies and commissioners for His C. M., for the transfer of the colony and province of Louisiana to the French Republic, addressed to Don Charles D. De Lassus, colonel in the same armies, lieutenant-governor in the same armies, and commissioner appointed by the said Casa Calvo and Salcedo, for its transfer, according to the contents of said letter, requiring him to give full and entire possession of said Upper Louisiana, including the military post of St. Louis and its dependencies, to-wit: Clement Laussat, appointed by the French Republic to take possession of the said colony and province of Louisiana, or any other person which may have been named to that effect, according to the treaty of cession, and as by letter also sent from New Orleans, dated 12th of January of the current year, the said commissary of the French Republic appoints, nominates and constitutes as sole agent and commissioner in behalf of his nation Amos Stoddard, captain of artillery of the United States of America, for the purpose of demanding and receiving the said Upper Louisiana, comprehending the aforesaid military posts of St. Louis and its dependencies, in virtue of the respective powers which are explained above.

Now be it known by these presents that I, the above Don Carlos D. AMOS STODDARD, [SEAL]

CARLOS DEHAULT DE LASSUS. [SEAL]

In presence of Meriwether Lewis, Capt. 1st U. S. Reg. In'fy., Antoine Souldard, surveyor-general, etc., Charles Gratiot.

On March 12, 1804, Col. De Lassus, at the request of Capt. Stoddard, delivered to the Indian tribes the following address:

Delawares, Shawnese, Sacs and Others:

Your old fathers, the Spaniards and the French, who grasp by the hand your new father, the head chief of the United States, by an act of their good will, and in virtue of their last treaty, I have delivered up to them all these lands. They will keep and defend them, and protect all the white and red men who live thereon. You will live as happily as though the Spaniard was still here.

I have informed your new father, who here takes my place, that since I have been here the Delawares, Shawnese and Sacs have always conducted themselves well; that I have always received them kindly; that the chiefs have always restrained their young men as much as it was possible. I have recommended thee, Tak-in-onsa, as chief of the nation, that thou hast always labored much and well to maintain a sincere friendship with the whites, and that in consequence of thy good services I recently presented thee a medal with the portrait of thy great father, the Spaniard, and letters patent reciting thy good and loyal services.

For several days past we have fired off cannon shots to announce to all the nations that your father, the Spaniard, is going, his heart happy to know that you will be protected and sustained by your new father, and that the smoke of the powder may ascend to the Master of Life, praying Him to shower on you all a happy destiny and prosperity in always living in good union with the whites.

AMOS STODDARD, CAPTAIN IN THE CORPS OF THE UNITED STATES ARTILLERISTS, AND FIRST CIVIL COMMANDANT OF UPPER LOUISIANA, TO THE PEOPLE OF THE SAME TERRITORY:

The period has now arrived when, in consequence of amicable negotiation, Louisiana is in possession of the United States. The plan of a permanent territorial government for you is already under the consideration of Congress, and will, doubtless, be completed as soon as the importance of the measure will admit. But, in the meantime, to secure your right, and to prevent a delay of justice, His Excellency, William C. C. Claiborne, governor of the Mississippi Territory, is invested with those authorities and powers (derived from an act of Congress) usually exercised by the governor-general and intendent under His Catholic Majesty; and permit me to add that by virtue of the authority and power vested in him by the President of the United States he has been pleased to commission me as first civil commander of Upper Louisiana.

Directed to cultivate friendship and harmony among you, and to make known the sentiments of the United States relative to the security and preservation of all your rights, both civil and religious, I know of no mode better calculated to begin the salutary work than a circular address.

It will not be necessary to advert to the various preliminary arrangements which have conspired to place you in your present political situation. Of these it is presumed you are already acquainted. Suffice it to observe that Spain in 1800 retroceded the colony and province of Louisiana to France; and that France in 1803 conveyed the same territory to the United States, who are now in the peaceable and legal possession of it. These transfers were made with honorable views, and under such forms and sanctions as are usually practiced among civilized nations.

Thus you will perceive that you are divested of the character of subjects, and clothed with that of citizens. You now form an integral part of a great community, the powers of whose government are circumscribed and defined by character, and the liberty of the citizen extended and secured. Between this government and its citizens many reciprocal duties exist, and the prompt and regular performance of them is necessary to the safety and welfare of the whole. No one can plead exemption from these duties; they are equally obligatory on the rich and on the poor—on men in power as well as on those not interested with it. They are not prescribed as whim and caprice may dictate. On the contrary, they result from the actual or implied compact between society and its members, and are founded not only in the sober lessons of experience but in the immutable nature of things. If therefore the government be bound to protect its citizens in the enjoyment of their liberty, property and religion, the citizens are no less bound to obey the laws and to aid the magistrate in the execution of them to repel invasion, and, in periods of public danger, to yield a portion of their time and exertion in defense of public liberty. In governments differently constituted, where popular elections are unknown, and where the exercise of power is confided to those of high birth and great wealth, the public defense is committed to men who make the science of war an exclusive trade and profession; but all free republics, where the citizens are capacitated to elect and to be elected into offices of emolument and dignity, permanent armies of any considerable extent are justly deemed hostile to liberty, and therefore the militia is considered as the palladium of their safety. Hence the origin of the maxim, that every soldier is a citizen, and every citizen a soldier.

With these general principles before you it is confidently expected that you will not be less faithful to the United States than you have been to His Catholic Majesty.

Your local situation, the varieties in your language and education, have contributed to render your manners, laws and customs, and even your prejudices somewhat different from those of your neighbors, but not less favorable to virtue and to good order in society. Those deserve something more than mere indulgence; they shall be respected.

If in the course of former time the people on different sides of the Mississippi fostered national prejudices and antipathies against each other, suffer not those cankers of human happiness any longer to disturb your repose or to awaken your resentments. Draw the veil of oblivion over the past, and unite in pleasing anticipations of the future. Embrace each other as brethren of the same mighty family, and think not that any member of it can derive happiness from the misery or degradation of another.

Little will the example and authority of the best magistrates avail when the public mind becomes tainted with perverse sentiments, or languishes under an indifference to its true interests. Suffer not the pride of virtue nor the holy fire of religion to become extinct. If these be different in their nature, they are necessary supports to each other. Cherish the sentiments of order and tranquility, and frown on disturbers of public peace. Avoid, as much as possible, all legal contests; banish village vexation, and unite in the cultivation of the social and moral affections.

Admitted as you are into the embraces of a wise and magnanimous nation, patriotism will gradually warm your breasts and stamp its features on your future actions. To be useful it must be enlightened—not the effect of passion, local prejudice, or blind impulse. Happy the people who possess invaluable rights and know how to exercise them to the best advantage. Wretched are those who dare not think and act freely. It is a sure test of wisdom to honor and support the government under which you live, and to acquiesce in the decisions of the public will, when they be constitutionally expressed. Confide, therefore, in the justice and integrity of our Federal President; he is the faithful guardian of the laws. He entertains the most beneficent views relative to the glory and happiness of this territory, and the merit alone derived from the acquisition of Louisiana, without any other, would perpetuate his fame to posterity. Place equal confidence in all the constituted authorities of the Union; they will protect your rights, and indeed your feelings, and all the tender felicities and sympathies so dear to rational and intelligent natures. As very short experience of their equitable and pacific policy will enable you to view them in their proper light, I flatter myself that you will give those measures a fair trial, and not precipitate yourselves into conclusions which you may afterward see cause to retract. The first official act of my present station, expressly permitted by high authority, will confirm these remarks.

The United States, in the acquisition of Louisiana, was actuated by just and liberal views. Hence the admission of an article in the treaty of cession, the substance of which is that the inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union, and admitted as soon as possible to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages and immunities of citizens of the United States; and, in the meantime, be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property and religion.

From these cursory hints you will be enabled to comprehend your present political situation, and to anticipate the future destinies of your country. You may soon expect the establishment of a territorial government, administered by men of wisdom and integrity, whose salaries will be paid out of the treasury of the United States. From your present population, and the rapidity of its increase, this territorial establishment must soon be succeeded by your admission as a State in the Federal Union. At that period you will be at liberty to try an experiment in legislation, and to frame such a government as may best correspond with your local interests, manners and customs. Popular suffrage will be its basis. The enactment of laws and the appointment of judges to expound them are among the first privileges of organized society. Equal to either of these, indeed, is the inestimable right of trial by jury. Inseparable from many other obvious advantages are the forms of judicial processes and the rules for the admission of testimony in courts of justice. It is also of importance that a distinction be made between trials of a capital nature and those of an inferior degree, as also between all criminal and civil contests. In fine, Upper Louisiana, from its climate, population, soil and productions, and from other national advantages attached to it, will, in all human probability, soon become a star of no inconsiderable magnitude in the American constellation.

Be assured that the United States feel all the ardor for your interests which a warm attachment can inspire. I have reason to suppose that it will be among some of their first objects to ascertain and confirm your land titles. They will know the deranged state of these titles, and of the existence of a multitude of equitable claims under legal surveys where grants have not been procured. What ultimate measures may be taken on this subject does not become me to conjecture, but this much I will venture to affirm, that the most ample justice will be done, and, that in the final adjustment of claims, no settler nor landholder will have just cause to complain. Claimants of this description have hitherto invariably experienced the liberality of Government, and surely it will not be less liberal to the citizens of Upper Louisiana, who favor a strong cordon across an exposed frontier of a vast empire, and are entitled by solemn stipulations to all the rights and immunities of free men.

My duty, not more indeed than my inclination, urges me to cultivate friendship among you, and between you and the United States. I suspect my talents to be unequal to the duties which devolve on me in the organization and temporary administration of the government. The want of a proper knowledge of your laws and language is among the difficulties I have to encounter, but my ambition and assiduity will be excited in proportion to the honor conferred on me. Inflexible justice and impartiality shall guide me in all my determinations. If, however, in the discharge of a variety of complex duties I be led into error, consider it as involuntary, and not as the effort of inattention or of any exclusive favors or affection. Destined to be the temporary guardian of the rights and liberties of at least ten thousand people I may not be able to gratify the just expectations of all, but your prosperity and happiness will claim all my time and talents, and no earthly enjoyment would be more complete than that derived from your public and individual security—from the increase of your opulence and power.

St. Louis, March 10, 1804

Hon. Theodore P. Boyer, ex-member of the State Legislature from Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., was born in the county where he now resides in 1852, and is the son of Edward and Josephine Boyer. Edward Boyer was born and reared on the farm now owned by his son Theodore P. He was born in 1822, and is still living. The mother was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., in 1834. After her death the father again married, and this wife also bore him one child—Laura, who married and became the mother of one child, who, though only four years of age, speaks English and French. Hon. Theodore P. Boyer in his younger days taught school for about ten years. He was justice of the peace for about eight years, and in 1884 was elected to the State Legislature from Ste. Genevieve County, Mo. He owns 133 acres of land, a portion of which was used by the Indians as a burial place for their dead. Mr. Boyer was united in marriage to Miss Matilda Parker, who was born in 1858.

William V. Brown, farmer, and one of Ste. Genevieve County's leading men, and son of James S. and Mary (Varner) Brown, was born March 7, 1823. Being the eldest child his services were required at home about the time he should have attended school, and as a consequence his education was limited. In 1841 he married Miss Evaline Hunt, and located on a farm in Perry County. His wife died in 1845, leaving a son eighteen months old. In 1845 Mr. Brown married Miss Susan Beard, of Ste. Genevieve County. After remaining in Perry County until 1851 he sold his farm and located in Ste. Genevieve County, on a farm he had purchased from his father. Shortly after coming to Ste. Genevieve County his second wife died, leaving three small children. In 1853 Mr. Brown married Miss Sarah Black, who died the following year. After getting along the best he knew how with his motherless children for three years, he married Margaret Jennings, who bore him six children. She died while her children were small, and Mr. Brown struggled along with his children, doing his own work, etc., one year, and was then married to Deliah Caston, of Perry County. He has five children now living: Litha (widow of Geo. Beard), Florence (wife of James Cleveland), Alice (wife of Geo. Rankin), Henrietta (wife of M. Rond), Luther and William V., Jr. Mr. Brown has always taken a great interest in the public schools, and has given his children good educational advantages. His youngest son is being educated at Farmington, Mo. Mr. Brown has a good farm of 333 acres, well improved and stocked. He makes a specialty of raising fine chickens and hogs. He also devotes some of his time to the raising of horses, and now owns a good running horse. Mr. Brown is a member of the Masonic fraternity, also a member of the Farmers' Alliance, and is a man whose hospitality is known throughout the surrounding country. He had one son, Elias, who was born in 1844, and died September 23, 1873. He was drafted in 1863, and served until the close of the war. He was assistant officer in discharging the Illinois and Indiana troops at Mobile, Ala.

R. V. Brown, Jr., farmer, of Ste. Genevieve County, and son of Judge R. V. Brown, of Perry County, was born December 17, 1861, and was educated in the common schools. He worked on the farm of his father until his marriage, which occurred April 30, 1884, to Miss Louisa B. Coffman, of Ste. Genevieve County, and with the usual energy of the Brown family began business for himself on a farm. He now has 168 acres of good farming land, and is a dealer in fine stock, owning a fine Kentucky bred jack, Black Knight, and a fine horse. He is one of the leading and enterprising farmers of the county, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity. To Mr. and Mrs. Brown were born two children: Ada and Carrie. Mrs. Brown was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., October, 18, 1862, and is the daughter of Joseph and Emily (Madison) Coffman. Joseph Coffman was the son of Col. Joseph Coffman, one of the earliest settlers of Ste. John X. died in 1835, when the Judge was a year and a half old, and two years later his widow married Joseph Doll, who, in 1847, immigrated with the family to America. They had a long and tedious voyage, being about eighty days on the water, and during that time several on board died of cholera. They landed at New Orleans, and from there went to Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., locating five miles south of Ste. Genevieve, and here settled on government land. Judge Huck was educated in the old country, and through his own efforts has become a good scholar in the English language. south of Genevieve, where they lived in a miserable little house of only one room, the roof almost touching one's head and covered with clapboards, weighted down with logs to keep the wind from blowing them away. In this manner they lived for two years, or until Mr. Doll raised a wheat crop of 170 bushels, which he sold for 45 cents a bushel and with the proceeds succeeded in making his home a little more comfortable, but for the two subsequent years they were obliged to eat corn bread in the place of wheaten bread. The first two winters after coming to this country were mild enough but the winter of 1849-50 was bitterly cold and it was all they could do to keep the wolves at bay, that swarmed through the woods and killed the sheep and hogs of the settlers. To educate his children Mr. Doll found was a difficult task, as schools at that time were few and far between, and children had no such advantages as they have at the present day.

He learned his father's trade, and also learned the painter's trade with Fisher & Fox, of St. Louis. In 1890 Mr. Scheuring, Sr., lost his store, building and stock by fire, and he and his son, Frank, Jr., formed a partnership, and erected a new building on the same ground. They have put in a new stock of goods, and the son has taken a course of lectures on embalming. This is the only undertaking establishment in St. Mary's, and in connection with this Frank, Jr., has a paint shop, the only one in the place. They have been liberally patronized, and have a comfortable home near their place of business. Mr. Scheuring, Sr., owns a number of town lots in St. Mary's. Capt. Gustavus St. Gem. The St. Gem family were among the early if not the earliest emigrants from France to America, and came from the old city of Beauvais, and settled first near Montreal, Canada, then drifted westward. Two members of this family, Augustin and Raphael St. Gem de Beauvais, impelled by a spirit of adventure, settled at Fort Duquesne (now Pittsburg). When the English Gen. Braddock attempted to capture that fort (1755) they were commanding officers in the French and Indian forces. Later descendants of one of these two brothers removed to Kaskaskia des Illinois, where a younger brother, John Baptiste St. Gem, had already preceded them, married and settled; and he had become a prominent citizen of that pioneer French settlement of the Mississippi Valley and the great West when Gen. George Rogers Clarke surprised and captured the place with the English commander and garrison on the night of July 4, 1778. A short time after this historical event John B. St. Gem, Jr., and Vital St. Gem, sons of John Baptiste St. Gem, crossed with their families over to the post of Ste. Genevieve to cast their lot with the first settlers west of the Mississippi River. Augustus St. Gem, son of John B. St. Gem, Jr., and father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Ste. Genevieve April 23, 1791, then under Spanish allegiance, and as the country was again acquired by France, and later purchased by the United States, he was one of the few who could say that he lived in America under three different governments without changing his residence. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, serving as a volunteer in two campaigns under Gen. Henry Dodge. Before and during the late war of the Rebellion he was very outspoken against secession, and hence was a bold and firm advocate in defense of the Government and the Union at any and all cost. He married, February 12, 1821, Felicite Desile Le Clere, who bore him ten children, six of whom died in childhood. The four who survived him at his death, which occurred March 22, 1862, were one daughter, Augustine (wife of L. C. Menard, a son of Col. Peter Menard, ex-lieutenant-governor of Illinois), and three sons: Joseph Felix, Augustus E. and Gustavus. The last named finished his course of education at St. Vincent University, at Cape Girardeau, Mo. Afterward he engaged in commercial pursuits in company with his brother-in-law, Louis C. Menard, and remained therein until 1854, when he removed to Washington County, Mo., where he engaged in lead mining and the smelting business with William Skewes, Esq., his father-in-law. At the breaking out of the late war the patriotism of their illustrious father manifested itself, for all three of the brothers espoused the cause of the Union. J. Felix at once began the work of recruiting the Thirtieth Regiment Missouri Infantry, United States Volunteers, of which he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel, and with which he took the field. He distinguished himself at the battle of Fort Donelson under the command of Gen. Grant, but his brilliant career was cut short, for at the sanguinary battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862, he was mortally wounded while gallantly leading his regiment, of which he had full command on that day. His remains were brought back to the home of his childhood, and now rest in due veneration beside those of his parents in the old Catholic cemetery at Ste. Genevieve. Gustavus St. Gem, in 1864, recruited a company of volunteers, and entered the active service of the United States army. He was commissioned captain of Company K, Forty-seventh Missouri Infantry, United States Volunteers, and did effective service in suppressing rebel and predatory guerrilla bands in Southeast Missouri. He remained in the military service until the close of the war, April, 1865, when he was honorably discharged. He then engaged in the real estate business in the city of St. Louis. In 1878 he was appointed by President Hayes to the office of surveyor and collector of the customs for the port of St. Louis, and in the faithful discharge of the responsible duties of this office during his term of four years' service he left a most exemplary record. Besides the positions of honor and trust filled by him as already mentioned he was elected a delegate to and was a prominent active member in the Constitutional Convention of 1865, which passed the memorable ordinance abolishing slavery in Missouri (January 11, 1865) and framed a new constitution for the State. He married, November 16, 1853, Miss Elizabeth Skewes, and three children were born to this union, two of whom are now living, and are under the paternal roof: Mary E. D. and Gustavus W. The Captain, conscious of the good work performed by him in both the military and civil service of his country, is now retired to his pleasant country home near Ste. Genevieve, the town of his birth, where, with his charming little family, he enjoys the fruits of his labors, surrounded by the surviving friends of his youth, and highly esteemed and respected by all for his patriotism, enterprise and public spirit.

He attended school until in his fifteenth year, when he was bound out to learn the carpenter's trade, paying $25, and clothing himself for the first three years, receiving nothing but his board for his work. After completing his apprenticeship he remained with his preceptor until near his time to enter the army, when he came to America in company with his half brother and sister, August and Dora Otte, landing at New York City in October, 1865, and from there they came to Ste. Genevieve County, where Frederick worked at his trade in that and adjoining counties until 1871. He was married to Miss Louise Greither, of Ste. Genevieve County, and located in St. Mary's, where he continued to work at his trade. Three children have been born to their marriage: John, Robert and August. In 1864 he engaged as clerk in a store in St. Louis, and in 1865 he came to St. Mary's and engaged in trade in company with his father. He has followed various occupations in the different parts of the State, and has now, in connection with his lumber business, a planing mill and three farms near St. Mary's. In that capacity his services are recognized as of a high order, and the public is generally pleased with them. In May, 1880, Mr. Anderson took passage for America, and landed at New York the same month. He went from there to Collingsworth, in Canada, and engaged on the construction of the Canada Pacific Railroad, at blast drilling. At the end of five months he went to Duluth, Minn., and worked that winter in the woods. He afterward worked on the railroad, in Dakota, but went back to Duluth and worked on a blast drill on the railroad. He went from there to St. Cloud, Minn., and was engaged in drilling in the quarries there until the spring of 1882, when he went to Montana Territory and worked at Bozeman one year. He then went back to Canada on the Canada Pacific construction and remained there until the fall of 1883, when he came to Syenite and engaged with the Syenite Granite Company. He has been engaged in a quarry of his own for two years and is a thorough master of his business. He is a member of the Paving Cutters' Union, and is a member of the executive committee. Mr. Anderson is a man who has traveled a great deal and has seen more of America than the great majority of its citizens.

William H. Andrews, one of Bonne Terre's live general merchants, has spent his life in his native county, where he was born September 27, 1857. The Andrews name is one that is found among the earliest pioneers of this region. His parents were both worthy people of Missouri—namely, William R. and Eliza N. (McHenry) Andrews. Our subject, William H., had the sturdy training that comes from a life of labor on the farm, but his inclinations afterward led him to commercial life, and he finally settled on that branch known as general merchandise. In 1882 a firm in that line was established under the name of W. H. Andrews & Co., and the same business is now the flourishing trade conducted by the subject of this sketch. Mr. Andrews holds democratic opinions, and in religious affairs has identified himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Samuel L. Asbury, county surveyor of St. Francois County and son of William M. and Susan L. (Marks) Asbury, was born in Benton County, Miss., in 1838. His father was born in Lincoln County, N. C., in 1810, and was of English descent. He moved from North Carolina, in 1829 to Giles County, Tenn., where he learned the carpenter's trade. He married and went to Benton County, Miss., in 1835, and was judge of that county for fourteen years. He was killed by Federal troops in 1864. His wife was born in Giles County, Tenn., in 1809, and was the daughter of Samuel Marks, who was a Virginian and of Scottish descent. Mrs. Asbury is still living, and is with her son Samuel L. She came to Missouri in 1872, and is the mother of two children, Samuel L. and Martha L. (wife of F. Yancy of St. Louis County). Samuel L. Asbury was educated at Holly Springs, Miss., and at the age of nineteen began teaching school, and followed this occupation in Mississippi. In 1858 he married Miss Bettie Gray, a native of Benton County, Miss., born in 1841, and to them were born two children: Anna E. (widow of Francis Aubuchon), and William G. Mrs. Asbury died in 1862 and in 1868 Mr. Asbury married Miss Julia M. Pipkin, who was a native of Jefferson County, Mo., and who bore him four children: Julia L., Susan M., Sallie D. and Maud. Mrs. Asbury died in 1878, and in 1879 Mr. Asbury took for his third wife Miss Ellen N. Prichard, a native of St. Francois County, born in 1852, and who became the mother of two children, Mary E. and Emmet F. October 27, 1861, Mr. Asbury enlisted in Company F, Forty-fifth Mississippi Infantry, and was in the battle of Shiloh, Perryville, Stone River and numerous minor engagements. He was wounded in the left ankle at the battle of Stone River and was disabled for eighteen months. The ball is in his ankle at present. After the war he resumed teaching, and in 1867 came to Missouri and began teaching in Franklin County, but one year later came to St. Francois County and taught nearly every winter season until 1883. He taught ten years in the public schools of St. Francois County, and is an able instructor. In 1872 he was elected county surveyor and served in that capacity four years. In 1884 he was again elected and has given excellent satisfaction. He is a staunch Democrat in his political views, is a member of the A. O. U. W., being recorder of the same, and he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Francis AuBuchon. One of the oldest pioneers of Southeastern Missouri is the subject of this sketch. Born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., January 16, 1812, unto the family of Antoine and Ellen L. AuBuchon, natives of the same county, he grew to be ten years of age, when his parents concluded to locate in French Village. Here, at about the age of seventeen years, he apprenticed himself to a blacksmith for three years, and after many years' residence there he moved to Washington County. It was about seventeen years after his arrival there that he returned to St. Francois County, which has been his home for many years. His occupation has been chiefly that of a blacksmith, but he has also dealt in merchandise, besides farming and devoting considerable time to general trading. His wife, formerly Miss Teresa Coleman, was born in Washington County in 1816, and has borne him fourteen children, of whom six sons and two daughters are now living. They have a large number of descendants living, there being, besides eight grandchildren deceased, thirty-one grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. AuBuchon are Catholics. His ancestors were among the earliest French settlers of Ste. Genevieve. Mr. AuBuchon recalls the days when he watched the first steamboat that ever ascended the Mississippi River to Ste. Genevieve.

Basile AuBuchon, of St. Francois County, is one of its oldest and best known citizens, and is a descendant of the early French pioneers of that region, with a family name that is prominent in the history of the section. His parents, Basile and Adelaide AuBuchon, were residents of Ste. Genevieve County September 18, 1817, when his birth occurred, and when he had reached his ninth year, in 1826, they moved to St. Francois County, near French Village, and engaged in farming. In 1832 the mother died, leaving five sons, of whom our subject was the eldest. The father married again, but in 1838 young AuBuchon left home for Madison, Wis., but after a few months of saw-mill business he wended his way on foot back to Missouri over a long and weary stretch of 700 miles. He was married in the spring of 1839, and located as a farmer in Marion Township, where he has since followed a rural life with excellent results, and as a man is esteemed and respected. The elder Basile AuBuchon reached the advanced years so notable in this family, dying at the age of seventy-four years in February, 1864. The wife of the subject of this sketch was Miss Louisa M., the daughter of Gerves and Caroline (Carrow) Papin, who were living in Ste. Genevieve County on September 18, 1821, when their daughter was born. Six years after her birth they moved to Washington County, and ten years still later to St. Francois County. Mr. Papin was for many years engaged in flat-boating to New Orleans. Mr. AuBuchon and his wife have seen ten of their thirteen children grow to maturity, and those living are Mary L., now Mrs. A. L. Carrow; Sophia A., now Mrs. E. Leverd; Louise, now Mrs. J. M. Snodell; Eli B., a prosperous farmer; and Edward J., with whom his parents now live on the old homestead purchased by his father in 1849. The farm lies near French Village, and embraces 292 acres, 300 being under cultivation. The entire family are respected members of the Catholic Church.

Ferd. AuBuchon, a well-known citizen of French Village, and a dealer in general merchandise at that place, was born in Washington County, Mo., May 24, 1835, the son of Francis and Teresa (Coleman) AuBuchon. He spent his early years with his parents, engaged in farm duties and in the common school, besides assisting in his father's blacksmith shop. In 1852 he engaged as clerk in the store of Brickey & Co., and in 1855 became a partner. The firm name then became F. AuBuchon & Co., and in 1859 was again changed to AuBuchon & Sons. For a number of years, however, he has run the business alone, and with the usual success that accompanies his efforts. In 1860 he was married to Miss Luella Brooks, a native of Jefferson County, Mo., and their union has been blessed by a large family, namely: Lucy F. (now Mrs. E. C. McCormick), Stephen L., Betty T., Coprian T., Flavian P., and Ida Katie. Mrs. AuBuchon passed away March 12, 1882. Miss Annabella, a daughter of John W. and Annabella (Montgomery) Brannon, early settlers of Missouri, became his wife March 20, 1883. She is a native of St. Louis. The family worship at the Catholic Church. Mr. AuBuchon is a Democrat, and for the past thirty years has been the postmaster at French Village.

Judge Peter Aubuchon, a prominent judge of St. Francois County, was born in Washington County, Mo., September 8, 1836. A sketch of his parents, Francis and Teresa (Coleman) Aubuchon, who are pioneers of St. Francois County, appears elsewhere in this volume. Judge Aubuchon had excellent educational advantages in his youth, first receiving a common school education and then, in 1855, enjoying the privileges afforded at Ste. Genevieve College. When he turned his attention to self support he was nineteen years of age, and first began as a clerk at Brickey's Landing on the Mississippi River. He closed his work there in three years, and in 1859 returned to French Village and engaged at farming, and became a partner in the firm of Aubuchon & Sons, dealers in general merchandise. He has been successfully occupied in this work of farming since 1864, when he sold his interest, and engaged in merchandising. In addition to this he was called to public life as county judge in November, 1886, the position he now holds. He has also served as justice of the peace. In politics he is a Democrat. It was in 1859, above mentioned, on September 6, that he married Miss Eliza A. Brickey, whose birth occurred in 1840, in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo. Seven of their eleven children are now living: Clara Rosa, Frederick C., Cora A., Thomas S., Emma T., Peter P. and S. Augustus. The Judge and his wife are members of the Catholic Church.

Adrian AuBuchon, a well-known citizen of Marion Township, St. Francois County, was born December 28, 1852, in French Village. The sketch of his well-known and venerable parents, Francis and Teresa (Coleman) AuBuchon, appears elsewhere in this volume. Young Adrian spent his life with his parents up to his twenty-fifth year, assisting them in the various duties of the home. He then began life for himself in his chosen line, and has become one of the substantial citizens of his section. February 11, 1877, he was united in marriage to Miss Paulina Rouggy, who was born and reared in St. Francois County, Mo., her birth occurring March 24, 1860. Four children have been born to them. The family are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. AuBuchon is a thorough supporter of the Democratic party.

Carico J. Barnhouse, son of Philip D. and Mary Ann (Goff) Barnhouse, was born in Virginia, May 23, 1831. Philip D. Barnhouse was born in Virginia August 7, 1805, and was by occupation a farmer. After his marriage in 1830 he immigrated to Ohio, located in Meigs County, where he died in 1847. His wife was born February 6, 1802, and by her marriage became the mother of six children, four of whom are now living. She is now residing in Pike County, Ohio. The oldest child born to this marriage was Carico J. Barnhouse, the subject of this sketch. He was married in Meigs County, Ohio, October 30, 1856, and April 15, 1866, he and family moved to Missouri, locating in St. Francois County on his present farm. To their marriage were born seven children, all now living: Sarah Ann, wife of William H. Warsing; Amanda Jane, wife of Newton Williams; Daniel T.; Mary Emma, wife of A. Johnstone; John N., Charles C. and Ira E. The mother of these children was born October 20, 1840. Carico J. Barnhouse, at the breaking out of the late war, volunteered in the Seventh Ohio Cavalry. He is at present the owner of 260 acres of land situated one mile south of Doe Run Lead Mines. He is conservative in his political views, voting for principle rather than for party. Mrs. Barnhouse is a member of the Free-Will Baptist Church.

William S. Barry, a native of St. Francois County, was born in October, 1836, and is the son of Wilson and Ann (Welborn) Barry. The father a native of Virginia, born September 1, 1796, and was of Irish-Welsh descent. He was a farmer by occupation, and immigrated to Missouri in 1820, where he married Miss Welborn. She was the mother of ten children, four of whom are now living. Mr. Barry settled in St. Francois County, where he followed agricultural pursuits until his death, May 4, 1886. His wife was born September 21, 1798, and died in 1858. William S. Barry, the subject of this sketch, has lived until the present (1888) in his native county. At the age of twenty he chose for his life's companion Miss Frances Parkes, daughter of Hastings and Ruth (Laws) Parkes. Mr. Parkes was born in North Carolina and is still living, being seventy-eight years old. His wife was also a native of North Carolina, and died in St. Francois County in 1866 at the age of sixty-four years. To William S. Barry and wife were born an interesting family of six children, five now living: Wilson M., Norah, John H., Jennie and Nellie A. Several of the children have attended the Baptist College in Farmington and have received good educations. Mr. Barry is at present the owner of 273 acres of land situated two miles east of Doe Run Lead Mines, and has discovered rich samples of lead ore on his farm. He is a Democrat in politics, and a member of the United Baptist Church.

Hon. I. G. Beal (deceased) was a native of Nelson County, Ky., born about one mile from Bardstown, April 12, 1817. His parents were both natives of Kentucky. At an early age he commenced attending the St. Joseph College, at Bardstown, Ky., and at the age of fourteen he came out to Missouri, and there purchased land onto which his parents and the family moved. He, however, remained at Bardstown, and finished his education. He commenced the study of law with Hardin or Wyckliffe, probably the latter, and he was admitted to the bar at Bardstown. He then came to the residence of his parents in Missouri. His father died in Ralls County, and his mother afterward removed to Quincy, Ill., but from there she eventually moved to Jefferson County. She died at the residence of her son, in South St. Louis, and is buried there. Mr. Beal came to Southeast Missouri about 1845 to seek a desirable location for his practice, and after a short stay at Perryville he located at Farmington, and commenced practicing his profession. His talents and natural ability soon made him a name known all over Southeast Missouri, and perhaps no lawyer in that portion of the State had such an extensive demand for his services as Mr. Beal. He took an active interest in public affairs, and though he was averse to political preferment, he was put forward by his friends for the position of representative in the Missouri Legislature, of 1860, and received the election at the hands of the citizens of his representative district. His devotion to his profession and to the interests of his clients was the cause of the premature breaking down of his physical health and his death. He died January 18, 1868. He was married October 6, 1850, to Miss Evelin A. Hail, in Farmington, Mo., by Rev. Amos H. Rogers, of the Presbyterian Church. Her father, Thomas Hail, was a native of South Carolina, and went with his parents to Louisiana when a boy, and there grew to manhood. He came from Louisiana to Missouri, and selected a location on Big River, in St. Francois County. He was married to Miss Margaret Eads, a native of Kentucky, who came to Missouri in 1805, when thirteen years of age. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Hail lived along the banks of the Big River, and there reared their family of four sons and two daughters. Mr. Hail was shot during the late war, while on his farm, where his negroes were working.

His wife died before the war. To Mr. and Mrs. Beal were born four children, viz.: J. G. or Guy as he is generally known, is now travelling in Colorado; (He was educated at the Christian Brother's College, at St. Louis, and at Fulton (Missouri) College.) Albert Leonard, or Bert, is engaged in the printing business at St. Louis; Laura, wife of N. D. Casey, of Farmington, and Miss Anna.

Joseph E. Blankenship. There were two young people born, reared and married in North Carolina, who came to Ste. Genevieve County in 1848, and who afterward moved to and now reside near Farmington, Mo. This couple are Hampton and Sarah (Taylor) Blankenship, the parents of the subject of this sketch. Joseph E. was born in Ste. Genevieve County, September 6, 1849, and under the home training of his parents he grew to his majority and then embarked in agriculture as his own pursuit in life. He has acquired a farm of 107 acres, six miles east of Bonne Terre, which he purchased in 1878, and has devoted it especially to stock and grain. The land also shows evidences in the several fine specimens of ore found that it contains considerable mineral wealth. Miss Nancy A. Lane, a native of St. Francois County, became the wife of Mr. Blankenship in 1872. This lady spent several years of her youth in Illinois, where her parents, Jones and Sarah A. Lane, had removed, but later on Mr. Lane became a prominent citizen of St. Francois County, with whose advancement he was closely identified. To Mr. and Mrs. Blankenship have been born three children: Mary S., Fanny M. and Nora. They both hold the tenets of the Baptist faith. Mr. Blankenship finds his political views embodied in the principles of the Democratic party. His interest in educational affairs has led to his becoming a member of the school board.

W. P. Blanks was born in what is known as the Cook settlement, Liberty Township, St. Francois Co., Mo., November 29, 1838, and is the son of Zeno T. and Maria (Withers) Blanks, and grandson of Shadrock and Lydia (Perrin) Blanks. The grandparents were born, reared and married in Louisa County, Va. Shadrock Blanks was a farmer by occupation. He moved from his native country after marriage and settled in Lincoln County, Ky., where he died. His widow came to Missouri with Zeno Blanks and settled in Liberty Township. Zeno was born in Lincoln County, Ky., near what was known as the Crab Orchard. He came to Missouri with his mother, located in Liberty Township on what is known as the Crow farm, and built the present brick house that stands there, though the present owners have made an addition to it. Here the mother died, and here Mr. Zeno Blanks also passed his last days. He died in 1844. His widow survived him about six years. Both were members of the Christian Church. Mr. Blanks was an old line Whig in his political preferences, and had held the office of justice of the peace for some time. W. P. Blanks, the subject of this sketch, was reared in Liberty Township, St. Francois County, and secured a fair education in the schools of that county. He was reared to farm life, and about 1861 he engaged in mercantile pursuits at Libertyville, where he continued until the fall of 1884, and then sold out. Just before the completion of the Iron Mountain branch road through Knob Lick he, in connection with John E. Clardy, erected a building in the last named place, and engaged in merchandising there. They afterward dissolved partnership, and Mr. Blanks was not connected with business in Knob Lick. In the fall of 1884 he removed his family to Knob Lick and has ever since resided there. He was married in De Soto, Mo., August 16, 1869, to Miss Minerva Bainbridge, a native of Jonesboro, Ill., and the daughter of Col. Allen and Nancy (Spiller) Bainbridge. Both parents were natives of Tennessee, but later removed to De Soto, Mo. Col. Bainbridge was engaged in milling and merchandising while in Jonesboro, Ill. He also represented his county two terms in the Legislature. After removing to De Soto, Mo., he engaged in fruit growing, and died October 28, 1873. His wife is still living, and is now residing in St. Louis. To Mr. and Mrs. Blanks were born these children: Florence E., Maria B., Arthur Withers, Mary Alice and Anna Grace. Mr. Blanks is a member of Knob Lick Lodge No. 337, A. O. U. W., and is treasurer of the same. He represented the lodge in the general convention at St. Louis, in February, 1888. He is a Democrat in his political views, and, with his wife and two daughters, is a member of the Christian Church, of which he is an elder.

A. D. Boss, T. J. Simms & T. Gherman, dealers in general merchandise at Bismarck, Mo., are doing a large and successful business at that place. A. D. Boss was born in Jonesboro, Ill., in 1849, and is the son of John and Elizabeth (Musch) Boss, who located at Middle Brook, Mo., when A. D. was but a small boy. They are still residents of that city, and are much esteemed citizens. A. D. Boss at the age of nineteen engaged in general merchandising with M. Seitz, at Middle Brook, Mo., and remained in business at that place for thirteen years, when he sold out and came to Bismarck. He purchased an interest in the flour mill with F. Rodach in 1879, and continued with him until 1883, after which Mr. Boss purchased the entire mill, and is doing extremely well at the business, the mill having a capacity for seventy-five barrels per day. In 1883 he married Miss Sophia Seitz, who bore him two children: Edith and John. Michael Seitz, father of Mrs. Boss, was born in Baden, Germany, and immigrated to the United States, where he settled in Middle Brook many years ago. He is still living there. In 1884 A. D. Boss bought a lot, and built one of the best store houses in the town. He formed a partnership with T. J. Simms, and put in a large stock of general merchandise. He is a Mason, and a Republican in politics. In April, 1887, T. Gherman became a partner. He is the son of Ignatz and Josephine Gherman, who came from Germany many years ago and located at Middle Brook, Mo., but afterward moved to Fredericktown, Mo. T. Gherman was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., in 1856, and was educated in the common schools, and soon after finishing the same began clerking in a brewery, where he remained two years. He came to Bismarck in 1880, and kept a liquor store at this place for five years. He has also been dealing in ice for several years. He became a partner with Boss & Simms in April, 1887. In 1879 he married Miss Maggie Dequire of Fredericktown, Mo., and to them were born two children: Nellie and Willie. Mr. Gherman is a K. of H., also a member of the A. O. U. W., is a Republican in politics, and he and wife are members of the Catholic Church.

Jacob Boyer, merchant of Doe Run, was born April 1, 1840, and is the son of John and Melane B. Boyer, who were born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo. The father's birth occurred in 1808, and he is of French extraction. He was a farmer and a miner by occupation, and was married at the age of twenty-six, and became the father of six children—three sons and three daughters. His wife died in 1865, but Mr. Boyer is still living, and is residing in Ste. Genevieve County. His father, Louis Boyer, was born at Kaskaskia, Ill., in 1787, and was drafted in the War of 1812, but on account of his being a married man his brother, John Boyer, took his place. His wife was Magdaline Colman, and she was the mother of fourteen children. Jacob Boyer was born in Washington County, Mo., and ninety-six days' attendance at school was the limit of his educational advantages. At the age of twenty-one he enlisted in the Confederate army, and after four months' service was honorably discharged. Returning home his good behavior was the means of his not being molested by Federal soldiers, and he continued farming with his father until twenty-three years old. At the age of twenty-three he married Miss Felicen Boyer, a daughter of John Boyer, before mentioned. Three children were born to this marriage, only two now living—Blanche and Ferdinand. Mrs. Boyer died March 22, 1870, and Mr. Boyer afterward married Miss Martha Boyer, sister to his first wife. She also bore him three children, only two now living, Richard and Sarah. Jacob Boyer followed agricultural pursuits until 1880, when he began merchandising in Bloomsdale, where he remained until the fall of 1887. He then moved to Doe Run and opened a general merchandise store, and is now one of the thrifty and enterprising merchants of that town. Although Mr. Boyer's ancestors have lived in America for a number of generations, strange to say they still cling to the mother tongue, and even the younger members of the family speak the French language with fluency. Mr. Boyer and family were reared as members of the Catholic Church and observe all its rules and commandments. He is a member of the Catholic Knights.

John L. Bradley, merchant of Doe Run, was born in 1852, and is one of nine children—four daughters and five sons—all living but one. born to the union of Elijah C. and Eliza Jane (Minate) Bradley. Elijah C. was born in Knoxville, Tenn., in 1828, and was a farmer by occupation. He married in Tennessee, and in 1858 immigrated to St. Francois County, Mo., where he again followed agricultural pursuits. He died July 17, 1883. His wife died November 4, 1879, at the age of forty. John L., the second child born to his parents, first saw the light of day in Knoxville, Tenn. He immigrated to Missouri with his parents, and followed farming until 1884, at which date he engaged in merchandising in Knob Lick, St. Francois County, and there remained until May, 1887, when he sold out and settled a little later in Doe Run, where he has a thriving business in general merchandising. At the age of twenty-seven he married Miss Julia A. Poston, and the result of this marriage was the birth of four children; only one, Mamie L., is now living. Mr. Bradley is a member of the I. O. O. F., is by political affiliation a Democrat, and he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

William H. Bryan is a prosperous blacksmith and wagon maker at Bonne Terre. He spent three years as a carriage-maker's apprentice in West Virginia, and then went to Brownsville, Penn., where he was engaged in the machine shops. After some time spent in Pittsburgh he came to St. Francois County in 1876, and located near Bonne Terre, where he was the proprietor of a saw mill for a time. After a short visit to his old home he returned in 1878 and again resumed his trade, which he has since followed, but has been located at Bonne Terre since 1887. He was married to Miss Emma Cannon in 1877, and this union has been blessed with two children. Mr. Bryan is a Prohibitionist in political affairs, and is identified with the Masonic and A. O. U. W. fraternities. His parents, James and Mary (Gable) Bryan, were living in Cincinnati, O., at the time of his birth, July 22, 1842. They were natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia, respectively.

John T. Burks, furniture dealer of Farmington, was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., in 1857, and is the son of Francis M. and Mary (Hunt) Burks, and the grandson of Charles Burks, who was a native of Kentucky and who came to Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., at a very early date. He was killed in this county during the war. Francis M. was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., in 1836, and is of Irish descent. He grew to manhood in this county and there he has ever since resided. He is the owner of 440 acres of land in Union Township. Edward Byington. On July 17, 1847, there was born to John and Mary A. (Brady) Byington, of St. Genevieve County, a son. It was their fourth child born there in the county of their own birth, and the child was destined to become a follower in the footsteps of his father as a tiller of the soil. This child was Edward Byington, the subject of this sketch, and one of the well-known citizens of Perry Township. At the early age of three years Edward was left without a mother, but some time after her death his father married a second time. Edward left home at the age of nineteen and entered the Valle Mines. It was not long, however, until he returned to farming, and in 1868 he settled at his present home. He bought the estate in 1871 and in 1878 erected his commodious residence. The estate includes 320 acres of some of the finest lands in the township. During 1872 and 1873 he was also engaged in teaming in Washington County, Mo., and in connection with farming he has been occupied in buying and selling stock. In 1882 Mr. Byington was also engaged in farming in Mississippi, Mo., for a year. In his public services he has been on the board of education, and he is an active supporter of the A. O. U. W. and K. of P. The Democratic party generally voices his political sentiments. He was united in marriage in 1868, on November 4, to Miss Clarinda Lassource, a lady born in Ste. Genevieve County, on Christmas day in 1851. She died May 8, 1888. Their children are May C., Anna B., Valter K., Shilton E., William L. (deceased), Preston E., Mertilla, Maggie and Cleve (deceased).

The father was born in Botetourt County, Va., in 1804, and in 1835 immigrated to South Bend, Ind., but four years later came to St. Francois County, Mo., where he passed the remainder of his life. He died in 1864. The mother died when Miss Eliza was but an infant and she was deprived of a mother's love and care. After the death of her mother she was taken by her paternal grandmother, Susannah Carleton, who kindly cared for her and looked after her wants while a child. From 1834 until his death her father lived with his mother as long as she survived. Miss Carleton was sent to the district schools in Virginia and, after going to South Bend, Ind., she attended school in that city. Soon after this the grandmother died and Mr. Carleton moved to Missouri where Eliza A. kept house for him. She improved her spare moments and acquired knowledge from the books in her possession. In the spring of 1845 she taught her first term of school in District No. 31, at Hickory Cabin school-house. This was a very small log house and is still standing, and is in Perry Township, St. Francois Co., Mo. Miss Carleton received $3 in trade or $2 in cash for each pupil. She taught several district schools, and, after accumulating sufficient means, entered Arcadia College, from which institution she graduated in 1858 with the degree of M. A. In April, 1854, Miss Carleton founded Carleton Institute, which was named in honor of her father. This school was located eight miles north of Farmington, and had an attendance of thirty pupils. March 4, 1859, an act to incorporate Carleton Institute with University privileges was approved at Jefferson City, Mo. From the birth of the Institute Miss Carleton has devoted her entire time and attention to the institute she founded. She has lived to see her work grow and flourish, and it is now one of the leading educational institutes in Southeast Missouri. She has rebuilt four times, and in 1878 she moved her school to Farmington, where she erected a large and commodious brick building, surrounded by attractive grounds of sixteen acres. The attendance has reached as high as 150 pupils, with eight competent instructors, Miss Carleton being president and instructor in the English language. She is a lady of rare literary culture and refinement, and a very entertaining and instructive conversationalist. Her name is a household word in many of the best families of St. Francois County, and also adjoining counties. She is a consistent and devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and her life has been one of purity and womanly devotion to the cause of education and dissemination of knowledge.

Hon. William Carter, ex-judge of the Twentieth Circuit of Missouri, is a native of Wayne County, Mo. (now Carter County), born in 1830, and is the son of Zimri A. Carter, who was a native of Abbeville District, S. C., born in 1794, and of English descent. His father was a Virginian by birth, and in 1808 immigrated to Warren County, Mo., but moved to Wayne County, Mo., in 1813. He purchased a large tract of land eight miles southeast of Van Buren for a horse and cow. Zimri went into Warren County with his parents and soon made a trip south on a flat boat with traders, being absent from home several years. When he returned home his parents were living in what is now Carter County. He was married in 1822 and settled on the old home place, and in 1859 Carter County was named in honor of his father, Zimri Carter, he being one of the influential men and prominent land holders of Southern Missouri. He at one time was county judge of the county court. He died in 1870. His wife, Clementine Chilton, was a native of Jefferson County, Tenn., born in 1804, and was of English extraction. Her grandparents were natives of England, and came to America and settled in Lord Baltimore's colony. Mrs. Carter died in 1873. She was the mother of fifteen children, Judge Carter being the fifth child. He received his rudimentary education in the common schools of his native county, and finished the same at Arcadia College, attending nearly four years and graduating in the full course in 1853, receiving the degree of A. B. In 1853 he commenced the study of his chosen profession, that of law, and graduated from the Louisville Law School in March, 1855. He began practicing at Potosi in 1854, and remained there until June, 1862, when he settled on a farm in St. Francois County. In March, 1864, he located at Farmington, and has since been a resident of the same. During the war he was appointed curator of the State University and held the position a few years. In April, 1864, he was elected circuit judge of the Twentieth Circuit of Missouri, which comprised the counties of Washington, Iron, St. Francois, Madison, Perry and Ste. Genevieve. In 1868 Judge Carter was re-elected and served until 1874. In the fall of the same year he was elected to the Twenty-eighth General Assembly and served one term. He was chairman of the judiciary committee and a member of the ways and means committee. Since that time he has devoted his attention exclusively to his practice. He is one of the leading men of the legal profession in the State of Missouri, his practice extending over a large portion of the State. In 1886 Judge Carter, Dr. A. Parkhurst and K. W. Weber organized The Bank of Farmington and have met with excellent success. In March, 1862, Judge Carter married Miss Maria McElvaine, daughter of Col. Jesse H. McElvaine, and to them were born seven children: Jesse M., second lieutenant in the United States army, graduate of West Point and is stationed at Fort Ringgold, Tex.; William F., attorney at law with his father; Clementine C., Thomas B., Charles H., Edwin F. and Grace A. The Judge has been a life-long Democrat, and cast his first presidential vote for Franklin Pierce, in 1852.

Milton P. Cayce. Prominent among the oldest and most enterprising citizens of Farmington stands the name of Milton P. Cayce, who was born in Charlotte County, Va., June 15, 1804. He is the son of Pleasant and Anna (Claybrook) Cayce. The father was born in Chesterfield County, Va., in 1767 and was a coach maker by trade. He learned his trade in his native county, and about the time he attained his majority he went to Charlotte County, where he erected a shop and began business upon his own responsibility. In 1830 he immigrated to Missouri, settling in St. Charles County, but in 1834 he moved to St. Francois County and here bought 440 acres of land four miles north of Farmington. He was one of the pioneer settlers of St. Francois County, and died in 1840. His wife, Anna Claybrook, was born in 1770 in Charlotte County, Va., and died in 1822. Pleasant then married Mrs. Prudence Ellis, who was a native of Lunenburg County, Va. She died in 1833. He was the father of eight children—six daughters and two sons—two of the children now living, Ann V., widow of John Kennedy, and Milton P. The latter spent his early life on the farm, and at the age of thirteen entered a store at Charlotte, Va., and began clerking. He worked here for five years, and the following five years was engaged in the same business at Farmville, Prince Edward County. He served as salesman at Petersburg for eleven years, and in 1830 came to St. Charles County, Mo., with his father, where he spent two years in tilling the soil. In 1832 he came to Farmington and established a general merchandise store on his own responsibility. Mr. Cayce was constantly engaged in merchandising from 1832 until 1885, a period of fifty-two years, in the same town, and his honesty and integrity were never questioned. He keeps a small stock of goods on hand at present, but for the past three years he has been too feeble to attend to any kind of business. In 1852 he and Ellis Douthit took a contract for building five miles of gravel road near Farmington, and this they completed to the satisfaction of all concerned. The following year they erected a flouring mill in Farmington at a cost of $5,000, and about 1855 Mr. Cayce bought Mr. Douthit's interest. Mr. Cayce afterward remodeled the mill and greatly enlarged it until it was one of the best mills in Southeast Missouri. In 1874 it was destroyed by fire, and his loss was about $30,000, with no insurance. Mr. Cayce was for many years interested in a blacksmith general repair shop, and in a tanyard and farming. He erected the first ice-house in the county and purchased the first piano. He is now in the eve of a long and prosperous life, and his memory will live in the hearts of the people long after his body has returned to its original dust. January 8, 1830, he married Miss Susan A. Ellis, who was born in Lunenburg County, Va., November 6, 1814. Three of their children lived to be grown: Adaline F., who died at the age of eighteen; Ellis P., manager of the store of the Iron Mountain Co.; and Nettleton D., who died December 25, 1886, at the age of forty-eight. Mrs. Cayce died December 19, 1843, and November 6, 1850. Mr. Cayce married Miss Virginia C. Dupuy, who was a native of Prince Edward County, Va., born in 1828. To this union six children were born: Alice J., Elizabeth D. (wife of Martin L. Clardy, member of the Tenth Congressional District of Missouri), Nannie C. (wife of R. W. Weber, attorney and banker of Farmington), J. Harry, Milton P. (cashier of Bank of Farmington), and William D. Mr. Cayce has been a life-long Democrat, casting his first presidential vote for Gen. Jackson in 1828, and has been one of the leading men of the party in St. Francois County for many years. In 1836 he was elected county treasurer, and at the subsequent election was re-elected and held the position for twenty years, or until his son, Ellis P., succeeded him. Thus the office of county treasurer has been in the possession of the Cayce family for a period of thirty-eight years, a very unusual circumstance. In 1838 Mr. Cayce was elected sheriff of the county and served two years, when he resigned, and was a member of the constitutional convention of 1861. He is at present president of the Gravel Road Company, of St. Francois County. He and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he has been a member for sixty years and an elder for fifty-seven years. He is one of its most liberal contributors. He was postmaster at Farmington for two or three years.

Ellis P. Cayce was born in St. Francois County, Mo., in 1835, and is the son of Milton P. and Susan (Ellis) Cayce. The mother is dead but the father is living at Farmington and is eighty-four years old. He was county treasurer for twenty years, and then E. P. Cayce was in the office from 1860 to 1878. Ellis was educated at Princeton College, N. J., and graduated from that institution in 1858. He then returned to Farmington, Mo., where he followed merchandising for eighteen years. About 1880 he came to Iron Mountain as general manager of the store. The firm carry a large stock of goods, such as is suitable for a mining town. Mr. Cayce is a first-class business man and a gentleman in every respect. He married Miss Emma W. Dupuy, of Farmington, although she was reared and educated in Summerville, Tenn. Three children were born to this union: Elsie, Paul and Adele—two daughters and a son. Mr. Cayce is a member of the Princeton Alumni Association of St. Louis. He is a Democrat in politics, and he and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is an elder.

Judge Caleb P. Clark, county judge of St. Francois County, is a native of Perry County, Mo., and was born September 15, 1838, being the son of Francis and Evaline (Pettit) Clark, and grandson of Francis Clark, Sr., who was one of the original settlers of Southeast Missouri, and who was of Scotch-Irish extraction. He was a native of Ireland, and was the first of the family to immigrate to America. He located at Wheeling, Va., and in the latter part of the last century he came to Missouri. He received from the Spanish Government a grant of that part of what was then Cape Girardeau County, and embraced in the limits of Perry County. His land embraced a row of bluffs which offered splendid inducements for the raising of peaches and apples for brandy making. He determined to put them to that use and had his orchard under way, when one day two men came to the place and, by what was afterward supposed to be a preconceived plan, got into an altercation. Mr. Clark separated them, but they were soon again in controversy, and upon his attempting to again separate them, one of them stabbed him. They then took their departure. Their act was supposed to be instigated by a desire to get Mr. Clark out of the way of an inheritance at Wheeling, Va. His widow, who was of the Custard family, of Virginia, survived him many years and was afterward married again. Francis Clark, Jr., was born in what is now Perry County, Mo., at the location taken up by his father. When a young man he went with Elliott on his survey of the southwestern region, including Arkansas, a large portion of Missouri, etc. He married Miss Pettit, a native of Perry County, and the daughter of James Pettit, a native Kentuckian. Mr. Pettit married Miss Donohue, also a native of Kentucky, and whose parents were born in Ireland. The Pettits were a prominent family of French extraction. After his marriage Mr. Clark settled in what is now Perry County, followed farming until 1849, when he removed to St. Francois County, and located in the Cook settlement, where his son, Caleb P., now resides. Here he remained until his death which occurred August 28, 1880. He was a Whig in the time of that party, but later affiliated with the Democratic party, and was one of its staunchest supporters. He was a member of the Christian Church. His widow now resides with her son, Caleb P., and is seventy-eight years of age. She was born January 8, 1810. Caleb P. Clark was in his eleventh year when his parents moved to St. Francois County, and his education was received principally there. In August, 1861, he enlisted in the Confederate army, joining Gen. Thompson in Scott County, being first in the State service. He went to Pocahontas, Ark., and at that place his company attached itself to Col. Dannel's regiment. He went to Des Arc, Ark., and was there organized into Capt. Ake's company. Upon the organization of a battery at Batesville he became attached to it, and was afterward attached to the cavalry of Col. Porter. After the last named officer received his mortal wound, Mr. Clark reported to Col. Green's regiment and was assigned to Capt. Carey's company, and served through Arkansas and the Southeast. Mr. Clark was captured during Marmaduke's raid, in 1864. He was in prison at St. Louis, Alton and Rock Island, and in March, 1865, he left the last named place a prisoner of war, and was sent by the way of Pennsylvania and Baltimore to Richmond, Va. He fell in company with Gov. Harris, of Tennessee, came across to Arkansas and thence by steamer to Memphis. In July, 1865, he reached his father's place (the father having moved to Perry County during the war), and in February, 1866, they returned to St. Francois County, where Caleb P. has resided ever since. He is a farmer, and is independent in everything except politics, and in that he is strongly identified with the Democratic party. In November, 1886, he was elected county judge.

W. H. Colman was born in St. Louis, Mo., February 20, 1855, and is the son of Benjamin Colman, a native of Dublin, Ireland. His father came over to New York when nineteen years old and accepted a position as bookkeeper for Harper Brothers of this city. His father married while in New York and soon after moved to St. Louis, Mo., where he kept books for various firms, the last being the firm of W. L. Ewing & Co. After leaving W. L. Ewing & Co. he went to Okmulgee, Ind. T., and engaged in business, his family joining him out there soon after. While there his oldest son, Bennie, died. His father then gave up business there and returned to St. Louis and accepted a position as secretary of the La Motte Lead Co., at Mine La Motte, Mo., where he still remains. W. H. Colman remained at Okmulgee about one year after his father left there and acted as salesman in a store, where he acquired a very good knowledge of the Creek language, and the chief of the nation, Col. Chacot, wanted Mr. W. H. Colman to acquire a thorough knowledge of the language and become their interpreter at Washington, D. C., but Mr. Colman, being young, soon became tired of Indian life and went to Fredericktown, Mo., and ran a store for Mr. Henry Wernecke. Mr. Wernecke soon after going out of business, Mr. Colman entered the employ of the Clear Water Lumber Co., at Gads Hill, Mo. He was stationed at Gads Hill at the time of the famous robbery of the Texas Express, but, as fortune favored, was absent at the time, being telegraphed to that morning to run down to Clear Water, a station some thirty miles below. Mr. Colman having the switch keys in his pocket the robbers were about to kill a man because he would not turn them over. Mr. Colman then went to Clear Water and took charge of the office there but his eyes becoming weak he had to give up the business and leave. He then went to Mine La Motte and went to work as a common laborer, when in the space of two years he was promoted to assistant superintendent of the smelting department. Soon after he went to Bonne Terre, Mo., and took charge of the smelting works there, but soon returned to Mine La Motte and took his old position. During the panic in 1873 he went to Georgetown, Colo., and went to prospecting and soon lost what money he had. He then went to Leadville, Colo., and went to smelting for the La Platta Mining & Smelting Co., and while there he received a letter from Mr. Gus Setz, superintendent of the Smelting Works at Bonne Terre, Mo., offering him a position as assistant, which he accepted, and after filling the position for several years he became thoroughly lead poisoned and had to give up his position. He then traveled for a year through the East, North and South and in March, 1887, returned to Bonne Terre, Mo., much improved in health. He then accepted a position with the Doe Run Lead Co., at Doe Run, Mo., a new lead mine just opened up, and he now occupies the position of bookkeeper and paymaster. When they established a postoffice at Doe Run he was appointed assistant postmaster. He is the author of a daily labor report showing the daily expenses of each department on a single line on the report every day in the year and pronounced by good authority to be the best report for manufactories ever produced. He is also the author of a daily and yearly production book, by the aid of which all knowledge essential to business can be had at a single glance. Mr. Colman is a member of La Motte Lodge No. 244, I. O. O. F., and member of the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. of Missouri. He is an independent as regards politics, and believes in supporting the best man regardless of party.

(Conover) Conover, were also natives of New Jersey, and remained in New Jersey until about 1860, the date of his removal to Norwich, N. Y. The subject of this sketch grew to manhood in Norwich, N. Y., and during the war enlisted in Company L, of the Twenty-second New York Cavalry, as lieutenant, serving until he was mustered out at the expiration of the war. It was in 1879 that he entered the service of his present employers at Bonne Terre. His first marriage occurred in 1874, to Cornelia De Lisser, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y. Mrs. Conover lived to be the loving mother of four children, but two of whom are now living, George S. and Emily D. Her death occurred April 5, 1882. She was a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Conover's present wife was Miss Gertrude De Lisser, a daughter of Richard L. and Mary E. (Puffer) De Lisser, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Her father was a native of Jamaica, West Indies. Mr. and Mrs. Conover have one child, William D. Both are members of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Conover holds Republican principles, and is a member of two orders, the G. A. R. and the A. O. U. W.

Alvin B. Corwin, architect, contractor and builder, at Bonne Terre, comes of Ohio stock. His parents, Levi and Angeline (Brown) Corwin, were both natives of that State, and at the date of Alvin's birth, December 31, 1853, resided in Delaware County. Young Alvin's taste for building and architecture was fostered by his father, who was eminently able to teach his son the skill his years of experience in that line had acquired. Alvin first spent some years in Ohio as a journeyman carpenter, and finally, in 1878, located in St. Louis. He first came to Bonne Terre in 1881, and then went to Sheffield, Ala., but in 1886 he returned and resumed his old trade as he is now employed. Two examples of the many his work may furnish are the I. X. L. clothing store building, and the fine residence of J. W. Woodside. In September, 1886, he married Mrs. Emma Grant Phillips, a Massachusetts lady, who came to Missouri with her parents and settled in Washington County. Mrs. Corwin is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Corwin looks to the Republican party for successful administration, and among the various fraternal organizations he has chosen to support the K. of P.

Charles H. Covington was born April 14, 1865, in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo. His parents, who reside at De Lassus, are John and Mary (Shannon) Covington, natives of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively. Mr. Covington's grandparents were among the earliest pioneers of this region. Our subject was but eight years old when his parents moved to St. Francois County, and located near Bonne Terre, where he grew to maturity. He first engaged in farming, but in 1880 removed to Washington County, where he became a clerk. In 1883 he returned to Bonne Terre, and was engaged with the St. Joe Lead Company two years as clerk in their store and two years in the market. For the last year he has been manager of their market. His father, James Cunningham, was a native of Tennessee, but was brought by his parents to Missouri when a mere child. His grandparents located in St. Francois County but four years later than its earliest settlers. Here it was that James married the mother of Rees, Jane (Harris) Cunningham. Young Rees Bowen had reached the age of nineteen when he began farming for himself, and a few years later he turned his attention to blacksmithing, with which he was successfully occupied for the next twelve years. He then returned to his first work, however, and has been a tiller of the soil ever since that time, and has had well deserved success. His marriage occurred December 15, 1853, when he wedded Miss Nancy M., a daughter of William and Harriet (Covington) Williams, natives respectively of Virginia and Kentucky. Mrs. Cunningham was also born in Kentucky August 21, 1835. They have had six children, five of whom are now living: Harriet J., Mahala E., James W., John B. (deceased), H. Lee and Van B. The father was a native Virginian, born in 1805, and was of Welsh descent. He came to Mississippi County, Mo., with his father, Timothy Dalton, who was a soldier in the War of 1812, and who resided in Grayson County, Tenn. He was for many years six miles from the nearest neighbor and forty miles from mill. Reuben was a farmer by occupation, and resided about four miles from Charleston. In 1841 he sold out and started for the unknown West. Reaching Western Missouri, and not liking the country, he returned east and finally located in St. Francois County. He here bought and entered property which is now the farm owned by the widow of Daniel Miller. In 1856 Reuben Dalton settled where his widow is now living. He died in 1884, and was the owner of 200 acres, and was one of the early settlers of St. Francois County. He never aspired for political honors, but was content to live a quiet and peaceful life. His wife was born in Knox County, Tenn., in 1818, and is yet living. To their marriage were born thirteen children, nine of whom are yet living. Thomas T. Dalton was only three years old when his parents came to St. Francois County, Mo. He assisted his parents on the farm until twenty-two years of age, when, in February, 1862, he married Miss Emma, daughter of George Marks. Mrs. Dalton was born in St. Francois County, Mo., in 1836, and by her marriage became the mother of one child, Mary Alice, who was educated in the public schools of Farmington, and also attended two years the Female College at Jacksonville, Ill., graduating from that institution in the summer of 1883. In 1865 he came to Farmington, and he and his brother-in-law, Thomas B. Marks, established a general store, and from that date until the present have been engaged in the same business. For the past fifteen years they have kept a hotel in connection with their store, and being good business men, and men much respected, are doing quite well in their business transactions. They have also speculated in stocks at various times. Mr. Dalton is a true gentleman, and is very courteous and obliging. His wife is an excellent lady, as her many friends testify. Mr. Dalton is a Republican in his political views, his first presidential vote being for Lincoln in 1864. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Julius J. David, a well known farmer of St. Francois County, was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., November 21, 1848. Julian, his father, was a Canadian, but his mother, Philopbean (Johnese) David, was born in Missouri. Young David grew to the age of nineteen years in his native county, and then began life independently. He followed the life of his youth as a farmer, and in 1869 removed to St. Francois County, where he has devoted his entire attention to agriculture, and takes the intelligent interest in it that a membership in the Farmers' Alliance—an organization for the promotion of agricultural interests—would betoken. Miss Rhoda B. Jennings became his wife, April 21, 1869, and has borne him six children, four of whom are living: Mary Luella, Francis S., William W. and Alice M. G. Mrs. David is also a native of Ste. Genevieve County, where she was born March 12, 1850. Her mother, Elizabeth (Brady) Jennings, was also a Missourian, but her father, George W. K. Jennings, was born in Mississippi, and was of English ancestry. Mr. Jennings came to Missouri when quite young and was one of the earliest settlers of St. Francois County. He died December 8, 1887, at the ripe age of seventy-two years. Our subject is an advocate of Republican principles.

He is a son of William and Sarah (Sherill) Dent, both of whom died in 1875 and only a week intervening between their deaths. They were the parents of eight children: Ellen, Frances, Ferdinand, W. Scott, Thomas, Alice, Edward and Maud. Four of the children are married. Walter Scott Dent was educated in neighborhood schools, and he and his aunt, Elizabeth Dent, are the owners of 350 acres of excellent land. His aunt keeps house for him as he has thus far preferred a state of single blessedness to any matrimonial venture. The farm upon which they reside is owned principally by his aunt, and is a fine stock farm, as the St. Francois River runs through a part of it. They have one of the best dwellings in the township, and also have a good barn and out-buildings. Walter Scott Dent is a member of the A. O. U. W., and is a Democrat in his political views.

Daniel Dunklin, M. D. The subject of this sketch was born in Jefferson County, Mo., April 15, 1851. His ancestry constitutes one of the oldest North Carolina families whose founders were among its earliest settlers. His parents were James L. and Cassandra A. (Anderson) Dunklin, the latter a native of Tennessee. Dr. Dunklin's first employment after leaving home in 1870 was that as agent and operator for the Iron Mountain Railway, at Mineral Point, and during this time he began his first steps in his chosen profession. In 1875 he entered the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, and graduated after three years' study there. The Doctor first began practice in Tazewell County, Ill., and eight months later went to Mineral Point, but since March, 1882, he has been in Bonne Terre, and has become one of the first physicians of the city. The Doctor is a prominent Democrat in his county, of whose central committee he is now chairman. He is a Select Knight of the A. O. U. W. and a member of the K. of P. Order. In 1851 he immigrated to the United States, and lived with his children in the State of Missouri. His wife died in 1851, at the age of fifty years, and he in 1880. Of their family of eight children only two are now living, Frederick being the eldest. He was educated in Germany, and at the age of fifteen he commenced learning the turner's trade, and worked at the same for seven years. In 1842 he left Germany and came to America, where he entered 210 acres in St. Francois Township. In 1846 he enlisted in Company I, Third Missouri Mounted Volunteers, and was in the service until October, 1848. He was in the battles of Donna Anna and Santa Cruz de Rosalia, and was discharged at Independence, Mo. In December, 1848, he married Miss Catherine Hersinger, a native of Germany, born in 1828, and to them were born ten children, eight of whom are now living: John, at Pilot Knob, engaged in mining; Frederick, blacksmith and wagon maker, at the same place; Caroline, wife of William Johns, in Colorado; Charles, Henry, Maggie, wife of William Edwards; Emma and Katie. Mr. Ebrecht farmed until 1867, when he was employed by the Mine La Motte Lead Company as clerk in their store, and retained his position for ten years, but during these years he resided on the farm. He is a man of good business capacity, and his honesty and integrity have never been questioned. Politically a Republican his first presidential vote was for Taylor, in 1848. He and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Jesse R. F. Edwards, a well known citizen of Perry Township, is a native of Tennessee, born in Robertson County February 1, 1839. His father, Jesse J., was of Scotch-Irish origin, and the descendants of his ancestors who settled in North Carolina before the Revolution are still quite numerous in that State. Our subject was born but a short time before his father left Tennessee, where he had spent his life since he was three years old. His birth occurred in North Carolina, and now he moved west a second time beyond Tennessee, to Dallas County, Mo., and finally, in 1843, four years later, settled in Ste. Genevieve County. Here the mother died May 12, 1876, at the ripe age of seventy-one, and the father survived her until April 10, 1880, having lived seventy-seven years. The mother, Priscilla T. Adam Halter attended school for about eight years and then commenced learning the shoemaker's trade, which he finished at Jackson, Mo. He remained there until about 1842 when he went to Mine La Motte and from there to St. Louis to improve his trade. At the end of a year and a half he came back to Jackson and remained there until about 1845, when he again returned to Mine La Motte. He here entered into partnership with John Herzinger in the boot and shoe business, and remained there until the breaking out of the war with Mexico, when they both entered the service of the United States, in Col. Rall's command and in Capt. McClelland's company. They went overland across the plains to Santa Fe, from there down the Rio Grande to El Paso and thence into Chihuahua. After peace was declared they returned home by the same route they had gone, and Mr. Halter engaged in the grocery business for two years. He then engaged in mining and followed this until 1854, when he went to California. Three years previous to this, September 17, he married Margaret Ruth, a native of Germany, who had come to America in 1846. To Mr. and Mrs. Halter were born ten children: A. He was reasonably successful, and in 1861 he returned to Missouri and bought 108 acres of wood land in St. Francois County. He hired choppers to cut up his timber, and 600 cords rotted on his hands on account of the war having broken up and stopped the works which afforded a market for his wood. Mrs. Hopkins was born on the farm her husband now owns September 25, 1852, and to her marriage were born ten children: Anna Mary, Thomas A., Michael K., William H., Jeremiah W., Archie Ward (deceased), Lizzie E., Andrew M., George O., and Lettie P. In 1876 Mr. Hopkins purchased seventy-eight acres four miles and a half southeast of Farmington, where he located and where he now resides. In 1887 he erected a good frame dwelling-house, and is one of the promising young farmers of the county. He is a Republican in politics, and his first presidential vote was for U. S. Grant in 1872. He and Mrs. Hopkins are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Jasper Horn. Closely associated with the interests of St. Francois County stands the name of Jasper Horn, who was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., in 1832, and who is the son of Thomas and Nancy (Hunt) Horn. Of thirteen children born to their marriage, two of the sons were killed while in service during the late war. The father has been dead about twenty years. Jasper Horn, like the average farmer boy, received his education in the country schools, and grew to manhood (figuratively speaking) between rows of corn. In 1855 he married Miss Mary Perkins, and six children are living of this union: Bettie, Mattie, Fannie, John C., Robert and Zeno. Mrs. Horn died in 1876, and in 1879 he married Mrs. Eusebia Madkin, who is the daughter of John Tullock. Mr. Horn owns 260 acres of land three miles southeast of Bismarck, and was assessor of this county for four years, going out of office in 1879. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., of the K. of H., and is also a member of the Baptist Church. He is a Democrat in his political principles.

John N. Horn, one of the successful and enterprising citizens of Iron Township, was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., in 1837, and is the son of Thomas and Nancy (Hunt) Horn, who were born and reared in Tennessee. John N., like the average country boy, received his education in the common schools, and worked on his father's farm until twenty-one years of age. He then worked three years at Valle Forge Iron Works, and at the breaking out of the Rebellion he abandoned all business of that description and enlisted in the Confederate Army, Second Missouri Regiment. He was under Capt. Cousins and Col. McCollough, and participated in the battle of Corinth, also that of Shiloh, and was in many other engagements of less note. Although taking an active part in these engagements Mr. Horn was fortunate in not receiving a wound. After the cessation of hostilities Mr. Horn came to Iron Mountain, where he took charge of a cut on the hill, but was soon given a position in the store, which he has occupied in a most satisfactory manner for the past nine years. He chose for his companion in life Miss Bell McFarland, and to this union were born five children, who are named as follows: Mianie E., Harry E., Maurice P., Gentry T. and Warren W. Mr. Horn is a member of the Masonic fraternity, also a member of the A. O. U. W. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a Democrat in his political views, and has been a member of the I. O. O. F. for twenty-eight years.

George W. Horn. Among the early settlers of St. Francois and St. Louis Counties were two families who came from Pennsylvania, named Horn and Richardson, and Martin, a son in the former, and Sarah J., a daughter of the latter family, were united in marriage. August 29, 1841, there was born to them in Marion Township of St. Francois County, a son, who is the subject of this sketch. George W. lived with his father, who has now reached the advanced age of seventy-eight years, and after passing his nineteenth year turned to independent work on a farm as a laborer. His earnings were carefully hoarded until he was able to purchase a tract of land in Marion Township. He has had marked success in his agricultural pursuits, and now owns 400 acres in this township. The farm on which he lives embraces 250 acres and has one of the best residences in this region. Stock and grain receives the bulk of his attention. On November 5, 1861, Rebecca Patterson, a native of St. Francois County, became his wife, and has borne him seven children, of whom the following five are living: Sarah J., George M., William A., Rosa and Marvin. Both are respected members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Mr. Horn finds congenial opinions in the ranks of the Democracy, and is interested in the mysteries of Masonry.

A. J. Horn, M. D., physician and surgeon of Farmington, is a native of St. Francois County, Mo., born near Farmington October 4, 1856, and is a son of Josiah and Jane (Southerland) Horn, and a grandson of Thomas Horn, who was born in Tennessee and came to Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., at a very early date. Josiah Horn was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., in 1824, and was married in his native county. About 1882 he moved to Farmington, where he was the owner of 260 acres of land. He was with Gen. Price during the late war. His wife was born in Albemarle County, Va., in 1822, and came to Missouri when a small child. She died in 1883. She was the mother of ten children, eight of whom lived to be grown: Thomas, a physician in St. Louis; Jane, wife of Doss Horn; George, a master mechanic at Doe Run Lead Mines; Emily, wife of Samuel G. Vansickle; Dr. A. J.; Charles, farmer; Delia, wife of J. D. Martin, in business college at Quincy, Ill., and Dr. Joseph L., at Doe Run. Dr. A. J. Horn was reared on the farm, and received his literary education in the public schools of Farmington. At the age of twenty-one he commenced the study of medicine, his brother Thomas, being his preceptor. In 1878 and 1879 he attended Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, and at the latter date commenced his practice at Coffman, Ste. Genevieve Co., Mo., where he remained five years. In 1885 he went to Polyclinic School in the city of New York and graduated as an M. D. in February, 1886. He then located at Farmington, where he has since remained engaged in the successful practice of his profession. In August, 1887, he married Miss Minnie Lindley, daughter of Dr. John Lindley. Mrs. Horn was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., in 1862, and was reared and educated in Athens, Ohio. He is a Democrat in politics, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Dr. Horn is one of the leading practitioners of Farmington, and during the short time he has resided there has made many friends and has built up a lucrative practice.

William Hunt was born near Shelbyville, Ky., January 11, 1821. When he was three years of age his parents, Henry and Nancy (Smith) Hunt, moved to Missouri, locating in St. Francois Township, St. Francois County. Here he was reared. In early manhood he purchased, in St. Francois Township, a large tract of land, which he improved and on which he made his home. He served as a private in the Mexican War under Gen. Taylor. He was united in marriage January 15, 1852, with Sarah Long, a native of St. Francois County, and a daughter of Philip and Isabella (Murphy) Long. Of this union there were six children, five of whom are living: Cora, Catherine (widow of Maurice Moran), Jennie, William H. and Philip. Mr. Hunt was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He died July 5, 1861. After his death the affairs of the place, under the superintendence of Mrs. Hunt, were carried on by the negroes, who were in her employ a number of years after they were emancipated. The homestead is still owned by the family.

Robert M. Hunter, a school commissioner of St. Francois County, and principal of the Desloge public schools of Bonne Terre, is a native of the mountains of North Carolina, where he was born January 29, 1848. He is the son of Hiram and Cynthia (Massey) Hunter, natives respectively of North and South Carolina. Robert M., the second of seven children, was reared in his mountainous home with his parents, and began his first occupation as a carpenter. Not content with that he entered the scientific course at Mars Hill College and in 1869 received his diploma. He soon became a teacher in the schools of that State and later on in Tennessee. St. Francois County became his home in 1873, and he immediately became identified with public school work, and in December, 1881, he was appointed school commissioner of his adopted county by Gov. Crittenden, and has since held the position by election. He is a Democrat in his political faith. In fraternal orders Mr. Hunter holds a prominent place, being financier in the A. O. U. W., and he is also a Mason. He was married September 12, 1878, to Miss Ella Grady, who was born in St. Francois County, in March, 1861. Mrs. Hunter is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Their only child is Birdie May.

W. S. Irvin, senior member of the firm of Irvin Bros., was born November 16, 1839, in Washington County, Mo. He is the eldest of a family of six children born to Samuel and Nancy (Cole) Irvin. His parents came from Virginia and Kentucky, respectively, at an early date, and were known among the early pioneers of this section. The mother died in 1855, but the father survived her until 1870. The subject of this sketch was active in the service in the late war, having participated in the capture and siege of Vicksburg, the capture of Arkansas Post and the battle of Lookout Mountain. He was taken sick, and after a time in hospital, in 1865, was honorably discharged on July 13 of that year, having enlisted August 29, 1862. He was mustered into Company I, Thirty-first Missouri Volunteer Infantry at St. Louis. In 1875 Mr. Irvin went west, and was engaged in several different occupations, but returned and in 1887 engaged in his present trade as a general merchant. The firm are building up a thriving trade. Our subject was married in 1871 to Miss Mary Anderson. They have one adopted daughter. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Irvin is independent in politics.

Eck. Irvin, junior member of the firm of Irvin Bros., general merchants, was born in Washington County, Mo., December 8, 1848. Mr. Irvin's parents are mentioned more at length in the sketch of his brother, W. S. Irvin, which precedes this. Mr. Irvin grew to manhood in his native county, and as he began life for himself found his inclination tending toward mercantile life. Since his present business was established in 1886 he has succeeded in aiding to make it one of the first-class places for general merchandise for Bonne Terre. In his political interests Mr. Irvin is thoroughly Democratic, while his fraternal spirit manifests itself in his membership of the Select Knights of the A. O. U. W. In 1869 he was united in marriage to Miss N. J. Westover. The union has resulted in two sons and one daughter. Mrs. Irvin is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

John Isenman, member of the firm of Isenman & Co., manufacturers of wagons, buggies, plows, harrows and grain cradles and all kinds of farming implements, at Farmington, Mo., is a native of Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., born April 5, 1848, and is the son of John and Mary (Littenecker) Isenman, natives of Baden, Germany, born in 1805 and 1802 respectively. They immigrated to the United States about 1838 and located near Bucyrus, Ohio, where they bought a farm and cultivated the soil. About 1843 they sold out and moved to Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., where they bought 160 acres of land, ten miles west of the county seat. Here they passed the remainder of their lives, dying in 1878 and 1870 respectively. Their family consisted of six daughters and three sons, six of whom are now living. John Isenman is the youngest member of this family. He received his education in the common schools, and at the age of seventeen he went to Pilot Knob and here commenced learning the wagon maker's trade. He worked three years, and in 1868 came to Farmington, where he worked for Lang & Bro. one year. In 1869 he established himself in business, his partner being Adam Smith, but at the end of two years the firm dissolved partnership and William T. Gay became a partner. In May, 1880, Isenman & Gay were burned out with no insurance and with a loss of about $8,000. They afterward rebuilt and were soon doing a flourishing business. The firm took the title of Gay & Isenman and continued as such until February, 1884, when in March H. Herman and F. Herbst became partners, they doing the blacksmith work and Mr. Isenman the woodwork. They employ from four to six men and manufacture on an average seventy-five wagons per year, sixty plows, thirty grain cradles, twenty harrows, besides a large amount of general repairing, horse-shoeing and other work. The firm are doing a good business, and its members are among the leading business men of Farmington. April, 1872, Mr. Isenman married Miss Catherine Zimmer, daughter of Frederick Zimmer. Mrs. Isenman was born in Germany in 1850, and came to the United States when a child. To her marriage were born five children: Mollie, Samuel, William, Joseph and Frederick. Mr. Isenman was alderman of Farmington two years, is a Republican in politics, and he and wife are members of the Catholic Church.

Francis Janis, an old and well known citizen of Marion Township, was born in Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., October 15, 1831. His father, Andrew Janis, and his mother, formerly Miss Aubuchon, were born in the same county, descendants of the early French settlers of that region. In 1873 the father died at the ripe age of eighty-eight years, while his widow illustrates an unusual case of longevity and health at the advanced age of ninety-seven years, with fair prospects of added years. Young Francis passed his youthful years in the duties of a farmer's son, and in 1854 married Miss Mary Pratte, a native of St. Francois County. (For an account of her parents see the sketch of Jules Pratte.) After his marriage he began mining at Bonne Terre, and so continued for about twenty-five years. After this long period with the earth's interior he turned to the development of its surface, and in 1876 he bought his present fine farm. It embraces 325 acres in Marion Township, six miles from Bonne Terre, and is well improved in all its features, showing the hand of a skillful agriculturist. Mr. and Mrs. Janis have six sons and one daughter. The family are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Janis is an earnest Democrat.

John M. Johnson. In the time of our great Revolution there was an old soldier who amused himself, probably, in carving his tobacco box, as the weed was quite as much of a favorite then as now. Whether he intended the carved box to be an heirloom or not we will not undertake to say, but it fell to his grandson, James J. Johnson, a native of Kentucky soil. This heir married a Virginian lady, Lydia Derham, and moved to Missouri. Here at their adopted home in Washington County, on October 23, 1837, was born to them a son who in time received the heirloom, and this son has now become one of the old and well-known citizens of Marion Township, in the person of the subject of this sketch. Mr. Johnson located near Farmington in December, 1859, and it was not until several years later, in the Centennial year, that he settled on his present estate. The farm is a fine one, and embraces 240 acres. For four years he was a resident of French Village. In his political belief he is a Democrat. On March 1, 1860, he was married to Miss Ellen, a daughter of Dr. James H. and Caroline (Drinn) Grady. She was born in Ste. Genevieve County. Of a family of fourteen children born to them, nine sons and four daughters are living.

Nathan Johnson, of Bonne Terre, comes from the Puritan stock of the old Granite State, where he was born at Hillsboro, September 14, 1838. His parents, also natives of New Hampshire, were Ezra and Eunice (Murdough) Johnson. Mr. Johnson became a Missourian in 1861, and located at Pilot Knob, Iron County. He served until the close of the war as an overseer of the stock department of the Federal Government. The Pilot Knob Mining Company then secured his services as foreman of their mining department, and for eight years he was so employed. The livery business next attracted his attention, and in 1876 he became the pioneer in that line at Bonne Terre, where he has since built up a leading business. He was the first to run a hack line plying between Bonne Terre and Cadet, and has always proved himself able and faithful as a public carrier. Mr. Johnson has been married twice, his first wife being Miss Kate Barry to whom he was married in 1856 in Boston, Mass. After becoming the loving mother of four children she died in 1872. In 1885 he married Mary Graves, who passed away March 5, 1887. One child was born to them. In political matters Mr. Johnson is a Democratic adherent, and while in Iron County served one term as county judge. Three organizations receive his support, the Masonic order, the A. O. U. W. and the Odd Fellows fraternity.

Frederick A. Kain, one of Bonne Terre's well known citizens, is a native of Williamsburg, Ohio, born May 1, 1851. The Kain family is one of the very early ones in Ohio, its first members having settled there in 1789. The father of the subject of this sketch, Daniel Kain, served in the late war in Company K, Twenty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Mrs. Jane C. (Gage) Kain, the mother, was a native of South Carolina. Young Frederick learned the butcher's trade of his father, who was also engaged in the livery business in the Buckeye State. It was in 1882 that Mr. Kain left his native State and engaged in his trade at Vandalia, Ill., with deserved success, carrying on also the hotel business as proprietor of the Fayette House. He came to Bonne Terre in November, 1885, and here he was first employed in charge of the butcher department of the St. Joe Lead Company, until he established his present meat market, in 1888. He is building up a flourishing trade, founded on a long experience, that always inspires confidence. In public duties he holds to the teachings of the Republican party, and fraternizes with the order of K. of P. May 5, 1886, he married Miss Aldania Johnson, a native of Iron County (see the sketch of her parents, Nathan and Kate (Barry) Johnson, elsewhere in this volume). Dora M. is their only child. Mrs. Kain is a member of the Catholic Church.

Dr. Abraham W. Keith, one of Bonne Terre's oldest settlers, was born in St. Francois County, Mo., February 4, 1835. His father, Pleasant G. Keith, a native of Knoxville, Tenn., was of Scotch descent, and at the early date of 1825 came to St. Francois County with a party of traders and settled near Bonne Terre. He first engaged in mining, but afterward entered some land and began rural life. Here he met and married Clarinda, a daughter of John Baker, and native of this county. Her grandfather, Andrew Baker, and his brother were among the settlers of 1806 who received their land grant in St. Francois County from the Spanish Government. There were born to Pleasant G. and Clarinda Keith twelve children, of whom our subject was the third. Here he grew to manhood, and at the age of twenty years began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. Goff, one of the early physicians of the county. In 1856 he entered the Missouri Medical College and graduated two years later. He then began the practice of his profession and after about five years of professional duties he entered the St. Louis Medical College, from which he graduated in March, 1864. He then resumed his practice at Bonne Terre, where he is now, with one exception, the oldest practitioner in the county. In July, 1859, he married Miss Margaret McFarland, who was born near Farmington, Mo., in August, 1839. To them have been born six children, of whom the following four are still living: Frank L., a practicing physician, at Farmington, Mo.; Bettie, who is now Mrs. Samuel Perry; Mattie, now Mrs. Rev. Josephus Stephan, and Marvin L., at home. Dr. and Mrs. Keith are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which the Doctor is an esteemed steward and trustee. He was one of the founders of his local church, and one of the most liberal contributors toward its erection. He is a Democrat, and is a prominent member of the F. & A. M., A. O. U. W., and K. of P. lodges. He is one of the oldest and most substantial citizens of Bonne Terre, and his public spirit has won the esteem of all classes.

John M. Ketchum, whose birth occurred March 25, 1836, in Marshall County, Tenn., is the son of Isaac Ketchum, a native Virginian, who married Miss Susilda Daughton, a native of Tennessee. The parents came to Missouri in 1854, and located in Pendleton Township, St. Francois County. The mother died here and the father in Randolph County, Ill. John M. Ketchum remained in St. Francois County from 1854 to 1865, and in the spring of that year he went to Randolph County, where he remained between three and four years, when he returned to Missouri. In 1870 he purchased eighty acres of land in Liberty Township, and he afterward purchased 130 acres where he now lives. He has erected new buildings where he lives, and has about 100 acres cleared. He raises horses, cattle, sheep and hogs. February 19, 1857, he married Miss Frances Williams. She was born in Pendleton Township, and is the daughter of Gardner and Bedie (Calliam) Williams, natives of Davidson County, Tenn. The former was the son of Lotrick Williams. Mrs. Ketchum's parents came to Missouri in 1832, locating in Pendleton Township, St. Francois County, where the mother died in 1837, the father surviving until February 12, 1873. They were members of the Baptist Church. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ketchum: Mary L., Dora Emma, Elizabeth and John Samuel. Mr. Ketchum affiliates with the Republican party politically, and he and wife are members of the Christian Church. He accumulated all his property by his own efforts.

J. M. Kirkpatrick, editor and proprietor of the Bonne Terre Register, was born in Washington County, Mo., September 28, 1833. His boyhood and youth were passed in acquiring a general knowledge of farm life upon his father's farm, and occasionally during the winter seasons he enjoyed the advantages of such educational instruction as the schools of the neighborhood afforded. The summer months were occupied in agricultural pursuits until about the age of seventeen, and when eighteen years old he commenced in life for himself as a teacher, continuing this occupation with indifferent success for some five years. About 1856 he married, Miss Mary Evans, of Crawford County, becoming his wife. While not actively engaged in other pursuits Mr. Kirkpatrick had learned the use of the hammer and trowel, and for several years he worked as a brick and stone mason during the summer, teaching in the winter time. Finally, in 1874, he embarked in journalism, first at Farmington, Mo., where he continued some seven months. In 1876 he started the St. Francois County Banner, at Bonne Terre (then called St. Joe), continuing its publication about three years, when, for want of money, experience and perseverance, he disposed of his interest in the paper, and its name was changed to the People's Friend. For the next four years Mr. Kirkpatrick was acting postmaster at Bonne Terre. In March, 1885, having saved some money, he purchased the wreck of the local newspaper business, and again became identified with the county's interests as a journalist. This new venture was given the name of the Bonne Terre Register, and its editor at once assumed the same radical grounds on the temperance question that had characterized his former publications. Though a Prohibitionist of the most determined kind, he advocated the passage of the Wood Local Option Bill in preference to submitting a constitutional amendment to a vote of the people at that time, believing that the temperance cause would advance more surely and rapidly by going slowly and retaining every inch of ground gained. During the local option campaign in this county the Register entered actively and unreservedly into the contest, and that its influence was felt is manifested in the intense hatred with which it is regarded by the saloon advocates. If there is one thing more than another in the experience of Mr. Kirkpatrick which warrants and merits a place in any worthy history of this community it is the part taken by him in the local option campaign, a position which he may refer to with just pride. Politically he is a non-partisan, but, while believing in the general principles of Democracy, has a profound contempt for many of the practices of the party. During the slavery agitation he was as pronounced in his opposition to slavery as he has since been to the liquor traffic. Indeed, as Mr. Kirkpatrick himself expresses it, he is intensely radical in his make-up, and when he "goes to war" neither asks nor gives quarter. As might be supposed, his journalistic career has made him some friends, good and true, as well as enemies, bitter and vindictive, but, not desiring popular favor at the expense of principle, he has gone forward with the consciousness of doing what he has deemed right. In the conduct of the Register he has been ably assisted by his daughter, Miss Alice, who has entire charge of the mechanical department of the office, and is also assistant editress of the paper.

Henry Kollmeyer, senior member of the firm of Kollmeyer & Neidert, blacksmiths, carriage and wagon makers, undertakers and manufacturers of farm implements at Farmington, Mo., is a native of Germany, where he was born in 1848, being the son of Henry Kollmeyer, who was born in 1810 and who is a farmer by occupation. The father immigrated to the United States in 1851 and located in St. Francois County, Mo., where he purchased a farm of 200 acres in Liberty Township, where he now resides. His wife is seventy-six years old and is the mother of four children: William, farmer; Henry; John, farmer; and Minnie, wife of Peter Mill. Henry Kollmeyer was three years old when his parents came to the United States. He was educated in the common schools, and attained his majority on the farm. At the age of twenty he commenced learning the blacksmith's trade, and afterward worked at Troy, Ill., two years and at De Soto four months. He served as an apprentice two years and three months with Lang & Bro., and then worked as a journeyman for different parties until 1877 when he established a business at Mine La Motte. At the end of two years he came to Farmington and opened a blacksmith shop at that place. In 1880 he married Miss Mary Neidert, a native of Iron Mountain, Mo., born in 1852. In 1881 Adam Neidert became an equal partner, and from that date until the present the firm has been Kollmeyer & Neidert. They manufacture about sixty wagons, six buggies and fifty plows per annum. They also do general repairing and blacksmithing, etc. They also deal in coffins, and are agents for the Osborn Binder and Mower. The firm of Kollmeyer & Neidert do a large and prosperous business, and are among the solid, substantial business men of Farmington. Mr. Kollmeyer is a Republican in politics, is a member of the I. O. O. F. and also member of the Lutheran Church.

William L. Lambeth. The Lambeth family is one of the oldest of North Carolina families. The great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch came from Lambethshire, England, to North Carolina. The grandson of this man was born near Raleigh, N. C., April 11, 1796, and when of age went to Alabama and Georgia, and became a teacher. He continued handling the birch, and about 1815 removed to the Hoosier Capital, Indianapolis, and became a broker and was elected city surveyor. Here he remained for two years. In 1817 he moved to near Cincinnati, Ohio, where he met his fate in the person of Miss Ruth Brown. She was born near Cincinnati about 1803, and was left an orphan at an early age, but had the good fortune to be adopted into the family of Gen. William Henry Harrison. They settled near Galena, Ill., soon after marriage, and he engaged in surveying, which he continued in connection with school teaching, after he moved to St. Louis, Mo., in 1824. Two years later he came to St. Francois County and located in Big River Township, near Birch's Mines, where he spent some time as a miner and surveyor. About 1827 he located on Big River and purchased a tract of land known as the "Mostiller tract," which is still in possession of the family. August 3, 1835, he was elected county surveyor and filled the position with satisfaction for many years. This happy and esteemed couple braved the hardships of pioneer life, and the faithful wife and mother was the first to go to her long home February 26, 1846, and the father followed her on March 12, 1877. Their son, the subject of this sketch, was born November 8, 1836, in St. Francois County, and was one of the following family: Laura (deceased); Franklin (deceased), Milton, Eliza E., Samuel A., Aaron F., Susan, Amanda E., Henry (deceased). William, Susan and Amanda E. are now together on the old homestead, while the others are deceased, married or living in other parts of the United States. They are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Lambeth is a Union Democrat, as was his father, who was also a Whig in their day. The Lambeth family have long been identified with the history of St. Francois County.

Lang & Bro., of the firm consisting of Reinhard and Thomas Lang, manufacturers of wagons, carriages, plows and lumber, and dealers in agricultural implements, building material and undertaking, are natives of Wurtemberg, Germany, born in 1833 and 1835 respectively. They are the sons of Francis J. and Barbara (Mosbrugger) Lang. The father was born in 1802, and was a government architect. He died in 1835, while still quite a young man. His wife was born in 1809, and in 1839, after the death of Mr. Lang, she married Joseph Karcher. In 1852 they immigrated to the United States and settled in Erie County, N. Y. Mrs. Karcher died in 1885 but her husband is still living. She was the mother of only two children by her first marriage, Reinhard and Thomas. They were educated in the common schools of Germany, and when about thirteen years of age he commenced learning the wagon maker's trade. In 1852 both brothers came to America, settling in Erie County, N. Y., where Reinhard commenced working at the blacksmith's trade and Thomas at carriage manufacturing. Reinhard remained there four years and then began traveling, having, in the space of two years, visited fourteen States. He stopped at Farmington, Mo., in 1858, and he and M. P. Cayce and William T. Gay became partners. From 1860 to 1863 the firm was A. J. Weber and R. Lang, and then R. Lang until 1865. In 1855 Thomas went to Canada and four years later came to Farmington, and he and C. Eggenmann became partners. In 1863 he entered the United States service, being wheel inspector of the United States arsenal at St. Louis. He afterward enlisted in Company F, Forty-seventh Regiment, and was orderly of that company the greater part of the time. He was with Hood in Tennessee, July 1, 1865, the firm of Lang & Bro. was formed and has since been in successful operation. The Lang brothers came to Farmington with very little means to aid them in any undertaking, but brought with them push and energy, together with good business ability, which is essential in a new and undeveloped country. In 1868 they erected their present wagon and carriage shop at a cost of $1,000. In 1873 they built a three-story brick, 30x60 feet, at a cost of $4,000, and two years later they erected a two-story building, 32x60 feet. The second story building was used two years for holding court. In addition to the good dwellings that each have they also own a sawmill and 570 acres of land. They employ from fifteen to twenty-five hands, and it is only just to say that the two brothers have done more in building up and making Farmington what it now is than any other two men in the county. They are strictly honest, and are men of good character. They are Republicans in their political views, and both are members of the Catholic Church. Reinhard is a Mason and a member of the I. O. O. F., and Thomas is a member of the G. A. R. In 1860 Reinhard married Miss Louise F. Lorenz, a native of Mecklenberg, Germany, born in 1833, and to them were born four children: Emelia, Lizzie, William R. and Fannie. Placide de Lassus, of De Lassus, Mo., was born in New Orleans, La., June 28, 1839, and is the son of August and Mary (Jeanne Blanque) de Lassus, and grandson of Charles de Hault de Lassus, who was born in France, in April, 1764. He came to the United States in 1795 as commandant at New Madrid, and was appointed lieutenant-governor by the King of Spain on August 29, 1799. He was the last governor, and made the transfer of Upper Louisiana March 9, 1804. Amongst the many grants of land Charles de Hault de Lassus received a square league from the Spanish Government. This tract was located in St. Francois County, Mo., the village of De Lassus being on the original tract, and named in his honor. He died in New Orleans in 1842, and received his title of nobility from his ancestors, who were of the old nobility of France of the town of Bouchaine, Hainault, old French Flanders, of which they were hereditary mayors. August de Lassus was educated in St. Louis, and also attended a Catholic college at New Orleans, graduating in New Orleans. He represented Louisiana in the State Legislature one term, and resided in New Orleans the principal part of his life although he spent considerable time in St. Louis and Paris, France. He came to De Lassus in 1872, and from that time until his death, which occurred January 15, 1888, he resided with his son, Placide. His wife, Mary Jeanne Blanque, was born in New Orleans in 1815, and has lived in Paris since 1849. Their family consisted of six children, three now living: Charles is in New Orleans, and Placide is in De Lassus. Placide de Lassus went to France with his mother in 1849, and was educated in that country. In 1860 he returned to this country, and in 1861 enlisted in Col. Watson's battery, Confederate States Army, and was in service three years. He was in the battle of Belmont, New Orleans, and the Red River expedition. In 1866 he went to St. Louis, and two years later he moved to St. Francois County and located at De Lassus. In 1867 he married Miss Mary Clark, daughter of Henry L. Clark, of St. Louis, and a native of Ste. Genevieve, Mo., born in 1846. Mr. de Lassus is a fine gentleman and an excellent citizen. He has yet in his possession a large part of the original Spanish grant. He is a staunch Democrat in his political views, and his wife and himself are members of the Catholic Church.

Henry Lawrence, merchant of Doe Run, was born in Brunswick, Germany, September 3, 1832, and is the son of Henry and Josephine (Jergens) Lawrence. The father was a native of Germany, born in 1805, immigrated to America in 1844 and died one year later. Mrs. Lawrence died in 1845 at the age of thirty-nine. She was the mother of eight children. Henry Lawrence, Jr., immigrated to the United States with his parents, and at the end of nine months moved with them from New Orleans to Cape Girardeau, in the vicinity of Jackson. After the death of his father he attended school a short time and then, with the rest of the family, moved to Mine La Motte, where he formed the acquaintance of Mr. John Whitmore, with whom he went to Ste. Genevieve, where, in the spring of 1851, he engaged as salesman in a mercantile establishment with Messrs. F. C. Rozier & Co., a business in which he afterward became a partner, and in which engagement he remained for sixteen years. He and his brother afterward bought the steam flour mills at Pun Jaub, now Lawrenceeton. He remained in this business, milling and merchandising, for twenty years, when, in September, 1887, he moved to Doe Run and again engaged in merchandising for the firm known as Jokerst & Lawrence, a firm composed of F. L. Jokerst and Jos. A. Lawrence. Mr. Lawrence has had under erection for the firm a storehouse 30x70 feet. They are now permanently settled in business. He was married to Miss Caroline Siebert, of Ste. Genevieve, November 20, 1855, and to them were born thirteen children, all living: Henry, Joseph Augustus, Amelia (wife of Henry Schmidt), Louisa, (wife of Henry Douglas), Cora, Julia, George, William, Felix, Alpha, Leo, Rosa and Emma. Mr. Lawrence and family are members of the Catholic Church, and he is a Democrat politically.

Thomas H. G. Lester. In the days of our great Revolution there lived in Massachusetts a couple who were of the old Puritan stock. They moved to St. John's, New Brunswick, about this time, and there made their home. They here had a son born to them March 5, 1836, who has grown to be the respected man whose name heads this sketch. James G. and Martha B. (Bullock) Lester lived until the years 1859, and 1865, respectively, the former reaching the age of sixty-five and the latter that of sixty. The father had become a prominent business man of St. John's. Young Lester's varied career began with a drug clerkship in his fourteenth year. Two years later he entered the Andersonian University at Glasgow, Scotland, and for two years pursued the study of pharmacy. On leaving school he was employed by the Glasgow Apothecaries Co. for a similar period, after which he embarked in the trade for himself at Kirkpatrick, Durham. Another two years passed and he became general manager for a wholesale drug house at Liverpool, England. His next venture was in 1858, when he became surgeon of the passenger vessel, "Boadicea," plying between Liverpool and St. John's. On his return trip he stopped at Prince Edward's Island and entered the employ of Hull & Myrick's outfitting establishment for American fishermen. Two years later he went to Boston, Mass., where, on July 17, 1860, he married Miss Bethiah F., a daughter of Elisha D. and Susanna (Kelly) Hyder, natives of Massachusetts. She was born at Chatham, Mass., July 17, 1840. Her father was a farmer, and lived to the advanced age of eighty-two years. He died in 1863, and his wife in 1848, at the age of fifty-four. The next year after marriage Mr. Lester enlisted in Company I, Fifty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, as hospital steward, and was on detached service before Petersburg, Va., as recorder of the Second Division, Ninth Army Corps Hospital, Army of the Potomac. He was honorably discharged at Boston in 1865. He and his wife then moved to St. Louis, Mo., and two years later came to St. Francois County and turned his attention to farming, although he also served in the schoolroom several years. He moved to his present farm in 1886. It is a fine one embracing 200 acres. He also owns eighty acres in Marion Township. Mr. and Mrs. Lester have had born to them eleven children: Carrie B. (the deceased wife of W. E. Birch), Frank H., Leonise W., Eda May, Ida Maud, Sarah B., Susan A., Rollo B., Izie E., Bethiah F., Thomas H. G. Mr. Lester is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, and in political affairs is a Republican. The family are well known and esteemed by all who know them.

Gen. James R. McCormick, M. D., ex-member of Congress, and druggist at Farmington, Mo., is a native of Washington County, Mo., where he was born August 1, 1824, being the son of Joseph and Jane (Robinson) McCormick. The father was born in North Carolina in 1780, and was of Scotch-Irish descent. His father, Andrew McCormick, was also of Scotch-Irish origin, and came to America previous to the Revolutionary War. He was in that war under Gen. Green. Joseph was reared on a farm in Lincoln County, N. C., and in 1804 he came to Washington County, Mo., and selected a site for permanent settlement, returned to his birthplace, and in 1807 he, with his mother and brothers and sisters, returned to Missouri, where he afterward made his permanent home. He was the owner of over 400 acres, was justice of the peace for several years, and died in 1840. His wife was a native of Ireland and came to America in early womanhood. Her father was a soldier in the British army for years. She died in 1843. Of their family of five sons and one daughter Dr. James R. McCormick was the third child. He received a rudimentary education in the common schools at Lexington, and under the private instruction of Prof. John Taylor, who made his home with the Doctor's father one year. At the age of twenty he began the study of his chosen profession in Transylvania University, Kentucky, and in 1849 he graduated from the Memphis (Tennessee) Medical College as an M. D. In 1849 the Doctor settled in Wayne County, Mo., and after practicing there eighteen months moved to Perry County, Mo., in York neighborhood, and was quite successful at this point. In 1852 he married Miss B. N. Nance, who was born in Missouri in 1833, and who bore him two children, only one now living: Dr. Emmet C., a physician and surgeon of Farmington, Mo. The Doctor lost his wife in 1863, and in 1866 he married Miss Susan E. Garner, a native of Perry County, Mo. One child was the result of this union, named James E. The Doctor remained in Perry County until the breaking out of the late war, when he became surgeon of the Sixth Infantry of Missouri, six months men. At the end of that time he was appointed by the Governor brigadier general of the Enrolled Militia for twenty-two counties in Southeast Missouri. This brigade consisted of seven regiments of Enrolled Militia, one of which consisted of three battalions of 400 men each, and was kept in continuous service during the war. This position he retained until the close of the war. He then located at Arcadia and resumed his practice and also established a drug store. In 1861 the Doctor was elected to the constitutional convention of Missouri, and in 1862 he was elected to the State Senate from Cape Girardeau District, serving one session. After the first session he resigned, owing to his duties in the army. In 1866 he was elected as a member of the State Senate, but the following year he resigned, and in the fall of the same year was elected to the United States Congress to fill a vacancy. He was elected three terms, and served in all six years. In 1874 Dr. McCormick became a resident of Farmington, Mo. He and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he has been ruling elder for ten years. He is a member of the Masonic order, and politically is a Democrat.

Henry C. McGahan is one of the oldest settlers of St. Francois County, in which he was born on February 6, 1831. George McGahan, his father, was a native of Pennsylvania, where his own parents died when George was but a child, and he was adopted by a family in Pennsylvania, who moved to Virginia soon afterward. He came to Missouri at an early day, served as orderly sergeant in 1812, and was married in 1818 to Miss Rachel Doggett, who had come from Tennessee with her parents several years previous. His death occurred in St. Francois County in 1848. Henry C. was about eighteen at this time, and having some time previously lost his mother he now began life for himself. He has clung to his apprenticeship as a farmer so tenaciously that, with the exception of one year spent in mining operations, he has been engaged in agriculture ever since and with eminent success. His fine farm, a mile and a quarter from Bonne Terre, embraces 260 acres, and includes the old homestead on which Mr. McGahan was born and which his father purchased about the year 1807. To enlarge the sphere of his operations Mr. McGahan, in 1881, established the milling firm of McGahan & Fite at Bonne Terre. He is a Republican, and has served as clerk of the school board since 1869. He is also interested as a member in the A. O. U. W. organization. His residence, a pleasant home, is situated in Bonne Terre. He was married December 20, 1855, to Miss Helen, the daughter of Jacob and Rutha (Turley) Fite. She is a native of Washington County, born August 23, 1833. The following children have blessed their union: Thomas W., George W., Irvin E. (deceased), Asa V., Ida B. and Effie K. Mr. and Mrs. McGahan are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Judge Allen C. McHenry. Among those who came to Missouri in 1817 was Archibald McHenry, a native of North Carolina, where he had married Miss Jane Stephens. After their arrival in Missouri Mrs. McHenry died, and Sarah Campbell, a native of South Carolina, became his wife. She had come to Missouri about 1820. Their son, the subject of this sketch was born in Perry Township, St. Francois County, February 5, 1829, and was a boy of about twelve years when his father passed away in 1842 at the ripe age of seventy-seven years. Young McHenry lived with his mother until he reached the age of twenty-one, and his first extensive venture in the world was an overland journey to California in 1850. He remained there about four years engaged in mining, and in 1854 returned to his native place and purchased the farm on which he now resides. The estate embraces 175 acres. On May 1, 1855, Mr. McHenry was married to Miss Margaret Smith, a native of Robinson County, Tenn., but since her childhood a resident of Missouri. The union has resulted in nine children, two of whom are deceased. For the past twelve years he has served the county as county judge, and has also been a judge of the probate court. His opinions on political affairs generally find expression in the tenets of the Democracy. The judge is a Mason. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Patrick McMahon, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, was born March 23, 1822, and is the son of Patrick and Ann (McDermott) McMahon, who were natives of County Tyrone, Ireland. The father was overseer on the roads for over twenty years, and was also engaged in agricultural pursuits. Patrick, Jr., received a portion of his education in his native country, and when a boy came to America with his uncle and grandmother. They were nine weeks and three days making the voyage, and after reaching New Orleans they sailed up the Mississippi to St. Louis. They located in Monroe County, Ill., and here Patrick walked backward and forward to St. Louis and herded cows where Morgan Street now is. He resided in Monroe County for eighteen years, after which he came to Missouri, and going to Irondele began making pig-iron in the furnace. He had charge of the firm belonging to the furnace company at Irondele for six years, and then came to St. Francois County and rented land for five years. He then bought 120 acres of land where he now resides in 1881. This was right in the woods, and he has about forty-five or fifty acres cleared. April 13, 1854, he married Miss Catherine Shields, a native of County Wexford, Ireland. They have nine children living: Patrick, Mary (wife of S. B. Mitchell), Maggie, Annie, Kate, William, Charley, James and Agnes. Mr. McMahon is a Democrat in his political views, and he and wife are members of the Catholic Church.

Hon. George W. Mahn, of Hazel Run, a prominent citizen of this region, was born in New York City, February 22, 1842. His parents, Peter and Williamina (Schnabel) Mahn, are natives of Frankfort-on-the-Main, in Germany, whence the father came in 1832 to the city of his son's birth, where he was engaged in business until he immigrated west. It was in 1847 that he came to Missouri and located at St. Louis, engaging in the mercantile trade, during which time his son attended the public schools of the city. Subsequently he moved to Williamsport, Ind., and there was engaged in general merchandising and milling until his return to Missouri, in 1865, when he located at De Soto, and erected the first flour mills in that city, being among the early settlers of that place. His advent in St. Francois County was in 1867, his settlement occurring at Hazel Run, where they established a general store and flour mills, and traded in grain and feed, also being interested in farming and stock raising. In 1876 they rebuilt the "Old Hazel Run Mills," making it one of the best flour mills in the county, and operated the same until 1883, when it was destroyed by fire. George W. has been associated for many years in business enterprises with his father, and is the active member of the firm of P. Mahn & Son. While he (George W.) was attending the Warren Academy, at Williamsport, Ind., in 1861, he left school and enlisted in Company B, Tenth Indiana Regiment, and served his time of enlistment until being honorably discharged. After his return home he went west and was for nearly a year traveling in the West and Northwest, part of which time he was with an exploration expedition. In 1867 he established his present line of general merchandise at Hazel Run, and for many years served as postmaster. Mr. Mahn is a very prominent Democrat in political circles. In 1878 he served in the Thirtieth General Assembly for one term. During his service he was a member of the committee on internal improvements, mines and mining, manufactures, inspection of school of mines, and schedule and bonds. This was the assembly, too, which elected United States Senators Shields and Vest, and revised the statutes. Mr. Mahn was among the first to organize Democratic clubs in Southeast Missouri, after the war, and he further shows his fraternal inclinations in membership in the G. A. R. and Masonic orders. In 1879 he was united in marriage to Miss Hannah Frech, a native of Jefferson County, Mo. They have had five children, of whom two sons and two daughters are living.

Charles T. Manter, another resident of Iron Township, was born at Elyria, Lorain Co., Ohio, in 1831, and is the son of Dr. Nathan H. and Susan (Miles) Manter. The father was a noted surgeon and physician in Northern Ohio; was one of the pioneers of Elyria, at which place he resided and practiced his profession for forty years. C. T. Manter was one of a family of four children—two sons and two daughters. He was educated in the Elyria High School, and at the age of twenty entered the profession of civil engineering. In 1854 he came to Missouri and engaged as an engineer on the Iron Mountain Railroad, with which work he was connected until the road was completed in 1857. He was then appointed by the Governor to fill a two years' vacancy in the office of surveyor of Washington County. In December, 1859, he started for Texas with a view of engaging on one of the railroads then projected, but was persuaded by a relative residing at New Orleans to abandon that project and engage in the drug business in that city. After getting well established in business he returned to Missouri and was, on the 8th of January, 1861, united in marriage to Mary, fourth daughter of the Hon. John Evens, of Washington County. He continued in the drug business until after New Orleans was captured by the Union forces, when he disposed of the same, and after a year spent in service under the military government as judge of the Fifth Justice Court, Parish of Jefferson, Rt. Bank, and also as secretary and treasurer of said parish, he returned to his home in Ohio, via Havana and New York, the only safe route at that time. After a few months spent in making preliminary surveys for railroads in Pennsylvania he proceeded to Missouri, and in 1863 purchased the site and founded the town of Bismarck, at which place he has since resided, engaged in general merchandising, building up the interests of his town and underwriting for several insurance companies. He was appointed postmaster at Bismarck in 1872, which office he held to 1886. Mr. Manter's family of three sons and three daughters, viz: Mattie, Frank, Charles, Alice, John and Kate, are living examples of the beneficence of homeopathy. Mr. Manter is a staunch Republican in his political views.

Thomas B. Marks, merchant of Farmington and member of the firm of Dalton & Marks, was born in St. Francois County, Mo., in 1837, and is the son of George and Mary (McFarland) Marks. The father was a native of Nelson County, Ky., where he grew to manhood. About 1811 he started for Missouri on horseback, and at last came to St. Francois County, where he bought what was then called a "tomahawk" right to land in Liberty Township. These rights were acquired by a man cutting the initials of his name on a tree with a hatchet. He remained in this county and worked on his place until the fall of 1813, when he went back to Kentucky. He did not stay long, but returned, and in the summer following he worked on his pre-emption and also worked at the sawmill business, making enough money at the same to enable him to enter forty acres more of land. In the spring of 1814 he again returned to Kentucky, but returned the same year, bringing with him his mother. He followed out his plan of working on his place in the summer and in the mill in the winter three years. The first year he lived on his claim he put up a round pole cabin, and after his mother's arrival they moved into the same. A year or two after this he married Miss Mary McFarland, a native of Buncombe County, N. C., and the daughter of Reuben and Martha McFarland, who moved from North Carolina to Tennessee and came from there to Missouri in 1814, locating in Liberty Township, St. Francois County, where they passed the remainder of their days. Mr. McFarland was a remarkable man. He was a natural mechanic, being a good blacksmith, gunsmith, carpenter, cabinet maker, etc., and used tools of his own making. He was also a man who made friends of every one with whom he came in contact. He made a clock that kept perfect time, and the violins of his making were equal to any purchased from dealers. Within two or three years after his marriage Mr. Marks put up a substantial log house, and hewed it down from the outside. This house is still standing on the farm of his son, Jesse Marks. In 1840 he erected another large log house, a story and a half high, 20x36, and with a large old fashioned brick chimney at each end, which is still standing on the old homestead. He lived in this house until his death which occurred October, 1865. His record was certainly a remarkable one as he was obliged to start out in life with no means, and when he set foot in Missouri all he possessed was the animal that had carried him thither. His father was unable to assist him, as he had gone the security of parties to the amount of $9,000, which he had to pay. While Mr. Marks received no assistance from his father he continued to prosper and soon became the owner of an extensive tract of land. Although game was plentiful he did very little hunting, except sometimes when he would go out before breakfast and kill a deer. He was an old line Whig in his political proclivities and afterward a Republican. His wife was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and her death occurred in 1870. They were kind and hospitable people. Both are buried on the old home farm. Thomas B. Marks is the seventh of a family of eight children. He attained his growth on the farm, followed agricultural pursuits until 1865, when he and his brother-in-law, Thomas T. Dalton, began merchandising in Farmington, and have continued the same up to the present, being among the oldest merchants in the city. In October, 1872, Mr. Marks married Miss Catherine A. Evans, daughter of David Evans. Mrs. Marks was born in St. Francois County in 1839, and to her marriage was born one child, Katie. Mr. Marks, like his father, is a Republican in his political views and an honest, upright citizen.

Searing Marsh, real estate agent, and another successful farmer of St. Francois County, was born in Miamisburg, Ohio, in 1834, and is the son of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Gebhart) Marsh, who were the parents of nine children—three sons and six daughters—five of whom are now living. Searing Marsh was educated at Delaware, Ohio, and attended the Ohio Wesleyan University two years. After selling goods in Dayton, Ohio, for the same length of time he sold out and engaged with his father in the saw and grist-mill business, which they continued three years. He then followed agricultural pursuits in Ohio for two years, after which he moved to Northeast Missouri in 1857, and purchased 240 acres of land on which he farmed for five years. He again sold out, went to Illinois, and here taught school in the winter and farmed in the summer for two years. In 1855 he married Miss Angeline Smith, of Bellefontaine, Ohio, and to this marriage were born three children, all daughters and all educated in St. Louis. In 1863 Mr. Marsh enlisted in the army as sutler, and was with the Fifty-fourth, Sixty-second and One Hundred and Sixth Illinois Infantry. After cessation of hostilities he moved to Champaign County, Ill., and was here engaged in tilling the soil for three years. He then immigrated to Emporia, Kas., was engaged in buying and selling Texas cattle, and after three years' experience in this kind of business abandoned the same and came to St. Louis, Mo. He was on the police force at this place, and was a brave and successful officer. He then resigned and engaged in the real estate business in Southeast Missouri, at which he was very successful. He located one mile from Bismarck in 1884, and here owns a good farm. He raises considerable stock, but still makes a specialty of selling farms. Mr. Marsh is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church and a firm believer in its doctrine.

Elder Robert Carter Martin, farmer of St. Francois County, was born in Albemarle County, Va., December 19, 1834, being the son of William and Nancy W. (Davis) Martin. The father was born in Albemarle County, Va., in 1802, and was a farmer by occupation. He moved to Mississippi in 1835, and died there the same year while still a comparatively young man. His wife was a native of the same State and county as her husband, and was born in 1796. After the death of her husband she married Christopher Grider, in Reynolds County, Mo. They moved to Washington County (now St. Francois County), Mo., in 1845, and here Mr. Grider died in 1853. His widow then moved to Madison County and resided there until 1885, when she came to St. Francois County with her son, Robert Carter, and here died in 1886. She was the mother of eight children, all by her first husband. Robert Carter Martin was the youngest member of this family. He was two years old when his mother came to Missouri, and he received his education in the common schools. He grew to manhood on the farm, and at the age of eighteen engaged in agricultural pursuits on his own responsibility. In August, 1855, he married Miss Mary O'Bannon, a native of Madison County, Mo., born in 1838, and the daughter of Jefferson and Margaret (McDowell) O'Bannon. The fruits of this union were eight children: Amanda E. (deceased), John D., William J., Robert C., George W., Mary C., Lucy J. and Laura A. Mr. Martin located in Madison County in 1855 or 1856, and became the owner of 240 acres of land in Polk Township, nine miles west of Fredericktown. Mr. Martin resided on this farm until 1885, when he moved to St. Francois County, Mo., but still owns his old place in Madison County. In 1861 he was ordained as a United Baptist minister, and had charge of a number of churches, one in Bethel, Bethany, Little Vine Church, Liberty Church, in Iron County, and Colony, Pendleton, New Hope and Texas in St. Francois County. He also had charge of New Tennessee Church in Ste. Genevieve County, and had charge of as many as four churches at a time. Since coming to St. Francois he has had charge of but one church, Colony Church, as the ill health of his wife and the feebleness of his aged mother obliged him to give up a portion of his ministerial duties. Elder Martin is a Democrat in his political views, and his wife is a member of the Baptist Church.

Mrs. Lucinda A. Matkin was born in St. Francois County, Mo., in 1843. She is the daughter of Henry L. and Elizabeth (Grider) Tullock. Henry Tullock was born in North Carolina in 1799, and was a tiller of the soil. He came to St. Francois County at the age of fifteen, and was among the earliest settlers of that part of the State. He was twice married, his first wife being Miss Mary Matkin. After her death he married Miss Elizabeth Grider, who bore him nine children, of whom the following are now living: Anna, Thomas T., Mary and Lucinda A. (widow of Luther S. Matkin). Luther S. Matkin was born in St. Francois County, December 17, 1832, and was a farmer by occupation. He made a trip to California when quite young, and after returning chose for his companion in life Miss Lucinda A. Tullock. They were married February 9, 1864, and Mr. Matkin then engaged in agricultural pursuits. Of the six children born to this union all are now living: Lizzie E. (wife of Joel Ritter), Maude M., Annie, Hicks, Henry and Toleman. Luther Matkin died May 15, 1881, leaving his widow to rear the family, which at that time was quite young. Mrs. Matkin owns a farm of 204 acres, one mile and a half northwest of Doe Run Lead Mines, and is a worthy member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

John W. Merryman, a native of Wayne County, Tenn., and the son of Thomas B. and Jane (Lourance) Merryman, was born May 10, 1834. His father was a native of South Carolina, and his mother a native of Bedford County, Tenn. In 1856 the family moved by team to Missouri, and located in Pendleton Township, St. Francois County. There Mrs. Merryman died in 1857. Mr. Merryman began working at Iron Mountain, and after working there for some years was taken ill, and died in December, 1864. John W. Merryman received his schooling in Tennessee, and then learned the blacksmith's trade from his father, which occupation, together with farming, he followed after coming to St. Francois County. He worked at the Iron Mountains for fourteen or fifteen years, when, in 1866, he bought a farm of 176 acres in Pendleton Township. He resided on this farm from 1873 until 1887. While getting out rocks for the culverts on the old plank road, traces of lead were discovered on his farm. This ore, which was disseminated in the rock, was not counted worth handling, but after the St. Joe Mine made such a success of similar rock, by drilling and prospecting, Mr. Merryman found that on his farm was a splendid deposit. He sold his farm and received another farm and $10,000 cash. Mr. Taylor, who prospected for him, received $40,000 for his share, as he purchased the property of Mr. Merryman and sold it to the St. Joe Company for $60,000. In 1858 Mr. Merryman married Catherine Rogers, a native of St. Francois County, and the daughter of William Rogers. She died in 1867. To them were born five children; only one, Thomas Jefferson, is now living. Mr. Merryman was married to his second wife in 1870. Her maiden name was Susan A. Rennicks, a native of Pendleton Township, St. Francois County, and the daughter of Lewis and Mary Ann (Wilburn) Rennicks, natives of Indiana and St. Francois County, Mo., respectively. Mr. Rennicks is deceased, but Mrs. Rennicks is still living, and is a resident of Pendleton Township, now the wife of Rev. W. D. Hamilton. To Mr. and Mrs. Merryman were born eight children: James Franklin, Mary Jane, Melissa Frances, Amanda Ida, Martha Ann, LeRoy and William Tolman and Jesse Parkus (twins). Mr. Merryman has a fine farm of 300 acres, 150 of which are cleared. He is a Democrat, politically.

George A. Miller, farmer of St. Francois County, Mo., and son of Daniel and Anna Miller, was born in Farmington, Mo., in 1842. The father was born in Germany in 1797, and was a tailor by occupation. He immigrated to America in 1834, settling in Ste. Genevieve, Mo., where he remained until 1838, and then moved to Farmington, Mo. He purchased 200 acres of land two and a half miles southeast of the county seat, located there and there died in 1872. He was a good man, an industrious citizen, and the first German to settle in St. Francois County. His wife was born in Germany and died in 1868. The individual members of this firm are William Milne and James Gordon. They give employment to from twenty-five to fifty men, and the products of the quarry find a market all over the Central, Western and Southern States. William Milne, of this firm, was born in Parkville, Aberdeenshire, Scotland, January 25, 1846, and is the son of Charles and Jeanette (Dawson) Milne, who are yet living in the old country. William Milne was reared to farm life, and afterward engaged in stone cutting, which occupation he followed throughout the quarries of his native country, after serving an apprenticeship of five years. He sailed for America in April, 1870, landing at New York, but a month later came on to Dayton, Ohio, where he remained about one year engaged at his trade. He then came to Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., from there to Graniteville, where he obtained employment in the quarries. He remained there until 1876, when he came to Syenite, and in connection with James Gordon, who is now a resident of St. Louis, engaged in managing the business of the firm. Mr. Milne is manager of the business at the quarries and this firm is having a flourishing trade. They furnished the material for the John R. Lionberger building, the entrance and platform, etc., for Charles H. Peck, of Vandeventer Place, etc., and also material for the government building at Rock Island, Ill., and the Keokuk postoffice. Frank Antoine Mullermann (deceased), whose death occurred May 16, 1883, and who was among the prominent citizens of Liberty Township, was born in Prussia, November 13, 1823. His parents, Frank Antoine and Mary (Schulter) Mullermann, were natives of Prussia, where they passed their entire lives. Frank Antoine, Jr., was reared to farm life, and arriving at a suitable age he went into the Prussian army and served out the term required. He was married November 18, 1841, to Miss Catherine Hopf, also a native of Prussia, and the daughter of Bernard and Catherine (Dole) Hopf. Mr. Hopf was a dyer and print colorer by trade. To this union were born ten children, three of whom are deceased, and are named as follows: Bernard, Francis and Peter. The living ones are Mary, wife of Jasper Wiegeller; Elizabeth, wife of Anton Schulte; Herman, married to Martha Beeve; Frank, married to Mary Hunold; Mena, wife of John Hogan; John, married to Anna Sauer; and Anton who married Kate Hunold. In July, 1852, Mr. Mullermann and family took passage on the sail ship "Kahere," bound for New Orleans, which port they reached after a stormy voyage of six weeks, during which time the boat was nearly wrecked, lying on its side nearly a whole day. After landing at New Orleans they remained there about a week, and then took passage on a vessel bound up the Mississippi River. They reached Missoauri, located in Bollinger County, where Mrs. Mullermann had relatives living, and remained there three months. They then went to Mine La Motte, Madison County, where Mr. Mullermann obtained employment in the mines. In 1864, leaving his family, Mr. Mullermann went out to California by water and worked at mining on the coast for two years, when he returned to La Motte. About six years later Mr. Mullermann purchased 280 acres of the land now owned by the family, and here he went to work with his accustomed vigor, and before his death had accumulated 715 acres. He was a member of the Catholic Church, as is his family; was a Republican in politics, and was a member of the Missouri militia during the late war, with the rank of second lieutenant of one of the companies. Franklin Murphy, a resident of De Lassus, and one of St. Francois County's enterprising citizens, was born in Farmington, Mo., October 16, 1819, and is the son of William and Rhoda (George) Murphy, and grandson of David Murphy, who came to Missouri in 1801, and entered 340 acres in St. Francois County, the city of Farmington being situated on a portion of the original tract. J. H. Waide now resides in the old residence, just north of the town. David Murphy donated the town property for the county seat. When he first came to Missouri there were only a few white men in what is now St. Francois County. He died in 1844. His son, William, came to Missouri with his father in 1801, and here grew to manhood. He was also married here in 1818, and located near where Lang & Bro.'s saw mill is now situated. He sold out in 1833, and moved to near Bonne Terre, where he bought a farm, now owned by Jacob B. Murphy. He died in 1847. His wife was born in East Tennessee in 1800, and died in 1877. She was the mother of seven children, Franklin Murphy being the eldest and the first white child born in the town of Farmington. He was educated in the common schools, grew to manhood on the farm, and November 21, 1841, he married Miss Mary Ann Alley, who was born in St. Francois County, Mo., in 1823, and who was the daughter of John Alley, who was one of the very first men to locate in the county. His father settled near Big River Mills in 1794. To Mr. and Mrs. Murphy were born eight children: Amanda J., Sarah (wife of Zachariah Cole), Rhoda (wife of Felix Janis), Augusta (wife of William Stephenson), Thomas H. B., Callie, Genevieve, Jessie and Katie. In 1849 Mr. Murphy went overland to California, it taking him six months to make the trip. After mining there three years he returned to Missouri via the isthmus. In 1865 he was appointed sheriff and collector of St. Francois County, was elected in 1868 and re-elected in 1868, and in 1870 was elected to the position of county and circuit clerk, also county recorder, and held the position for four years. He was justice of the peace about fifteen years. In 1880 Mr. Murphy came to De Lassus, where he has since resided. Politically a Democrat, he cast his first presidential vote for Martin Van Buren. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and he and Mrs. Murphy affiliate with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Hon. Peter W. Murphy, ex-county judge, and one of the well-known pioneers of St. Francois County, was born the day preceding Christmas in 1820 in Culpeper County, Va. His ancestry extends through many generations in "The Old Dominion," the paternal line coming from Ireland and the mother's forefathers from Scotland. Peter and Ann (Thompson) Murphy, the parents, spent their lives in Virginia, engaged in rural life, while the father was also occupied as a merchant. Young Murphy received a common school education, and until his majority was occupied at home. He then launched out as a teacher, and continued to wield the birch for two years in his native State. In his twenty-fourth year he sought Missouri as a new field for his labors, and for the next ten years was a Washington County pedagogue. The construction of the Iron Mountain Railway about this time led him to engage in it as a contractor. He and his associates—V. B. Misphy and Jacob Boos, his father-in-law, that early pioneer who made the first pig of lead in Washington County—constructed one mile of the above mentioned road. After about four years spent as a contractor, Mr. Murphy engaged in agricultural pursuits, and remained on his farm for the five following years. He was elected assessor of St. Francois County, and served several times by re-election. In 1870, after changing his residence to St. Francois County, he was elected to represent that county, which he did do with success in the twenty-sixth session of the General Assembly. Since the expiration of his term he has been engaged at his home in agriculture, and for some time as a merchant. His various enterprises have proved eminently successful, and enable him now to spend his later years in quiet and comfort. In November, 1884, the honor of judgeship of the county court was added to his successful years, and he filled the position with distinction for two years. He is a hearty supporter of Democratic principles, and is esteemed by all classes and parties. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity. Judge Murphy's estate, situated three miles from Bonne Terre, is a noted historical homestead, it being once the homestead of the notorious bandit Hilderbrand. The Judge himself is one of the few landmarks of the county's early history, and few are more widely known in this region. The county was a wilderness in 1842, when he came, with but one store between Ste. Genevieve and Potosi. The Judge was married August 25, 1845, to Miss Sarah Boos, who was born in 1824 in Washington County. Her parents, Jacob and Jane (Jarvis) Boos, were natives of Maryland and Kentucky, respectively, and came to Missouri at an early date. Mr. Boos settled in St. Louis, and owned eighty acres including the site of the courthouse. Little did he dream that this would be the heart of a great city, and held it so cheaply that he soon traded it for a horse. Judge and Mrs. Murphy have but three of their six children living, John W., Jacob B. and Alice D. The family worship at the Baptist Church.

Zebulun Murphy, son of Richard and Sarah Murphy, was born one-half mile north of Farmington, October 16, 1822. He was reared in St. Francois County and attended the schools of Farmington. He was county surveyor from 1850 off and on up to 1880, and made his home with his parents until 1846, when he removed to where he now resides in Section 19, Township 36, Range 6, and there he has remained ever since. He has surveyed in Washington, Ste. Genevieve, Madison, Jefferson, Iron and Wayne Counties as well as in St. Francois County. He now owns about 160 acres of land and has made all the improvements and has cleared about 40 acres. He was married at Farmington, August 22, 1846, to Miss Amanda J. Kinslow, a native of Barren County, Ky. Her parents, Ezekiel and Elizabeth (Anderson) Kinslow, were born and reared in Barren County, Ky., and removed to Missouri about 1830, locating in Farmington, where the father followed the occupation of a gunsmith until his death, which occurred about 1880. His wife died three years later. They were members of the Presbyterian Church, and he was a Democrat politically. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy reared three children, one of whom, Artemissa, died July 20, 1887. She was the wife of W.

W. O'Neal, of St. John, Stafford County, Kas. Those living are Bird and Lucinda, wife of John A. Smith, who reside in St. Francois County, Mo. Mr. Murphy is a member of the Masonic lodge at Farmington, and is a Democrat in politics.

William C. Newby. In the State of North Carolina, were born Mary E. Pigg and Whaley Newby, who afterward married and moved to Tennessee, where on the 1st day of September, 1826, was born to them a son, whose name heads this sketch. Young Newby had reached the age of twenty-two years, when he began life for himself, and turned his attention to agriculture, which he has always followed with success. In 1848 he located in St. Francois County, Mo., and in 1856 he purchased his present farm. It embraces 143 acres in Marion Township, and is devoted especially to grain and stock. In 1848 Mr. Newby was married to Susan J. Pigg, and of the eight children born to them, four are now living and survive the mother, who died in August, 1878. Miss Mary E. Cunningham became his wife March 20, 1884. She is a native of Ste. Genevieve County, Mo. They have three children, two of whom are now living. Mr. Newby is a Methodist, while his wife holds the faith of the Baptist Church. He is a member of one fraternity, the Masonic. His political opinions are Democratic.

William H. Norwine, the enterprising merchant at Big River Mills, was born in St. Francois County, November 19, 1844. His parents, Conrad and Elender (Christopher) Norwine, were natives of the same county, their ancestors being among the first settlers of this region, and of Kentucky stock. Mr. Norwine received his training in mercantile life in St. Louis, where he went at the age of eighteen, and served as clerk in a grocery store. He returned to his old home in 1864, and in April of the following year he opened his present line of general merchandise at Big River Mills. His growing trade has since occupied his attention, and indicates an experienced hand at the helm. For the last twenty years Mr. Norwine has also served as postmaster. He is a hearty supporter of Democratic principles, and is a member of St. Francois Lodge No. 58, of the A. O. U. W. Miss Mattie E., the daughter of Reuben McFarland, one of the earliest pioneers of St. Francois County, became his wife November 19, 1867. Mrs. Norwine was born in the latter county in 1847, and lost her mother when a mere infant. Their children are Wendell M., Clarence L., Mabel E., Grace L. and William H., Jr. Mrs. Norwine is an esteemed member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Dr. J. J. Norwine, a successful practitioner of Bismarck, St. Francois County, Mo., was born in this county in 1857 and is the son of Conrad and Ellen (Christopher) Norwine, who are of Irish and German descent respectively. Both are now living. Dr. J. J. Norwine remained on the farm until seventeen years of age, when he went to Arcadia Methodist School and attended this institution two years. He then went to Fredericktown, and after reading medicine with Dr. Goff thirteen months, attended the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis and was part of the time in St. John Hospital. He graduated from Missouri Medical College, and in 1880 he returned to Fredericktown, where he built up a good practice and was one of the local surgeons of the Iron Mountain Railroad, which position he now holds. In 1881 he married Miss Carrie Goff, and to them were born four children, only two now living: Birdie E., and James W. In 1885, on account of the ill health of his wife, Dr. Norwine sold out, and he and wife took an extensive trip through Colorado, New and Old Mexico, and through the Territories, through the Western States, and also visited all the principal cities of the West. They did not succeed in finding a more healthy climate and the Doctor returned to his native county fully convinced that Southeast Missouri was good enough for him. Mrs. Norwine began her education at Oxford, Miss., but finished the same at Beethoven Conservatory of Music, at St. Louis, and is quite accomplished in that art. Her father, Dr. Goff, practiced medicine for thirty-five years in Southeast Missouri, and is still having a good practice. Dr. Norwine came to Bismarck, Mo., in 1887, and being a first class physician and surgeon and a very agreeable man in every respect soon built up a good practice and has made hosts of friends. He is a Democrat in politics. His Grandmother Norwine lived to be one hundred and three years old, and five years before her death had regained her eyesight so that she could see to read well without glasses. She died suddenly in 1870.

Then it was that William C. Pigg began his career as a St. Francois County farmer. There was a period, however, between the fall of 1863 and August, 1865, which he spent in the war, and in Illinois and the Hoosier State. He first enlisted in Company D, White's regiment, Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and served until his honorable discharge in 1864, and during the service was in the engagement at Prairie Grove and in several leading skirmishes. This short period of years was the only interruption of what has been a quiet, progressive life of a successful farmer. The family now reside on a fine farm of 128 acres, in Marion Township, on which they settled in 1867. Mr. Pigg was united in marriage in Indiana, on April 29, 1865, to Miss Sarah J. He had a good public school education, and has devoted himself to his chosen walk, intelligently and earnestly, and with the success that generally follows such a course. He has remained in St. Francois County with the exception of a year about 1870 spent in Texas, and now resides on his fine farm two and one-half miles east of Bonne Terre. The farm embraces 170 acres, which he purchased in 1885, and is now excellently improved. He also devotes considerable attention to breeding and raising a fine grade of short-horn cattle. Mr. Pigg has an extensive fraternal connection, being a member of the I. O. O. F., and A. O. U. W., and an official in the Masonic order, while his political preferences are Democratic. He went to Bollinger County and worked until October, meeting with only fair success. He found no trouble in getting their names on the top line, but the pay was not forthcoming. In the fall of 1875 he began working on the railroad, and continued at the same two years. The following two years he pumped water in a tank for the same, also purchased type and a small press and began learning the art of printing from a tramp printer. In 1879 he went to marble Hill and started the American Politician, at which he worked for two years and a half. In 1881 he sold out and attended Mayfield Smith Academy at Marble Hill for two years, with the exception of about four months, during that time, when he taught school. In 1883 he returned to Farmington, and in July of that year he established the Farmington News, and soon ran his subscription to 800. He has enlarged his press three times, and now has the best press in Southeast Missouri. The paper has a good circulation, is newsy, is ably edited and is independent in its political views. Mr. Pigg is industrious, economical and scrupulously honest. He commenced working for himself without a penny, and is now in comfortable circumstances, has a good home and is established in a good business. He is a member of the A. O. U. W., and he and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Thomas Porter, mining superintendent of the St. Joe Lead Company's Works, is a Virginian, born in Wythe County, in 1842. His parents, Samuel and Martha (Bratton) Porter, were natives of the same State, where the former was long engaged in the mining enterprises of the State. Young Thomas learned the business of his father at an early age. His military career began with his enlistment in 1862 in Company B, Fifty-first Virginia Volunteers, Confederate States Army. He was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant in 1864, but was afterward captured at Waynesboro and held as prisoner until the conflict closed. After a certain period at home he came to Missouri in 1871 and located at Bonne Terre, where he resumed the occupation of his youth and succeeded so well that he has been promoted to his present responsible position. He takes an independent view of political affairs, and is identified with the interests of two fraternal orders, the A. O. U. W. and I. O. O. F. In 1861 he was wedded to Miss Elizabeth Bowers, a native of the "Old Dominion." The following six children have been born to them: Martha, Maggie, Laura, Beedy, Birdie and Kaita. The family attend the Congregational Church.

Charles P. Poston, M. D., of Bonne Terre, was born in St. Francois County, Mo., September 29, 1854, the son of Henry W. and Cassandra D. (Ashburn) Poston, natives of Missouri and Kentucky respectively. Dr. Poston's paternal grandfather was an early pioneer of St. Francois County, having settled here at the early date of 1800. Charles P. has been well educated for his life work. In 1872 he entered Westminster College at Fulton, Mo., and remained until 1876. He then turned to teaching, and also began the study of medicine, so that in the fall of 1877 he was well prepared to enter the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis. He graduated from this school in the spring of 1880, and began to practice at Bonne Terre. Since that time he has steadily built up his practice here, with the exception of one winter of post graduate lectures at his medical alma mater. The Doctor is interested in public and fraternal affairs, being a Democrat in politics and a member of the A. O. U. W. He was married in 1884 to Miss H. E. Cunningham, a native of St. Francois County. But two of their four children are living, Harry P. and Marie L. Mrs. Poston is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Jesse R. Pratt, son of William A. and Mary C. (Bennett) Pratt, is a native of De Kalb County, Tenn., born January 5, 1841. William A. Pratt was born in Alabama, but went from there to Tennessee when a young man, and was married there to Miss Bennett, a native of Virginia. Mr. Pratt died there when Jesse R. was but nine years old, and in 1855 the family moved to Missouri, located in St. Francois County, and here the mother died in 1864. Jesse R. Pratt was fifteen years old when the family moved to St. Francois County, and there he was reared to manhood. In 1862 he entered the Confederate service in the Seventh Missouri Cavalry, and served mostly in the Trans-Mississippi Department. He was assigned to Marmaduke's division, Price's corps, serving first in Missouri, where he participated in engagements at Glasgow, Mo., Big Blue and Little Blue, also in Missouri. He was in the engagements at Chalk Bluffs, Little Rock, Little Missouri, Prairie Dehan, Pleasant Hill, La., Camden, Poison Spring, etc. He was captured with Marmaduke, twenty-five miles north of Fort Scott, Kas., October 25, 1864; taken to Gratiot Street prison, St. Louis, and from there to Alton, where, at the end of four months, he was exchanged. He then went to Richmond, and from there to Mobile, where he remained until after the surrender of that place, when he and about 1,000 of the Trans-Mississippi Department were transferred to their proper commands. They had to walk from Hazle Hurst to the river, and here they found the Union scouts patrolling the river for Jefferson Davis, consequently they had a terrible time getting across. Out of the 1,000 only fourteen got across the river, and Mr. Pratt was among that number, and the only man in Marmaduke's division to get across. He had to go alone seventy-five miles to reach his command, and surrendered at Shreveport, June 8, 1865. Later he went in a boat down Red River to Baton Rouge, then came up the Mississippi River to St. Mary's, and from there home. The same year he went north, worked in Montgomery and Christian Counties, Ill., and engaged in the brick making business in the latter county. He remained there three years and then went to Shelby County, Mo., but after four years came back to St. Francois County, where he bought land, and where he now resides. He is engaged in the manufacture of brick, and is building and has built most of the brick buildings in Farmington. He built the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal South Churches, Baptist College, Carleton Institute, furnished the brick for the public schoolhouse, and erected his present brick residence in 1882. Mr. Pratt has been twice married. In Christian County, Ill., October 3, 1867, he married Miss Nancy S. Dennis, who bore him seven children, two of whom, Jesse and R. E., are deceased. They were twins. Those living are William A., Charles R., Susan F. and Maud E. and Mary M. (twins). Mrs. Pratt died in St. Francois County, January 30, 1880. Mr. Pratt married his present wife, Kate M. Bowyer, February 6, 1882. She was born in Hawkins County, Tenn., and is the daughter of Alexander and Louisa (King) Bowyer. Her parents moved from Tennessee to Missouri in 1853, and the father died in St. Francois County, December 3, 1874, and the mother in January, 1880. By the second marriage Mr. Pratt became the father of three children: Jessie L., Jesse R. and Henry. Mr. Pratt is a member of the A. O. U. W. fraternity, and is Outside Watchman of the Farmington lodge, of which he was one of the charter members. Mrs. Pratt is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Jules Pratte, dealer in general merchandise, is one of Bonne Terre's citizens who are descendants of French ancestry. His paternal grandfather was a young Canadian when he came to the wilds of St. Francois County, and began his fight in that primitive wilderness to make himself a home. He was engaged as an Indian trader for a long time. Peter B. and Emily (Janis) Pratte, the parents of the subject of this sketch, were born in Missouri, both of French extraction, and both descendants of early pioneers of this region. They owned the well known Desloge Mines, and both passed away in St. Francois County—the county of their son's birth. Our subject was born on the first day of 1834, and grew to manhood in his native county. For some time his business life was in connection with his father's mines, but he afterward became interested in mercantile life. His present line of general merchandise he established in 1880, and has built up a prosperous trade. His political ideas are firm and distinct, and he supports the Democracy with a hearty fidelity.

Esau Presnell, general merchant, was born in Buncombe County, N. C., May 30, 1830, and is a son of Israel and Melinda (West) Presnell. The father was a native of Guilford County, N. C., was reared there and was also married in that County. The mother was also a native of that county, but after her marriage they moved to Buncombe County, where they remained but a short time, then going to Kentucky. They settled in Monroe County, where they remained four or five years, and then sold out and removed to Springfield, Mo. Mr. Presnell was a millwright by trade, and while he carried on farming, he also erected several buildings in the town of Buffalo, as well as two mills. In 1840 he and his family removed to Perry County, Mo., and located in the western part of the county, where Mr. Presnell engaged in his trade, helping to erect several mills. In 1859 he removed to Bollinger County, and here built several mills. He died in March, 1880. His widow survived him but a short time, her death occurring in the same year. He and wife were members of the Methodist Church, and he was Democratic in his political views. Esau Presnell was reared on the farm and educated in the common schools. At the age of nineteen he left home, camped on the banks of the Mississippi River, and engaged in chopping wood, which occupation he followed industriously for five years and made considerable money at that employment. During this time he purchased a farm in Perry County, and at the end of the five years in camp he moved on his farm and engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1854, May 24, he married Miss Mary Tucker, a native of Perry County, and the daughter of Peter and Mary (Stewart) Tucker, who were natives of Kentucky. To Mr. and Mrs. Presnell were born seven children, of whom four are now living: Minerva, wife of Joshua Seabaugh, Nancy, wife of Frederick Stammer; Emanuel, farmer, and William who resides with the parents. Those deceased are Julia, Felix and Albert. In 1859, Mr. Presnell went to Bollinger County, where he bought two farms. At the breaking out of the late war he had about $1,800 loaned out besides owning the two farms spoken of. The war left him with very little means. In 1864 he went to Illinois, bought a farm in Jackson County, but sold it in 1865 at a profit of $800, and then bought property on the banks of the Mississippi River. He then started a wood yard, but ill health prevented his continuing this, so in the fall of the year he sold out and went back to Bollinger County, where he engaged in selling goods. In 1867 he again sold out and bought a farm in Cape Girardeau County, but not liking farming, he bought a third interest in a boat and became its captain, also pilot. He did not continue long at this on account of spinal trouble, which troubled him for a long time. During his sickness his boat was ground up in the ice and lost without any insurance. He followed trading and speculating in live stock for some time, and partly retrieved his fallen fortune. In 1875 he left the farm in Cape Girardeau County, which had been his home, and engaged in selling goods. He continued at this business in Bollinger County until 1883, when he removed to Knob Lick, St. Francois County, engaged in merchandising, and has continued at the same ever since. He is a Democrat in politics, is a member of the I. O. O. F., and he and wife are members of the Congregational Christian Church.

Blue, a native of Tennessee. She was born January 16, 1827, and was but five years old when her parents moved to Missouri. After marriage the young couple moved to Mississippi, and there spent a few years. In 1850 they returned to Missouri and resumed a rural life. Isaac A. Raney, architect and builder, is one of Bonne Terre's well known citizens, whose ancestry is of notable connections. Gen. La Fayette is a grand-uncle of our subject, and the founder of the American family came over with the great Frenchman. John and Cecelia (Terral) Raney, the parents of Isaac A., were natives of Canada and England respectively, and it was in the former country, at Three Rivers, that he was born, January 1, 1833. Young Isaac began his life work at the early age of fifteen years, serving an apprenticeship of about four years in Chicago, Ill. He soon made his ability recognized in that city, and in 1851 was made foreman of the carpenter department of the Illinois Central Railway, a position he held for two years. He finally decided to locate in Missouri, and in 1858 came to Bonne Terre, where he erected the buildings of the Desloge Lead Company. He was engaged as foreman for that company for nine years. His attention is now given to contracting for the St. Joe Lead Company, for whom he makes an efficient officer. His preferences in affairs of State are Democratic, and he gives his support to two fraternal bodies—the A. O. U. W. and S. K. in the A. O. U. W. November 28, 1859, he married Miss Jennie McGee, who was born in Tennessee, in June, 1842. Of two sons and four daughters born to them, the following are now living: Della, Armen, Frostie Snow and Jennie. The family are all members of the Catholic Church excepting Mrs. Raney, who is a member of the Southern Methodist Church. On May 19, in the year of 1887, Fannie C. and Frostie Snow graduated at St. Louis Seminary.

$8 to $16 per month compensation. In 1881 he began trading in stock, and followed this business four years. In 1885 he began clerking in a store in Farmington, and in February of the following year he was appointed postmaster of that city by Postmaster-General William F. Vilas. December 29, 1885, he married Miss Mary A. Highley, daughter of Robert Highley, of Washington County. She was born in the last named county in 1858, and is the mother of one child, Walter. Mr. Rariden attends strictly to his postoffice business, and makes a first-class postmaster. He is a Democrat, politically, and his first presidential vote was for Cleveland in 1884. He is a K. He then went to Illinois, and from there to Mississippi County, Mo., where he married Mrs. Lou Pritchett, the widow of John Pritchett and daughter of Joshua and Catharine Moore. He then moved with his wife to St. Francois County, where he first engaged in farming, and where he has since remained. In February, 1887, he commenced running a hack line between De Lassus and the now thriving town of Doe Run. The hack line is quite remunerative, and as Doe Run improves will become a desirable business. To Mr. Rigsbee's marriage were born five children: John Gilbert, Effie Lean, James Walter, Birdie and Marvin. Mrs. Rigsbee was the mother of two children by her first husband. His land comes within half a mile of Doe Run Lead Mines, and he was the first man to discover lead at that mine. He has also discovered ore on his own land. Mr. Rosenstengel is a member of the Lutheran Church, and is, politically, a liberal Republican. During the Rebellion he was enrolled in Company B, of the State Militia, and at the time of the battle of Pilot Knob was on the force that burned the bridges.

His mother died when he was but seven years old, but his father continued to live there, and educated his son in the French and German tongues until in 1848. John L. was now eighteen years of age, and they embarked for the great republic across the water. They finally located in Wayne County, Ohio, where the father died in 1870, at the advanced age of seventy-two years. In 1850 young Rouggy came to St. Francois County, and became engaged in the Valle Lead Mines, where he was employed about two years. He grew to manhood there and learned the tailor's trade, and was married in that city to Miss Mary Resinger in the year 1816. Her parents, John Adam

Genevieve the report came that the boat with all the property they had was sunk in the Mississippi River. He then located in Ste. Genevieve. After remaining in Ste. After reaching manhood he began the study of medicine, which he continued for about eight years, when he commenced the practice of medicine in Bollinger County, Mo., where he remained eighteen months. He then went to St. Louis, but soon returned to Farmington, and there engaged in the confectionery business. Two years later he opened a tailor shop, and a year later added a department for the sale of ready made clothing. Two years later he again began the practice of medicine in Reynolds County, Mo. He practiced medicine in Reynolds County for sixteen years. He then moved to Knob Lick, St. Francois County, Mo., in December, 1874, and has been located there ever since. First he was married to Amanda Wagent on May 25, 1845. His wife bore him nine children, all of whom died in infancy. His wife died on the 23d day of December, 1856, in Farmington, Mo. At the age of twenty-five he chose for his companion in life Miss Ida J. Mayberry, and to their union was born one child, named Homer. Mr. Rudy is at present located in Doe Run, and is quite successful in his business. He affiliates with the Democratic party in politics, is a member of the I. O. O. F., and he and wife are members of the Baptist Church. He is the son of W. B. and Mary A. (Elholt) Rudy. The father was born in the State of Ohio, was of German descent and a blacksmith by trade. John Schaefer, son of George and Brigitte (Becker) Schaefer, was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, June 1, 1825. His father was a tailor by trade, and followed that occupation until his death, which occurred in 1852. John Schaefer attended school from his sixth to his fourteenth year. He then commenced learning the shoemaker's trade, and served an apprenticeship of two years. He then worked at other places according to the custom of the country until twenty-one years of age, when he went into the army and served in the garrison of Frieberg for eighteen months. He served in the war with Denmark, and after the conclusion of that war he helped put down the revolution in Baden, serving altogether two years in both wars. He remained in the army until twenty-eight years of age and then went home. He has two medals given him for honorable service during these wars. He decided to immigrate to America, and in the spring of 1853, he and his brother, Philip, took passage on a sail ship bound for New York, where they arrived after a voyage of seven weeks, in which they passed through the equinoctial storms. Remaining only one night in that city, they set out for the west, and, traveling by rail and water, reached Cincinnati, and from there took passage on the Ohio, and afterward the Mississippi River, and brought up finally at Wittenburg Landing. His brother, Philip, entered a piece of land in Cape Girardeau County, and John lived with him one year, helping him clear his place. He then went to Iron Mountain and obtained employment at furnace work. While working here he married Miss Agnes Dinger October 18, 1854. She was born in Germany, not far from Bingen, on the Rhine, March 31, 1835, and her father, Tobias Dinger, was a blacksmith by occupation. Her mother's name was Christina Schaefer. Mr. Dinger immigrated to America in 1840, landing at New Orleans, where he took the yellow fever and died. His son, John Dinger, was with him, and he went on to Evansville, and from there to the Valle Lead Mines of Missouri, and there became engineer. Mrs. Schaefer, her mother and the rest of the family came to America in 1853, after a stormy voyage in which they nearly had a collision. John Dinger met them at Evansville, and took them to his place in Missouri. The mother of Mrs. Schaefer is now a resident of Ironton, Mo., and was eighty-five years old September 1, 1888. She is living with her daughter and son; the latter, Franz Dinger, is probate judge and a prominent man of that county. John Dinger, Mrs. Schaefer's half brother, was killed in the coal mines in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Schaefer became the parents of ten children, three of whom are deceased: Elizabeth, Anna Christina and Jeannette Louisa Francisco. Young Stephen lost his mother soon after their arrival in their Missouri home, and the father survived only until his son reached his majority. This proved only a means for entering agriculture in a more independent manner, and in 1858 he purchased his present farm, an estate of 120 acres, in Perry Township. He devotes his place especially to grain and hog farming, and with deserved success. Mr. Smith's fraternal spirit manifests itself in a membership in the A. O. U. Lucien A. Thomure, a well known resident of Bonne Terre, Mo., is deserving of more than passing mention in the present volume as a representative of one of the oldest pioneer families in Ste. Genevieve County. His parents were Joseph and Celeste Thomure, both natives of this county, where the father died in 1879, at the age of eighty-six. The mother, the oldest person in Ste. Genevieve County, is still living, and it is eminently proper that a sketch of her eventful life should be made at this place. Born near the Fourche, on January 25, 1798, she was the daughter of Jacob Boyer, a native of France. During the time of her childhood this territory, as may be supposed, was but thinly settled, and the main portion of the population resided on the bluff beside the present settlement of New Bourbon, where the overflow of the Mississippi had driven them. About 1817 she saw the first boat steam up the river. During a part of her early life she had lived at Old Mines, near Fredericktown, where her father died, his being the first grave made at that place. February 1, 1815, she was married to Joseph Thomure, by Rev. Donatio Ollivier, and their happy married life extended over a period of sixty-four years, or until separated by death. Mrs. Thomure is remarkably well preserved in years, and indicates by her vitality the vigor and energy which must have characterized her younger years. She has borne twelve children, seven of whom are living. One of these, Lucien A. Thomure, the subject of this sketch, was born January 8, 1837, in Ste. Genevieve County, and there grew to manhood, passing his youthful days in the occupation of farming. He acquired a good common school education, and in 1868 became located at Bonne Terre, where he engaged in mining, following that calling for three years. Smelting then received his attention, and at this time he is superintendent of the mill department of dressing work. January 26, 1862, Mr. Thomure was united in marriage to Miss Azelia Janis, a native of Ste. Genevieve County, of which her parents were old and esteemed settlers. Six children have blessed their union, four of whom survive: Felix J., Louis H., Anna E. and Harry E. Mr. and Mrs. Thomure are members of the Catholic Church. In politics the former is Democratic. He is a member of the A. O. U. W.

Felix J. Thomure was born in Bonne Terre, Mo., March 1, 1864, the son of Lucien A. and Azelia (Janis) Thomure, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Thomure began his apprenticeship as a carpenter at the very early age of fourteen, and continued so employed for two years. In 1881 he entered the Christian Brothers' College in St. Louis, and graduated from the commercial department. For some time thereafter he was a clerk in Bonne Terre, and in 1885 was appointed to his present position as assistant station agent at the same place. Politically he is a Democrat and is a member of the Catholic Church.

James Thurlley, granite handler, is the son of James and Sarah (Livermore) Thurlley, and was born in Cambridge, England, the seat of the celebrated university of that name, June 2, 1832. James Thurlley, Jr., remained in his native city until seventeen years of age, when he went to London and took passage on the sailship, "Henry Hudson," and in September, 1849, he landed at New York City. He remained there about one month, when he went to Williamsburg and from there to Lockport, but about one month later he went to Niagara Falls. Here he became connected with the well known Clifton House as pastry cook, which occupation he had learned in his native country. He remained there nearly three years, then came west, and was on the river as pastry cook and steward for twenty years. During that time he became acquainted with travelers on the rivers, having run on the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri, and was there during the late war. He was an eye witness to the battle of Shiloh from the boat he was connected with at that time. "The Glasgow," the next to the last boat he was on, and of which he had been steward off and on for twelve years, was sunk in Red River, and he next became connected with the "Mary McDonald," which was burned just below Lexington, in 1878. He then left the river, and engaged in business in St. Louis, which point he had made his home during his trip on the river. About 1878 he engaged in the hotel business near the corner of Seventh and Market streets, and continued at this until 1883, when he engaged in the granite business, making Knob Lick his base of operations and getting out paving blocks for the city of St. Louis. Mr. Thurley has been connected with the granite interests of Knob Lick and vicinity ever since. He has been a life-long Democrat in his political views, is a man of extensive observation, and is favorably known by the citizens of the county.

He then went to St. Louis, and at this place was bookkeeper for A. G. Brauer, two years. He then removed to Liberty Township, St. Francois County, where he now resides. Mr. Tillman was married December 2, 1873, to Miss Ida M. Coffman, who was born in Ste. Genevieve County, and who is the daughter of Judge John Coffman. Her father was a native of Virginia, who came to Missouri in 1832 and located in Ste. Genevieve County, and engaged in farming. He was married in St. Francois County to Miss Jane Smith, who was born and reared in St. Francois County on the farm where Mr. Tillman resides. Mr. Coffman was a prominent man, and was several times elected judge of Ste. Genevieve County. His death occurred in October, 1887. His wife had died seven years previous to this. Mr. and Mrs. Tillman are the parents of five children—Robert Lane, Felicete J., Jesse Ralph, Genevieve Ida and J. Smith. Mr. Tillman is a member of the Catholic Church, and is an excellent citizen.

He commenced the practice of his profession at Fountain Green, Ill., but in the following year (1859) he removed to Reynolds County, Mo., where he continued to practice medicine until 1862, when he was appointed assistant surgeon of the Tenth Regiment of Missouri Cavalry, and was soon after promoted to the position of surgeon of the same regiment. Gregory Brewer is the son of John and Ann (Hagan) Brewer, early settlers of Southeast Missouri. The Brewer family settled in Perry County in 1818, having come thither from Kentucky. Ann Hagan was a daughter of Aquilla and Mary (Tucker) Hagan, who removed from near Lexington, Ky., to Perry County, Mo., in 1797, and settled upon a Spanish grant of 600 acres, on which they lived and died. Their children were Rebecca Ann, Mary, Elizabeth, Susannah, Theresa, Christina, James, John and Michael. This family were among those instrumental in organizing the Catholic Church in Perry County, and for many years services were held in their cabin. They were married by Rev. Father Theo. John Brewer and Ann Hagan were married in the first Catholic Church built in Perry County, and to their union were born eight children, three of whom, Elizabeth Layton, Timothy and Gregory, are living. After the death of his first wife John Brewer married Cecelia Layton, in the year 1837. She is still living, aged seventy-four years. To this union were born ten children, of whom Romanus, John O., Mary Ann and Vincent are living. Gregory Brewer was married to Sarah Riney in 1857, and began their domestic life on the old Riney homestead, which was entered by Sarah's father, Thomas Riney, who first secured 640 acres, to which he added the balance of 1,100 acres. His first wife was a Miss Duvall, and his second, Mrs. Sarah (French) Manning. Seven children were born to the second marriage, of whom Mrs. Brewer was the youngest. She was born on the farm which is her present home, and upon which her parents lived and died, the father when seventy-three years of age, and the mother when sixty-eight. Mr. and Mrs. Brewer are the parents of nine sons and four daughters. Those living are Francis T., Elliott, Clarence, Perry, Alice (Mrs. Kendrick Cissell), Antoinette (Mrs. Vincent Miles) and Emily. Judge Robert Milton Brewer was born in Spencer County, Ky., September 27, 1820, and is the son of George W. and Sarah (Fox) Brewer. It is supposed that George W. Brewer was born in Prince William County, Md., and Sarah Fox in Old Virginia. Both came to Kentucky with their parents when children, in which State they grew to maturity and were married. They reared four children: Robert Milton, Mary E., the deceased wife of Stephen Tucker; Martha A., the wife of Timothy Brewer, and Sarah Candace, the deceased wife of Raphael Tucker. George W. Brewer's wife died in Kentucky in 1833, and in 1841 he removed his family to Perry County, Mo., where he died in November, 1842. George W. Brewer was one of a family of eleven children born to Charles Brewer and wife, who with their nine other children settled in Perry County in the vicinity of the present town of Perryville in 1818. George W. being the only child married he remained in Kentucky until the date before mentioned. The other children married in Missouri, and each one reared a family. The name of Brewer has been associated with every enterprise in Perry County since its early history. The subject of this sketch first married Mary Brewer, a daughter of John Brewer, whose original homestead embraced the site of Brewerville, and his house, in which his son, Romanus L., now resides, stood near where the mill now stands. John Brewer entered a section of land, adjoining which he secured fifty acres of a Spanish grant. Judge Brewer now resides on the latter. His wife died on April 26, 1866, having borne six children, one son of whom is living, John T., who married Angie Willemine. The following October Judge Brewer married Mary E. Higgs, a native of Perry County, Mo. Her mother was reared in Kentucky, but was married to Mr. Higgs in Missouri, by whom she became the mother of four children. The family returned to Kentucky, where Mr. Higgs died, after which his widow married Leo Tucker, both now dead. By his second marriage Judge Brewer became the father of ten children. Those living are James J., Mary O. (the wife of Reuben R. Fenwick), Mary G., Milton E., Annie L. and Sarah E. In 1846 Judge Brewer was elected justice of the peace, and served until 1854, when he was elected judge of the county court, and, being re-elected, served two terms. In 1862 he was elected to represent Perry County in the Legislature, which position he filled honorably. At the beginning of the Civil War he was one of the first to enlist, and was chosen captain of Company B, Fourth Missouri Regiment, with which he served until the expiration of his term of enlistment. In 1862 he raised the Sixty-fourth Regiment of Enrolled Militia, and was commissioned colonel, serving until the regiment was disbanded. He was then appointed to fill a vacancy as representative of his county in the Legislature. In 1879 he was again elected to the Legislature by the Democratic party, and at the expiration of his term of office was appointed by Gov. Thomas T. Crittenden to fill a vacancy on the judicial bench of Perry County, after which he was elected to the same position and is still in office. His official life has been blameless and pure, and he is highly esteemed and honored by all who know him.

Layton, a sister of Maj. Layton, a well known gentleman of Southeast Missouri. When the war broke out Mr. Brewer enlisted in Company B, Fourth Missouri Militia, in which he served as third sergeant until the regiment was mustered out of service. He then enlisted in the Sixty-Fourth Regiment, State Militia, and was at first appointed orderly sergeant, but a few days later was promoted to first lieutenant, and served until the close of the war. He has been a resident of Salline Township, Perry Co., Mo., since November 12, 1852, and has accumulated considerable property. He now owns 390 acres of land. To him and wife have been born ten children, eight of whom are living: Narius P., who married Louise Holster; Joseph T., who married Mary M. Moore; Mary H., Mary L., Joseph E., Henry F., James M. and Joseph A. Those dead are James M. and George T., both of whom died in childhood. Mrs. Brewer died in October, 1886. She was a devout member of the Catholic Church, as are also her husband and children. Mr. Brewer takes but little interest in local politics, and has never been a candidate for office. He is a member of one of the best known families in Southeast Missouri, and is highly esteemed and honored.

After the war he was engaged in agricultural pursuits exclusively until 1880, when he was elected judge of the county court from the Western District of Perry County, and, having been re-elected every two years, still holds the position. The judicial board of the county have gained a well deserved reputation, and none of them stand higher in the estimation of the public than Judge Brown. In 1858 he was made a Master Mason in Perryville, and is now a member of Saline Lodge No. 236, at St. Mary's.

His father married again, and with his family removed to Washington County, Ill., where, after the death of his second wife, he married Mrs. Mahala Gibson. Later he removed to Massac County, Ill., where his death occurred. Soon after he enlisted in Company A, Second Illinois Infantry, E. C. Coffee, captain, and William H. Bissell, colonel, and served with the regiment until it was mustered out. When the call to arms was made Mr. Christian was again among the first to enlist, and joined Company A, Eighteenth Iowa Infantry, of which he was elected second lieutenant.

In 1863, after having participated in several engagements, he was discharged for disability, but after a year's recuperation, like the true patriot that he is, he enlisted in Company E, Forty-sixth Iowa Infantry, and was commissioned first lieutenant. At the expiration of his term of service he returned home, and, although practically incapacitated by disease contracted during his army life, he has since worked some at his trade. In June, 1882, he came to the neighborhood of where Lithium now is, and by chance discovered the medicinal qualities of this celebrated spring. When the town was laid out he was agent for the sale of lots and erected the first residence, completing it in December, 1882. Mrs. Christian died on September 19, 1879, and he subsequently married Clara C. Gillespie, a daughter of Judge James Gillespie and sister of Col. David Gillespie. Lewis married Sarah Mattingly; Clement, a Miss Layton, and Joseph, Mary Miles. Polly, a daughter, became the wife of Sinnet Duvall. (who became the wife of Raymond Tucker), Vincent (who wedded Caroline French), Pius (who married Christina Miles) and Lewis (who chose for his wife Louisa Mattingly). Joseph Cissell married for his second wife Mrs. Polly (Manning) Warren, by whom he was the father of five children, none of whom survive except Anna, the wife of Simeon Tucker. Lewis Cissell was married in 1846, and for several years resided near Silver Lake. He purchased his present farm of 280 acres in 1859. At that time only fifty acres were improved, but Mr. Cissell by hard labor and good management has made it one of the finest farms in the county. He has a family of nine children, of whom seven are married. They are John V. (who first married Melissa Brewer, and after her death, Theresa Brewer), Loretta (the widow of Wilford Brewer), Leo F. Between forty and forty-five families were enrolled as members of the new congregation, and donations for the church began to come in. During the following spring a neat frame building 24x40 feet was erected, and on May 10 it was dedicated by the Rev. Chancellor of St. Louis. His wife's maiden name was Maria Jane Knott. She is the daughter of Henry Knott, and was born in Perry County, on December 9, 1841. Mr. and Mrs. Klump are the parents of three sons: Joseph H., born in 1861; James, born in 1864, and John A., born in 1868. The family are communicants of the Catholic Church.

August Klump, an enterprising and prosperous farmer of Perry County, Mo., residing one and one-half miles northeast of Perryville, was born where he now resides, in June, 1838. His parents, Anton and Tresa Klump, were born in the Grand Duchy of Baden in 1802 and 1805, respectively. They were married in 1831, and immediately set sail for America. They first located in Pennsylvania, where their first child, Anton, was born. In 1833 they removed to Perry County, Mo., and settled on the farm now owned by the subject of this sketch. When they reached this county they had but $28, but they commenced work at once with willing hands, and soon had a good home. Mr. Klump finally became the owner of 728 acres of good land, of which he gave liberally to his children. He died on January 16, 1875, and his wife in 1856. They are the parents of six boys who grew to manhood and still survive. Their names are Anton, Joseph, Andrew, August, Ferdinand and William. August worked for his father until he was twenty-six years of age, when he married Frances Hoffman, a native of the county, born on November 29, 1845, and a daughter of John Hoffman. Seven children have been born to their union, Tresa, John, Leo, Mary, Emil, Frank and Annie. After his marriage Mr. Klump located on a farm of 100 acres, four miles northeast of Perryville, which was given him by his father. In 1877 he purchased the old homestead of 170 acres, on which he still resides. He has met with deserved success in business, and has a nice home and 467 acres of fine land. In religion he and family are adherents of the Catholic Church, and in politics he is a Republican.

John Kuennell, an enterprising and prosperous merchant of Altenburg, Mo., was born in the Kingdom of Bavaria, in 1847. He is the son of Andrew and Eva Kuennell, both of whom were natives of Germany. Andrew Kuennell was a grain merchant and saloon keeper. He died suddenly at the age of fifty-six years. To him and wife were born ten children, six of whom are alive. John Kuennell came to America in 1872. By trade he is a cabinet maker, but after coming to America he worked for some time as a millwright in Missouri, Illinois and Colorado. In 1876 he engaged in the real estate business, but not meeting with success he engaged in the vinegar business, at which he lost all he had. Not willing to give up to disappointment he began peddling with a capital of $35, a Christmas present from his mother. He continued this mode of merchandising until 1881, when he commenced business in Altenburg, with a stock of goods worth $1,500. In the spring of 1883 he purchased his present residence, and the next fall built his large store in which he does an extensive general mercantile business. In 1873 he was united in marriage with Carrie Wieland, of St. Louis. She was born in the Kingdom of Wurtemberg, Germany. Her father is now engaged in farming in Clark County, Ill. This union has been blessed by the birth of one child, Katie.

Charles F. Lawrence, a resident of Lithium and founder of that village, is a native of Germany, born in 1836. When eight years old he came with his parents, Henry and Henrietta Lawrence, to America. After living for a time in New Orleans the family came to Missouri, and lived at Jackson until after the death of the father. They then removed to Fredericktown, where, in 1849, the mother died leaving five children, none of whom were grown. Of these five children only three are now alive. They are Henry, a merchant at Doran, Mo.; the subject of this sketch, and Mary, the wife of Judge Adolph Carron of Ste. Genevieve County. After the death of his mother Charles obtained a position in a store as clerk in Ste. Genevieve, and with the proceeds of his salary began business for himself in 1860 seven miles from that city. During the war he removed his stock of goods to Ste. Genevieve, and in 1866, in partnership with his brother, Henry, he engaged in the mercantile and milling business at what is now Lawrenceton. At the end of eight years Charles removed to St. Mary's, and conducted a store in that town until 1880, when he purchased a tract of land upon which is situated the village of Lithium. There he erected a fine residence on an eminence overlooking the village and the river. The famous Lithium Spring, recently discovered on his land, was donated by him to the town, to which he has made other liberal donations. It was also through his influence that a postoffice was established at this place in 1885. He is the owner of a saw and gristmill near the village, which he contemplates converting into a merchant mill. A stock company will be organized, and the latest improved machinery put into it. Mr. Lawrence was married in 1860 to Philomene Carron, and to them have been born nine children, Joseph C., Francis W., Andrew T., who married Rosa Blanford, Mary E., Amos, Maximus, Jules, Florence and Cleveland.

Maj. Felix Layton was born in Perry County, Mo., on November 20, 1831. He is a son of John B. and Elizabeth (Hagan) Layton. [For a history of the Hagan family see sketch of Gregory Brewer.] Five brothers, John, Joseph, Zachariah, Barnard and Ignatius Layton, removed from Maryland, their native State, to Marion County, Ky., and from thence, with the exception of Joseph, who died in Kentucky, to Perry County, Mo., in 1808, and settled in Central, Saline and St. Mary's Townships. Their father was born in England. These brothers were all married in Kentucky, and reared in that State and Missouri large families, there being now fully 200 descendants from them in Perry County. John B., son of Joseph Layton and the father of the subject of this sketch, reared a family of fifteen children, and three of his sons reared families as large: Augustine, fifteen, Simeon, also fifteen, and Felix, sixteen. John B. Layton was thrice married, and died in Perry County in 1866, aged seventy-one years. His uncle, John, and the grandfather of Mrs. Felix Layton, was one of the early judges of Perry County, and also represented the county in the Legislature. Mrs. Layton's brother, Thomas, was for several years sheriff of Perry County, and is now a druggist in St. Louis. Felix Layton's marriage with Melissa A. Layton was celebrated on February 21, 1854. She was a daughter of Augustine Layton, a son of Hon. John Layton. Her mother's maiden name was Lucinda Riney, whose parents came from Maryland to Missouri in 1808. During the war of the Rebellion, Maj. Felix Layton did noble service for his country. He enlisted in Company C, Fourth Missouri Regiment, and was commissioned second lieutenant. Re-enlisting in the spring of 1862, he was commissioned captain of Company B, Sixty-fourth Regiment of Missouri State Militia, but he soon resigned to accept a position on the staff of Gen. James R. McCormack with the rank of major. In May, 1863, Gen. McCormack detached Maj. Layton from his staff, and placed him in command of 400 men on duty in Southeast Missouri. Seven months later he tendered his resignation as aid-de-camp, and assisted in recruiting a company of which he was elected first lieutenant. The company was attached to the Forty-seventh Missouri volunteers as Company B, and was mustered in on August 29, 1864, being mustered out on March 29, 1865. Maj. Layton returned to his farm, and lived a retired life until he was elected to represent his party in the State Legislature in 1880, which position he filled creditably. His children who are living are Ann A. (Mrs. James Manning), John B. (who married Annetta Fenwick), Mary L. (Mrs. Isidore Tucker), Melissa M. (Mrs. Ferdinand Tucker), Paschal E., Mary E., Mary Eveline and Mary A. These dead are Joseph T., Joseph P., Lewis D., Mary J., Felix and two that died unnamed.

Thomas H. Layton was born in Perry County on May 28, 1844, and is a son of John B. and Matilda (Simpson) Layton, early settlers of the county. [For a history of the Layton family see sketch of Maj. Felix Layton.] The subject of this sketch was reared and educated in his native county. He was first a pupil under the instruction of Col. R. M. Brewer, and afterward finished his education at St. Mary's Seminary. After finishing his education he taught school in the county for several years, and in the meantime was united in marriage with Emeline M. Tucker, a daughter of Stephen L. Tucker, who died in the army. When but a child she lost her mother. Their marriage was celebrated on July 11, 1869, and six children grace their home, viz.: Julian (now attending school at St. Mary's Seminary), Martha A. (a student of St. Mary's Convent, St. Louis), Elizabeth, William D., Joseph V. and Caroline. While a student Mr. Layton mastered the science of surveying and engineering, at which, by much practice, he has become an expert. In 1876 he was elected county surveyor, and his superior skill in his profession has brought about his re-nomination and re-election from that time until the present. He is now serving his third term, having received a majority greater than at any other time during his candidacy, and one greater than received by any of his predecessors. On February 22, 1877, he was commissioned notary public, and has been successively re-appointed. During the war he served one year in the Sixty-Fourth Missouri State Militia and the Eighth Enrolled Missouri Militia, the most of which time he was hospital steward under Dr. Fleming, of Fredericktown. He was but sixteen years of age at the time of his enlistment. Since filling the office of county surveyor Mr. Layton has surveyed the village of Lithium and its additions and Brewerville, also has resurveyed Claryville and a part of Altenburg.

William Litsch (deceased) was born in the Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, in 1828, and was a son of Joseph Litsch, who was a baker by trade. William was educated in his native country, and at the age of fifteen years entered a large store as an apprentice, and remained three years, at the end of which time he learned bookkeeping. When twenty-one years of age he was drafted into the army, but, being opposed to the Emperor and his party, escaped to America. Upon coming to the United States, he located in St. Louis, and was employed in a butcher shop. In 1849 he came to Perry County, Mo., and soon hired as a clerk in a general store in the country. In 1853 he married Miss Francisca Armbruster, also a native of the Grand Duchy of Baden, born in 1827. With three of her sisters she came to the United States in 1848. Seven children were born to this union, four of whom are living, viz.: Julia (Mrs. Jacob Killian), Tresa (Mrs. Kendrick Hayden), Charles, and Emma (Mrs. Thomas L. Phillips). Immediately after his marriage Mr. Litsch established a general store four miles east of Perryville, but removed to Perryville in 1865, where he continued in business the remainder of his life; his death occurred on December 16, 1876. He possessed fine business capacity, and was very successful. For years he was one of the leading merchants of Perry County, and was universally respected. He was always charitable to all commendable enterprises, ever working for the advancement and prosperity of his county, and his death was a severe loss to his family and to the community. He was appointed treasurer of Perry County in April, 1865, and, being elected to the same office in 1866, he was re-elected every two years thereafter as long as he lived. Since his death his widow has resided in the home he left her. She is a zealous member of the Roman Catholic Church, and is a very estimable lady. Charles Litsch will begin merchandising at the old stand of William Furth in Perryville, and will put in a $9,000 stock of goods. He was educated in the public schools of Perryville, with eighteen months at St. Vincent's College at Cape Girardeau. In 1878 he went to St. Louis, and worked for about eighteen months as salesman in a wholesale fancy and notion house, after which he returned to Perryville and hired to William Furth, by whom he has since been employed. For the past eighteen months he has been Mr. Furth's bookkeeper. He has had experience in all branches of merchandising, which amply fits him to carry on an establishment on his own responsibility.

Gabriel Lottes, a retail liquor dealer of Altenburg, Mo., was born in Germany, in the Kingdom of Bavaria, in 1841. He is the son of John and Kuni-gurda Lottes, both of whom were natives of Germany. John Lottes was born in 1808 and was a shoemaker by trade. He died in 1853. He and wife were the parents of seven children, four of whom are living. Gabriel Lottes landed in America on April 24, 1868. He located at Appleton, Cape Girardeau Co., Mo., and remained four years engaged in brewing, when he came to Altenburg and engaged in his present business. He has accumulated considerable wealth and owns some nice property in town. In 1872 he was united in marriage with Ann Doenhoefer, who died leaving one child, John E. In 1878 Mr. Lottes married Mury Ludwig, by whom he has four children: Louisa, Josie, Leo and Edward. In politics Mr. Lottes endorses and supports the principles of the Republican party.

His wife was born in 1807, and by her marriage with him became the mother of twelve children, of whom nine are living. She is still alive, and resides in St. Louis. William A. was born in the Kingdom of Hanover in 1839, and received his education in his native country. He, however, was but fourteen years of age when he landed in America. The oldest children of the family came to this country first, and the others followed when they reached the age of fourteen years. He began business life as a clerk in a store, and has always followed mercantile pursuits. His first business for himself was at New Wells, Cape Girardeau Co., Mo., where he established a general store in 1860. Four years later he sold out and removed to Wittenberg and resumed the mercantile business, which he has very successfully continued. Besides his store he is proprietor of a livery stable in Wittenberg, and is one of the most thrifty business men of the town, as well as one of the best citizens of the county. In 1860 he married Theresia Lehner, a native of Austria, who was born in 1843. They are the parents of twelve children, of whom nine are living: Gustave, Josephina, Clara, Emma, Richard, Albert, Dora, Otto and Rudolph.

He labored under many disadvantages, being a poor boy and unacquainted with the language and customs of this country, but he possessed an unusual amount of energy and determination. Early in life he manifested a taste for merchandising, and had sold goods in the fatherland when twelve years of age. Immediately after landing at Wittenberg he went to St. Louis, where for three years he was employed as clerk in a mercantile house. At the expiration of that time he came to Frohna, Mo., and commenced business for himself in a log cabin with a capital of $35. About one year later he built a frame store building, to which he made several additions and used for his business until 1882. It still stands as a monument of enterprise for its day. Mr. Lueders' business in shipping grain has been immense in the past, his annual shipments amounting to $30,000. He built his present commodious business house in 1882, which is conceded to be one of the best in Southeast Missouri. On the 1st of January, 1888, Ferdinand E. Goehring and Charles Lueders became partners in the business. In March of this year the firm opened a branch store at what is known as "Seventy-six Landing," Mo., and he is preparing to do all of his shipping from that point. In 1855 Mr. Lueders was united in marriage with Mary Roth, who was born in Byrne, Germany, in 1835. To them have been born twelve children — nine sons and three daughters. Mrs. Miles was born in Perry County in 1860, and has two children, Mary Ida and an infant, by a former marriage. Francis Miles, politically, is a Republican.

Thomas F. Moore, a farmer of Perry County, was born in the county in 1859, and is the son of Samuel L. and Ann (Hagan) Moore. Samuel Moore was a farmer and merchant who died in 1862. He was twice married, his second wife being Ann Hagan, who was born in Perry County, Mo., in 1818, and died on January 4, 1884. She was married four times, and was the mother of five children by her first husband, Everestus Riney, and one by Samuel L. Moore, her second husband. This child was Thomas F. He was reared on the farm, and remained with his mother until attaining his majority. On February 11, 1884, he married Mrs. Mary Gertrude Neitcher, a daughter of Stephen Miles. She is a native of Perry County, and was born in 1856. They have two children: Elizabeth Leona and Charles Boromeo. Mrs. Moore also has two children by her first marriage: Francis Elias and Henry Munroe. Mr. Moore is the owner of eighty-five acres of land, and is a member of the Farmers' Alliance. Politically he is a Democrat, and in religion professes the Catholic faith.

William Victor Miles, a farmer of Central Township, Perry Co., Mo., residing three miles northwest of Perryville, was born in 1851, one-fourth of a mile from where he now resides. He is a son of Leo and Martina (Moranville) Miles, natives of Perry County, Mo., born in 1811 and about 1819, respectively. Leo Miles, who was born on the farm where the subject of this sketch now resides, was a son of Henry Miles, a native of Kentucky, who came to Perry County at the beginning of the present century, and located on the farm now owned by Thomas Seemes. Leo was a stone-mason, at which trade he worked in early life, but after his marriage settled on a farm, and afterward cultivated the soil. He died in 1876. His wife, who was the daughter of John B. Moranville, died in 1881. They were the parents of eleven children, four of whom are dead. Those living are Mary C., John Frederick, William Victor, Leo Vincent, Mary Susan (wife of Dr. C. Moore) and Mary Elizabeth (wife of Richard Moore). William Victor grew up on a farm, and in 1878 married Mary Victoria Moore, a native of the county, born in 1858, and a daughter of Thomas J. Moore. Immediately after his marriage Mr. Miles located on his present farm. His first wife died in 1880, leaving one child—Leo Thomas. In 1882 he married again, choosing for his second wife Mary Philomena Reed, a native of the county, born in 1858, and a daughter of William Reed. To this union have been born four children: Leonard Julian, Joseph William, Clarence Victor and Clara May. Mr. Miles and wife are members of the Catholic Church. He is a Democrat in politics.

Bernard Modde, an old resident of Bois Brule Bottom, was born in Bouchaute, Belgium, on September 16, 1827. He remained in his native country until 1857, when with his family he came to America. He located in St. Louis, where he remained for seven years. He then came to Perry County and rented a farm at Allen's Landing, and for a number of years lived upon leased land in that and this neighborhood. He is now the owner of a good farm. In 1850 Mr. Modde married Amelia Verbeke, who died in 1861 with the cholera, leaving five children, three of whom died the same week with that disease. That was a sad blow to the devoted husband and father, who with his two motherless sons was forced to bear the grief. Of the two sons William, the younger, died unmarried in 1882; Edward, the elder, married Catherine Bouwens, and is a respected resident of Bois Brule Township. Mr. Modde chose for his second wife Julia Nuyt, a native of Belgium, to whom he was married on December 20, 1868. Five children have been born to them, of whom four are living. They are Joseph, Mary, John and Rosalie. These children with others of the neighborhood receive regular instruction from Father De Ceunynck.

Francis X. Moll, a farmer and large land owner of Cinque Homme Township, Perry Co., Mo., is a son of Egbert Moll, who was born in the Grand Duchy of Baden in 1800. After receiving his education Egbert Moll entered the German army when twenty-one years of age, and passed through many battles. He drew a pension from the German Government at the time of his death. He did not, however, serve the required time, but bought himself out at the expiration of two years. He married Agnes Lirby, also a native of Baden, and had eight children when he sailed for America, in 1832. The children were Joseph, Catherine (who married Jacob Grimes, and died in Illinois), Frances (now the wife of Henry Buckhite), Ignatius, Egdy (the owner of a lead mine in Missouri), Christian, Francis X. and Martin. The family landed in New York, from whence they went to Buffalo, N. Y., coming to Missouri in 1836. Mr. Moll entered eighty acres of land in Perry County, and established a home for himself and family, where he passed the remainder of his life. Francis X. received his education in Perry County, and learned the cooper's trade, at which he worked eight or ten years. He then engaged in farming in Perry County, but soon sold his land and removed to Illinois. Returning to Perry County he located on his present farm on Apple Creek. He has a well improved farm, on which are indications of lead deposits of good quality, which when fully developed will make him a small fortune. In 1848 he married Frances Winger, a native of the county, and to them have been born fourteen children, eleven of whom are living. The family belong to the Catholic Church. In politics Mr. Moll is a Democrat.

Ignatius Moore (deceased) was born in Central Township, Perry Co., Mo., within sight of the home of his widow, Mrs. Helen Moore, and children. He was a son of James and Lucy (Wellmore) Moore, early settlers of Perry County, who died when Ignatius was a mere lad. They were the parents of seven children, none of whom are living. About 1852 Ignatius Moore was married to Helen Tucker, and began housekeeping in a little log cabin, the ruins of which still stand near the massive stone residence which they erected after they became prosperous, and in which Mr. Moore died in September, 1873. His widow and eight children—four sons and four daughters—still survive. Mrs. Moore is a daughter of John and Ellen (Miles) Tucker, one of the early and prominent families of Perry County. She was born in Central Township, Perry County, on February 7, 1824. Her children are Josiah C., Richard R., Romanus I., John A., Emily (Mrs. Ferd Miles), Frances E., Lucy A. (Mrs. Joseph Brenco) and Anastasia. Josiah C., Richard R., Frances E. and Anastasia are at the old homestead with their mother. Romanus I. married Ellen Dean, and John A. is studying for the priesthood at St. Mary's Seminary. The family have always been highly respected, and are counted among the most worthy of Perry County's citizens. All are devout Catholics, and both the Tucker and Moore families aided in establishing the church in this county.

Thomas J. Moore, the oldest son of James J. and Cecelia (Manning) Moore, was born in Perry County on August 3, 1833, and from his early manhood has been a prominent personage of the county. He was educated in the schools of the county, and in early boyhood acquired a taste for farming. On October 25, 1853, he was united in marriage with Theresa Hagan, a daughter of James and Lucretia (Riney) Hagan. [Both the Moore and Hagan families were early and prominent settlers in the county, and a history of them is given in another part of this work.] After his marriage Mr. Moore located on his present fine farm near Perryville, which is almost within sight of his birthplace. During the Civil War he was appointed justice of the peace by the court to fill an unexpired term, after which he was elected to the same position. He has served his district as director of the public schools and township clerk for fifteen consecutive years. During the early years of this service there were but two school districts in the township, and Joab Burgee, so well known in the county, was the other director. Mr. Moore's usefulness in the organization and support of schools and churches and the general prosperity of the county is inestimable. To him and wife have been born fourteen children. They are Chrysanthus (who married Susan Miles, and is now a physician of St. Mary's), Richard (who married Mary Miles, a sister of Susan), Vincent (deceased), James E. (who wedded Norah Sanders), Mary (deceased wife of Victor Miles, a brother of both Susan and Mary), Lucretia (wife of George Pitman), Rosa (wife of Thomas Tucker), Thomas W. (deceased), Cecelia M., Annie, Mary E., Thomas V., William V. and Francis Albert.

Joseph V. Moore, a general merchant of Longtown, Mo., is a son of Leo and Ann M. (Cissell) Moore. Leo Moore was born in Perry County, Mo., near Perryville, in 1811, and was a son of Isidore Moore, who was born in Kentucky in November, 1771. The latter was twice married and was the father of sixteen children, three by his first and thirteen by his second marriage. He began life very poor. In the hopes of bettering his circumstances in the fall of 1800 he removed his family to Missouri, and obtained land from the Spanish Government, in the Barrens of Perry County. His was the ninth family to settle there, and the first Roman Catholic family. He accumulated considerable property and became a very prominent citizen. He served as judge of the county court, and was a member of the State Legislature for sixteen years consecutively, serving two or three terms in the Lower House, then in the Senate the remainder of that period. Judge Moore was a friend to the Shawnee and Delaware Indians, and they often appealed to him to settle disputes among them. They also had a camping ground and burial ground on his land. Leo Moore was educated in Bardstown, Ky., after which he devoted his entire life to farming pursuits. In 1833 he married Ann M. Cissell, of Perry County, Mo. She was the daughter of Louis and Maria (Mattingly) Cissell. Leo Moore and wife became the parents of ten children, viz.: Robert W. (who died at the age of fourteen years), Lewis F., Joseph V., Mary A., Isabella, Rosalie, William B. (deceased), Theodore L., Theresa (who died at school at Cedar Grove, Ky.) and Lawrence S. Mary A. and Rosalie are members of the order of Sisters of Loretto, of the Sacred Heart, the mission of the order being to teach. Joseph V. was born in Perry County, Mo., in 1840, and received his education at St. Mary's Seminary. He was married in 1861 to Susan M. Hayden, a native of the county, and a daughter of James and Christina (Seabaugh) Hayden. To Mr. and Mrs. Moore have been born seven children: James V., Sebastian L., Jettie, Kenrick J. (who died at the age of seventeen years), Flavian J., Lewis B. and Hattie. Mr. Moore was engaged in teaching school and farming until 1877, when he engaged in merchandising. He purchased a half interest in the store of E. Urban, with whom he remained four years, when they dissolved partnership and Mr. Moore continued alone. He still has a five-eighths interest in a farm of 280 acres with 130 acres under a good state of cultivation. Politically he is a Democrat, and was appointed postmaster of Longtown on January 1, 1886. In religion he is a Roman Catholic. The subject of this sketch was a Union man during the late Civil War. He was led from home a captive on the 10th of October, 1861, by a band of rebels under command of Maj. Cozens, of Ste. Genevieve County, Mo., was ordered out to be shot, but was rescued by a friend of justice.
